Hungarian Inventors Says He Has Machine Which Will Work in Daylight

BERLIN, July 6. (AP)—Denes Von Mihaly, Hungarian inventor, now living in Berlin, purports to have solved the problem of a movable television apparatus which can be taken into the daylight and make scenes visible to millions.

In connection with his transmitting apparatus, Von Mihaly uses a lense functioning much like that of the photographic camera. According to the inventor it no longer is necessary to use a dark chamber.

Bad Weather Would Make Hop Across Ungava Foolhardy

No Message Received from Europe-Bound Craft Since Friday

[Copyright, 1929, by Chicago Tribune.]

CHICAGO, July 6. (Exclusive)—Heavy clouds, rain, high winds and low visibility were combined again today over the vast uninhabited reaches of Northeastern Canada and the crew of the 'Untin' Bowler, impatient to continue their flight to Berlin by way of Greenland and Iceland, were forced to remain inactive at Great Whale, a Hudson's Bay company trading post on the Great Whale River, which they reached on Friday.

Pilots Robert H. Gast and Parker D. Cramer and Robert Wood, the reporter of the trip, are under strict orders to make the elements work with rather than against them from the time they left Chicago, and these were confirmed in special messages when it became known at the Tribune office that flying

ANGELENOS SEE GOAL

Pilots Confident of Air Record

Culver City Port Officials Plan to Avert Riot Scene

Mendell and Reinhart Pass Two-thirds Mark at 3:30 a.m. Today

So confident are Loren Mendell and Pete Reinhart, Culver City Airport endurance flyers, of surpassing the mark set by the Cleveland flyers, the management of the airport already is making plans to avert any possibility of a repetition of the Cleveland mob scene when the Angeleno, the plane piloted by Mendell and Reinhart, finally comes to earth again. A. E. McManus of the airport management made this announcement early today after the flyers had been aloft for 113 hours.

This was at 12:30 a.m. and by 3:30 a.m. today Mendell and Reinhart will have been up 116 hours, or two-thirds of the time required officially to break the new record established at Cleveland. McManus said his confidence is based on a fifteen-page letter written by Mendell and dropped early last evening.

LOLLS IN PAJAMAS

In the letter Mendell said the longer he and his companion keep flying the easier their task seems to become. Before this test Mendell had never flown steadily more than six hours in a stretch and on the first couple of days of the test the grind of steady flying, he said, was wearisome.

Now that he and Reinhart have become accustomed to it, he said, it doesn't seem particularly wearing. The ease with which they have become accustomed to their routine, he added, is proved by the fact that he was lolling comfortably in his pajamas as he wrote the letter. The only drawback to their present mode of existence, he said, is the lack of exercise, but he is sure, he added, that this alone will not prevent them from sticking to their task until the new record has been broken.

FUEL CONSUMPTION

The fuel consumption of the Angeleno, it was announced at the Culver City port yesterday, is averaging approximately thirteen gallons per hour, which necessitated refueling contacts thrice daily.

During the early morning and midday contacts only a moderate supply of fuel is taken aboard.

French Cabinet Defiant

Special Session Disregards Sentiment of Deputies on Reservations

Poincare Threatens to Have Pay Plans Ratified by President's Decree

PARIS, July 6. (AP)—Defying the sentiment in the Chamber of Deputies which led the Finance and Foreign Affairs committees of that body to recommend inclusion of reservations in the text of the bill ratifying the Mellon-Berenger accord on France's debts to the United States, the Cabinet today decided to insist upon ratification without qualification both of that accord and the Caillaux-Churchill arrangement with Great Britain.

A special session of the Cabinet came to this decision and it was announced that the ministers are unanimous in upholding the "no reservation" attitude of Premier Poincare. The Cabinet agreed with the head of the government that it will accept reservations voted in resolutions apart from the bill. It will, however, insist that there be no qualifications attached to the ratifications when the latter are sent to Washington and London.

It was understood that the Premier even threatened to take the debt accords out of the hands of the National Legislature, and ratify them by Presidential decree, leaving the Parliament to pass afterward any resolutions that it might see fit. He told members of the Finance and Foreign Affairs committees that it would be useless to pass an act of ratification with strings to it that would be unacceptable to both the American and British governments.

QUICK WIT OF AIR HERO SAVES FOUR

He Slashes Rope Caught in Propeller Averting Crash of Two Planes

ATLANTA (Ga.) July 6. (AP)—Four Atlanta flyers tonight owed their lives to one of their number who was quick with his knife when a dangling rope from a plane in flight became entangled in the propeller of a ship flying below it.

Taking the air today to conduct an experiment in repairing the landing gear of aircraft in flight, Beeler Blevins and Bonnie Rowe climbed to an altitude of 2500 feet and maneuvered for position below a second plane flown by Mackay Solenberger and W. G. Striplin.

Rowe climbed out on the lower wing of the undership and removed a wheel, while Striplin, in the ship above, began lowering away another wheel from the end of a rope.

Just as Rowe reached out to grasp the dangling wheel, the force of the wind whipped the rope into the propeller of the lower ship. Both blades were torn off, and the rope, caught in the propeller shaft began to wind up much in the fashion of a windlass, threatening to draw the two ships into a fatal collision.

Striplin instantly drew his knife, reached down and slashed the rope free. The two ships careened away and Blevins put his crippled ship into a powerless glide.

United States Marshal Lays Plans to Check Rioting in New Orleans

Federal Injunction Plea by Company Stock Owners Brings Action

NEW ORLEANS, July 7. (Sunday) (AP)—Police early today had under arrest thirty-three men charged with inciting a riot at the Canal street barn in connection with street car strike disturbances. One patrol wagon carrying prisoners was stoned and badly damaged.

NEW ORLEANS (La.) June 6. (Exclusive)—The New Orleans street-car strike assumed serious proportions today when foreign bond and stock holders of the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., living in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other cities, applied to Federal Judge Borah for an injunction to stop the members of local Division No. 194, Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees of America, from interfering with the running of the street cars, asserting that the action of the men in burning the cars and otherwise damaging their property has caused them serious loss and that a Federal order is necessary.

Judge Borah set next Tuesday as the time to hear the injunction plea and United States Marshal Loisel announced that he will run the cars with special deputy United States marshals and if the strikers attack these officers and they are not able to cope with the attackers, that he will call for a regiment of Federal troops, either marines or soldiers, to protect the cars from the strikers and their sympathizers.

United States marshals were used here to run the cars during the World War when a similar strike occurred, but never have United States soldiers been used in such an emergency.

UNIONS ANGERED

The unions, angered by the move of Public Service, has called a mass meeting of all officers of every union organization in the city for Tuesday night, to call a sympathetic strike, and they threaten to cut all electric wires, shut off the gas supply, stop the making of bread, the sale of meat and milk and in other ways show their sympathy for the striking car men. So the situation here can be said to be real serious.

There is another element that enters into the controversy and this is as to whether the United States court can supersede the powers of the Commission Council of New Orleans, which has declared that a state of emergency exists and that New Orleans Public Service must desist from running the street cars to stop further bloodshed. Two men are dead and more than twenty are in hospitals as a result of the riots. Four cars have been burned and more than $50,000 of Public Service property destroyed. Whether the Federal court can make the City Council remove its order forbidding the movement of street cars also will be tested out in the Federal and State courts, and the Supreme Court probably will be appealed to. All of the judges are here.

CONFERENCES FAIL

All Saturday was spent in conferences between the Commission Council, business men and merchants and others interested in trying to bring about an end of the strike, but tonight they are as far away as ever from bringing about a settlement. Mayor O'Keefe and the Commission Council, however, decided to work all through tomorrow in an endeavor to bring about a peace settlement. The Mayor said that for the city's good and the safety of its citizens he will appeal to both sides again to bring about peace.

The men insist on recognition of their union; they are not asking any more pay. The company now refuses to recognize the union, saying that the men refused to accede to them when they agreed to recognize the union.

They want the men to return to work as individuals under the "open shop" plan and the men say they never will do this. All other points in the controversy have been

Threat Against Hoover Charged

SEATTLE, July 6. (AP)—U. Uchiyama, elderly Japanese chemist and asserted "poison-pen" artist, will face charges of threatening the life of President Hoover on the 12th inst., in a hearing before United States Commissioner Bowman.

Uchiyama is held under $10,000 bail.

NEW MONEY DESCRIBED OVER RADIO

Ogden Mills Tells His Audience Benefits of Smaller Currency

NEW YORK, July 6. (AP)—The new style of small currency which will be put into circulation next Wednesday was described tonight by Ogden L. Mills, Undersecretary of the Treasury, in a talk over the Columbia Broadcasting Company chain.

"With your co-operation and good will," he told his radio audience, "it is probable that a year from now the old-size currency bill will be a rarity and in a short time thereafter will arouse as much curiosity as our new bills will on Wednesday."

The Undersecretary said the reduced size of the new money will save the government about $1,500,000 a year and that the bills will last longer because they will not be folded as much as the present currency. The bills will be one-third smaller than the present ones.

All kinds of the small sized money, except national bank notes, will be issued Wednesday and the currency now in use will be retired as rapidly as possible. Issuance of national bank notes will begin about the 15th inst. The speaker estimated the paper currency in circulation at $5,000,000,000.

Gen. Herbert Lord, Former Director, Declares "Economy a Passion" With ex-President

BY GEN. HERBERT M. LORD,
Former Director of the United States Budget
(As Told to William P. Helm, Jr.)

[Copyright, 1929, by North American Newspaper Alliance.]

[This is the first of a series of personal reminiscences by Gen. Herbert M. Lord, who retired recently as Director of the United States Budget after seven years' service, during which he supervised the expenditure of more than $25,000,000,000 in government funds.]

WASHINGTON, July 6. (Exclusive)—Gen. Charles G. Dawes, now Ambassador to Great Britain, was largely responsible for my appointment as director of the United States Budget, a post he was the first to hold.

HERBERT LORD

When he was in France during the war, Gen. Dawes had difficulty co-ordinating the energies of the service of supply. The signal corps, for instance, might be in dire need of picks, but it could not touch the over-abundant supply consigned, say, to the engineers. They were the engineers' picks and that was all there was to it.

Now, quite without benefit of army tradition, Dawes considered the picks the property of the United States. The picks were there and the signal corps needed them. Leave it to Dawes, the Signal

NAVY PLANE SAVES FIVE CHILDREN

Youngsters Face Death When Boat Overturns in Chesapeake Bay

ANNAPOLIS (Md.) July 6. (AP)—A Navy seaplane in service here for the training of Naval Academy midshipmen today rescued five children whom its pilot, Lieut. Edward S. Mulheron, sighted clinging to an overturned boat in Chesapeake Bay.

Lieut. Mulheron brought his plane down beside the boat and took the children on board. The plane already carried its full load of eight men, and Lieut. Mulheron was unable to fly with the added load. He taxied over the waters into the Miles River at St. Michaels, Md., where he turned the children over to the care of the father of one of them and then returned to the Naval Academy to make an official report.

The children were Louis Burns, Sarah Allen, Dorothy Taylor and Warthman Dobson, all of St. Michaels, and Hillard Owens of Washington. They told their rescuers that they had been clinging to the overturned boat for some time.

ADMIRAL EBERLE EXPIRES

Retired Head of Navy General Board Victim of Old Injury After Distinguished Career

WASHINGTON, July 6. (AP)—Rear-Admiral Edward Walter Eberle, retired, died here today.

Admiral Eberle died at the naval hospital here where he was undergoing treatment. He had served in the Navy since 1881 when he entered Annapolis Naval Academy and had had a distinguished career which included that of directing naval operations.

An ear infection of long standing was the immediate cause of the admiral's death.

Admiral Eberle, who was born at Denton, Tex., retired in August, 1928, and was 65 years of age. At the time of his retirement he was ranking officer of the Navy by virtue of seniority, and was chairman of the executive committee of the Navy General Board. His home was at Fort Smith, Ark.

REAR ADMIRAL E.W. EBERLE

The career of Admiral Eberle was marked by notable service on both steam and sailing vessels. He was a lieutenant aboard the battleship Oregon in 1898 on her dash around the Horn to Santiago, and was in charge of her forward turret at the battle off that port.

In the Philippine revolution he was acting chief of staff to the commander-in-chief of the Asiatic Station. He was the first commander of the Atlantic torpedo fleet from 1911 to 1913 and took a leading part in the development of the destroyer smoke screen in fleet action.

The infection which led to the admiral's death resulted from an accident in 1910, when he was commanding the gunboat Wheeling on a globe-circling trip. While in a small boat he was struck by a tiller, the shaft of his eye glasses being driven into his right ear. The wound never healed.

BRITAIN CELEBRATES TODAY

Services Will Hail King's Restoration to Health; They Will be Heard Here Via Radio

LONDON, July 6. (AP)—The grateful people of Great Britain will unite tomorrow in solemn thanksgiving to God for the recovery of King George from his recent severe illness. The sovereign himself, now restored to health and rejoicing in the felicitations given him today on the thirty-six anniversary of his marriage to Queen Mary, will attend the official service in the hallowed shrine of national heroes, Westminster Abbey.

There, among historic memorials, the spiritual and temporal chiefs of the nation will lead all loyal subjects in a service of praise. The services will be broadcast.

At the start of the service a stately procession into the gray portals and under the lofty arches of the Abbey will be formed. It will be made up of an imposing list of personages. The children of the King and Queen, including the Prince of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of York, Prince George, Princess Mary, the latter's husband, Viscount Lascelles, and the sisters of the King, Princesses Louise and Victoria Alexandria, will precede the King and Queen.

In a group of distinguished churchmen there will be the most Reverend Cosmo Gordon Lang, archbishop of Canterbury, and Dr. Foxley Norris, dean of the Abbey. These two will conduct the service.

Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and several members of his Cabinet also will be there. Close to the person of the monarch will be the Marquis of Salisbury as Lord High Steward, and Lord Muir Mackenzie, High Bailiff.

Gratitude for the King's restored health was expressed today, the Jewish Sabbath, in all synagogues in the British Empire. A special memorial of thanks was compiled for this occasion by Dr. J. H. Hertz, chief rabbi, and was used immediately before the usual petitions on behalf of the royal family.

CLEVELAND ACCLAIMS NEW AIR CHAMPIONS

CLEVELAND, July 6. (AP)—Nerves frayed and bodies exhausted, pilots Roy L. Mitchell and Byron K. Newcomb rested tonight while hundreds of congratulatory messages poured in to the newest conquerors of the air.

Mitchell and Newcomb brought their Stinson-Detroiter monoplane City of Cleveland down amid the frenzied acclaim of 75,000 spectators at Cleveland airport at 12:39:50 a.m. today after remaining in the air 174 hours and fifty-nine seconds—a new world's sustained endurance record for planes refueled in flight.

CASH GIFT URGED

As they rested today, plans were under way for the city's official recognition of their record making flight. City Manager Hopkins advocated a cash gift of $25,000 or more, while the Chamber of Commerce, civic and aviation groups planned a testimonial dinner for them the first of the week.

A deluge of vaudeville and exhibition offers and a stack of telegrams and cablegrams from all parts of the country and Europe mounted while the flyers, with their hotel suites guarded from disturbance, were recovering from the racking strain of more than eight days battling against time, fog and storms.

This noon Newcomb and Mitchell tumbled out of bed, shaved and dressed and had a light lunch, but their tired nerves and bodies demanded further rest.

Mitchell and Newcomb landed this morning admittedly worn down by their long flight and after an enthusiastic reception and a few words over the radio, were hurried to a downtown hotel for the sleep which was their only thought after breaking the record. They had hoped to stay up 200 hours, but had spent almost every ounce of their energy in keeping aloft during Thursday night's severe storm.

BOY ELECTROCUTED

The flyers were interested in the progress of another endurance flight now in progress at Culver City, Cal. Basham also drew their praise for his skillful landing of the refueling plane Thursday night guided only by flashes of lightning and clever flying in the twenty-four successful refueling contacts.

Among the messages of congratulation was one from Reginald Robbins and James Kelly, who had set the previous record of 172 hours thirty-two minutes and one second at Forth Worth, Tex.

Thousands who were at the airport to see the record broken were forced to remain in their cars hours while the city's worst traffic jam in history was straightened out. Several persons were trampled and a 16-year-old youth who touched a live wire after climbing atop a machine was electrocuted.

ROME PLANE SET FOR START EARLY TODAY

OLD ORCHARD (Me.) July 6. (AP)—Old Orchard Beach was leveled fairly smooth by a high tide late today, which gave hope to the crew of the monoplane Pathfinder that a take-off for Rome can be made early tomorrow.

Lewis A. Yancey, navigator of the plane, said ocean weather reports still held favorable and that the projected flight will be attempted not later than 6:30 a.m. tomorrow, if the smoothness of the beach is not again rutted.

Yancey declared the plane will be prepared during the night for the flight, but that definite decision on a start will not be made until 4 a.m.

NEW PLANE RULES STRICT

Commerce Department Tightens Its Regulations to Increase Airworthiness of Craft

WASHINGTON, July 6. (AP)—A comprehensive governmental move to insure more airworthy planes has been taken in new Department of Commerce "airworthiness requirements," which set up rigorous standards for the safety of vital parts.

An analysis made by the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce shows thirty-eight specific changes in the "airworthiness requirements," the aircraft engineering code followed by American manufacturers to obtain approved type certificates for their planes before they are sold to the public.

Advance copies of the code have been prepared by the chamber and sent to its members, who include approximately 95 per cent of the airplane manufacturers in the country.

To bring about further strengthening of airplane structures, the Department of Commerce will require manufacturers to demonstrate by loading tests the strength of all control surfaces and control systems, and the shock-absorbing qualities of landing gears on their planes, such tests were not required previously.

Specimens of all-wood members used in airplane construction now must be loaded to destruction and sample of the parts that fail must be analyzed to determine their physical properties.

Cabin planes must have one exit for each six persons carried instead of just two exits as previously required. Detailed specifications for all openings and exits are given.

The former sketchy requirements for engine installation have been expanded to include detailed instructions to insure the highest type of construction.

Propeller clearance above the ground has been changed from a minimum of six inches to nine inches for land planes and eighteen inches for seaplanes. The propellers must be so designed and adjusted that they will limit the engine speed to 105 per cent of the official rated speed at full throttle in level flight.

Performance and flight test specifications have been amplified to describe the procedure followed by department inspectors.

The relative efficiency of biplane wings must be determined from rational formulae instead of from the inadequate curves formerly specified. Methods of calculating air loads and deadweight for wings which are tapered in thickness have been changed to comply with the latest facts known to aeronautical engineers.

The introduction of glider building in the United States has prompted the adition of a new paragraph to this type of construction.

'UNTIN' BOWLER HELD BY STORM

conditions would be unfavorable today.

The weather report issued for the flyers in the morning indicated that it would have been little less than foolhardy for a plane to attempt the passage over the dreary wastes of Ungava. It was the plan of the pilots to guide themselves over this poorly charted territory by the streams until they reached Ungava Bay, which they could skirt on a northeastward swing to Port Burwell on Cape Chidley, their next stop.

Low visibility would have rendered this attempt dangerous. The weather conditions, as officially described, were:

"Center of barometric pressure over Davis Strait moving slowly toward Southwest Greenland and coast; lowest barometer reading 29.66 inches at Port Burwell where weather foggy with southwest winds twelve miles an hour and temperature 32 deg. Raining at Hope's Advance, light northwest wind, temperature 36. Raining at Godthaab, temperature 46, light southwest wind.

"Forecast: From east coast Hudson Bay to Burwell mostly moderate northwest to southwest surface winds; probably fresh to strong aloft; mostly cloudy with local rains Saturday. From Burwell to Mt. Evans, Greenland, cloudy and rainy with mostly southwest to west winds, moderate to fresh at surface, mostly strong aloft."

No message has been received from the 'Untin' Bowler since the landing at Great Whale two hours before noon on Friday. Not even the hum of the motors had been picked up either at the WGN low wave station at Elgin or at the Canadian marine radio station at Port Burwell. Both points had broadcast the latest weather report and it was assumed that the Bowler's crew, confident that their safe situation was known, had made up their minds to await clear skies.

The period of enforced inactivity has been used by the Tribune organization in perfecting arrangements for supplies and communications when the big amphibian reaches Port Burwell and the Mt. Evans Observatory on Greenland.

A message from a Prof. William H. Hobbs, who founded the meteorological station and who is now at Ann Arbor, Mich., in nightly communication with his men there told how the flyers would be aided.

PLANS OUTLINED

"As already stated," he wired, "our operator at Mt. Evans has received permission from the Danish government to send news stories direct to us. The flyers will come down on the Fjord off the landing at Camp Lloyd, which is separated from Mt. Evans by a rocky trail three miles long. Our aerologist, L. R. Schneider, with his assistant, Evans Schmeling, and a strong Eskimo, Enok, are now camped at the landing and have already set up and maintain in service a field radio outfit for transmitting to Mt. Evans.

"They have several boats available which may be of use in landing the plane. All plans are made to release gasoline and motor oil and assist in servicing.

"Pilot balloons will be sent up and a report given of the winds aloft, so that conditions for flying at all levels will be available before taking off."

Port Burwell which had reported on Friday hearing the Bowler's signals perfectly while the landing at Great Whales was being made sent reports at two-hour intervals today to say that nothing was heard from Cramer. If a start had been made this station almost certainly would have heard the noise of the generator even if Cramer had failed to broadcast any message.

STRIKERS MAY FACE MILITARY

settled and Mayor O'Keefe hopes to bring about an agreement upon the only remaining point in dispute some time tomorrow or Monday.

Meantime the people of New Orleans are riding in every kind of vehicle, but it has ceased to be a pleasure to have to sit on rough boards on trucks or on the back of some horses or mule-drawn vehicle. And the people who have been giving free rides are kind of getting tired of the thing. Thousands of jitneys fill the streets, charging from 10 cents to 50 cents to carry people certain distances and they are "cleaning up."

People in all walks of life are demanding that the strike be settled and the Commission Council, directors of the Public Service and officials of the union have been besieged with requests to end the trouble.

Joseph Molanario, the first striking street-car man to be killed, was buried this afternoon. Although 300 car men followed his body, there was no disturbance, but the union charged that the strikebreakers who are being imported from Buffalo, N. Y., used dum-dum bullets to fire upon those who attacked them with bricks and stones. The police practically admit that they are unable to stop the onslaughts by the mobs of many thousands who storm the quarters where the strikebreakers are housed almost every two or three hours.

Whitney Seeks Exoneration of Wilner Stultz

MINEOLA (L. I.) July 6. (Exclusive)—A private investigation, financed by a millionaire aviation enthusiast, John Hay Whitney, is under way today to seek to clear the reputation of the late Wilmer Stultz, famous pilot, said by police and medical authorities to have been drunk when he and two friends crashed to death near Roosevelt Field, L. I., last week.

Bitter resentment at the "defamation of Stultz" was expressed in aviation circles on Long Island today. Even if Stultz had been drinking—which pilots who saw him that afternoon emphatically deny in affidavits obtained by Whitney's private detectives—they see no reason for the publicity given the matter by Dr. A. O. Goettler, New York toxicologist, and the Nassau authorities.

ROOSEVELT TO BE CANDIDATE

Roosevelt Presidential ambitions. The same course was followed by ex-Gov. Smith right up to his nomination for President at the Houston convention, although it was nationally known that Smith was a receptive candidate and that his nomination was all but assured.

It is the hope and expectation of the Roosevelt advisers, it can be said, that Gov. Roosevelt will inherit the political support of ex-Gov. Smith, and will have, when the time comes for the battle over the Democratic nomination for President, the active support of Mr. Smith.

The Roosevelt people, although they are silent on the subject, feel, as do a number of other outstanding Democratic leaders, that Mr. Smith has had his chance, and especially since the same issues which are thought to have blocked Smith in the national race in 1928 will still be available for use against him in 1932, that Mr. Smith owes it to his party to step entirely aside in the next national contest.

CLAIM ON SMITH

As a special claim on the whole-hearted support of ex-Gov. Smith for Gov. Roosevelt for President, the friends of Mr. Roosevelt point to the sacrifice which Roosevelt made for Mr. Smith, when, although he felt it against the interests of his health he consented, at Smith's personal pleading, to accept the Democratic nomination for Governor in an effort to place New York State in the Smith-for-President column.

In the antitrust issue the Roosevent advisers believe Gov. Roosevelt has championed a fighting political issue which will grow larger and larger all the time. In this connection they allude to the recent huge food, power, bank and other commercial mergers, and claims that the present "era of commercial combines" has become and will increase as a real menace to the American institutions and to the American people.

NEW DOCTRINE

Furthermore, the Roosevelt people believe that the Roosevelt "new doctrine" is one which can be "put over" to the voters. The issue of big business against little business and little business men, they say, has always been effective, because of the overwhelming numbers of the little business men.

Whether ex-Gov. Smith conceives himself as through as a possible candidate for President cannot be said with certainty today. To date Mr. Smith has said nothing definitely which would seem to divorce him from a second try for the Presidential nomination. And it is the quite general belief in informed harbors thought of a second Smith political circles, that Smith still nomination.

LORD PRAISES COOLIDGE'S AID

Former Director of Budget Lauds ex-Chief

Gives Dawes Credit for His Appointment

Recalls Seven Years' Work as Nation's Spender

corps got them. That was the Dawes way, but it bucked the line of age-old red tape and the going was slow.

As chief of finance of the War Department I was having somewhat similar trouble at Washington. When Gen. Dawes returned to the States I went to see him and we exchanged views and swapped experiences. Our friendship dated from that visit. He invited me to help him when he became director of the budget, and later he urged President Harding to appoint me his successor.

Thus the plow had turned the virgin soil of Federal budgeting when I took office. The soil, however, still required much working.

Warren Harding died little more than a year after I took office. My relationship with him was more than official; in a personal way it was delightful. Once a week or oftener I went to the White House to discuss with him the current and prospective state of the nation's finances. I shall always cherish the memory of those visits.

Calvin Coolidge was wholly different in his personality. As Vice-President he had shown a prodigous appetite for information about Federal finances. We of the Budget Bureau were being questioned constantly by him for information concerning government spendings and revenues, and he would utilize in his speeches the information supplied him. I believe he called on the Budget Bureau during his Vice-Presidency more often than all the rest of the President's official family put together. For a time, it seemed to us, he was the world's most active Vice-President.

With Mr. Coolidge, we soon found out, economy was a passion. He had an amazing way of brushing aside all froth and irrelevancies and going surely, quickly and by the shortest known route direct to the heart of the subject under discussion. He reveled in detail, listening, in silence, for considerable periods as I answered his inquiries. And he wanted to know about everything. He is the best listener I ever saw, I believe. He didn't have a great deal to say; nothing at all irrelevant. When he did speak he said something.

HAD TO BE SHOWN

There was nothing whatever of smallness or cheese-paring or niggardliness in Mr. Coolidge's idea of economy. He was for reductions, but he always insisted upon complete justification for a reduction. He had to be shown. And though he is a man of few words it was given me many times to see in revealing flashes of his able mind that he regarded himself as only the trustee for the nation; that he felt deep and personal responsibility to the taxpayers for the wise expenditure of every dollar appropriated by Congress.

Mr. Coolidge believed, as I did, in getting 100 cents' worth of work out of every dollar that left the Federal Treasury. He believed also, as I did, in spending no dollar that could be saved without impairment to the public service. Our ideas dove-tailed in the common perspective of our New England ancestry. There was nothing hard in the man Coolidge's economy, nothing little.

Soon after President Harding's death, and while Mr. Coolidge was still staying at a hotel in Washington, I went to him and offered my resignation. The relationship between the President and his chief financial adviser is so close and intimate that I felt Mr. Coolidge would prefer to select his own man for the office.

"No," he said, placing his hand on my shoulder. "I do not want you to resign. I will not accept your resignation."

And so I retained office and made frequent trips to the White House to confer with Calvin Coolidge as I had conferred with Warren Harding. I found President Coolidge ever attentive, sympathetic and whole-hearted in his support.

"Have you seen the Director of the Budget about this?" he would ask of Senators and Representatives who came to him with requests that certain recommendations of the Budget Director be modified or over-ruled.

Their reply, in Mr. Coolidge's early days as President, almost invariably was in the negative.

BACKED DIRECTOR

"Then go see him," the President would direct. "Take the matter up with him. I will not reverse the Budget Director."

That sort of backing was 100 per cent perfect. President Coolidge kept it up. In no case did he reverse an approved budget recommendation, so far as I can now recall, without discussing the subject with the Budget Director.

That attitude on the President's part led members of Congress to take up such subjects with the Budget Bureau, where they were discussed in friendly co-operation. Thus an atmosphere of friendliness was created and the President relieved of some of the requests. When I ended my duties as Director of the Budget a short time ago I felt that I had scores of friends on Capitol Hill.

CHURCH CLIQUES WAGING BATTLE

High and Low Factions in England at Odds

Purchase of 'Advowsons' for Control Denounced

Smoke of Conflict Covers Prayer-Book Clash

LONDON, July 6. (Exclusive)—The prayer-book controversy appears likely to be dwarfed to the status of an amicable chat between friends in comparison with the new battle for control of the Church of England between high and low church factions, which mutually are accusing each other of buying up advowsons in order to force their particular religious views on the congregations, irrespective of the churchgoer's wishes.

An advowson is the right to name an incumbent for a certain parish. According to English law the patrons, who are usually lords or landholders of the parishes involved, are able to name the clergymen who serve them. This right is salable. An advowson may be sold on practically the same terms as the land, although approval of the choice is necessary. The right to name a Church of England minister may be exercised by a Jew, atheist, or any other denomination except Roman Catholic.

OTHERS' MOTES SEEN

The present controversy is concerning the claims of both parties that the opposing faction is buying advowsons in order to fill the churches with clergymen of their own particular religious complexion. Both low and high church advocates deny stoutly that their own acquirements were made from any other than altruistic purposes, but continue in the same breath that their opponents are obviously acquiring the advowsons solely in order to force parsons of their ideas upon unwilling congregations. As for saving the church—which means keeping it up to its ideals, whoever the speaker may be—which is included among the altruistic motives, outsiders cannot help acquiring the opinion that both parties are right when they accuse the other of packing the pulpits.

The sale of advowsons to church societies was stimulated by a law passed by Parliament in 1924 forbidding the selling of a benefice more than twice, the theory being that the sale would ultimately cease while values would drop, since the ability to resell would be ultimately lost. But, on the contrary, prices went up because of competition between the high and low church factions bidding against each other in the attempt to secure permanent control of the majority of places with the intention of acquiring them eventually. For one benefice with a nominal value of $1500 the patron asked $7500, and actually got $4500.

COUNTER-CHARGES

Rev. Arnold Pinchard, secretary of the English Church Union, which is the high church, after remarking that he does not know who is behind the recent buying up of advowsons but "feels sure it is the low church," continues:

"I think there is being waged a strongly financed campaign for securing patronage to as many livings as possible in what are called low church interests. It is a scandal that ought to be dealt with at once."

J. A. Seddon, secretary of the Church Association, which is the low church, likewise noticed the evidence of sharp practice on the other side of the fence, but failed to discover any failings in his own party.

Rockefeller in Nonagenarians' Clan Tomorrow

TARRYTOWN (N. Y.) July 6. (AP) When John D. Rockefeller, Sr., passes his ninetieth milestone Monday one friend, who for years made it a point to call and offer birthday congratulations, will not be present.

Worcester Warner of Wilson Park, N. Y., died in Germany two weeks ago. He became a fast friend of Mr. Rockefeller years ago in Cleveland when the oil man had a large estate there and the friendship continued to the time of his death.

No special observance of the Rockefeller birthday is planned, it was said today. If the weather is good Mr. Rockefeller probably will indulge in his daily round of golf.

TRILODITE SKELETON DISCOVERED

WAUKESHA (Wis.) July 6. (Exclusive)—The skeleton of an organism that lived 17,000,000 years ago has been found by Harold L. Caspar. Mr. Caspar is head of the Fossil Club of amateur geological explorers here and his discovery is one of the most important recorded by the club members.

The piece of limestone, containing this skeleton was turned over to Stuart R. Barnett, chemist of this city, who has prepared a biography of this animal which science has named calymene of the trilodite family and it is said to be first inhabitant of the upper Silurian crust. These crustaceans were the first living things to have eyes and the power to crawl.

ANTICIGARETTE CRUSADE VOTED

Christian Endeavor Society Strikes at Smoking

Resolution Condemns "Fags" Advertising Drive

Speaker Deplores Paganism Creed of Moderns

KANSAS CITY, July 6. (AP)—Growth of cigarette smoking among the youth of America and the "recent colossal campaign of cigarette advertising" were condemned here today in a resolution adopted by the international convention of Christian Endeavor.

"The convention views with apprehension the pernicious growing habit of cigarette smoking among the youth of America," the resolution read. "The recent colossal campaign of cigarette advertising in magazines, on billboards and radio, exploiting adolescent youth and womanhood, fills us with disgust and we will campaign to rouse public opinion to demand its abolition."

The 1931 convention will be held in San Francisco.

PAGANISM DEPLORED

Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, Newark, N. J., a speaker on the morning program, blamed "modern paganism" for the wrong standards of living in America today.

"There are only three possible attitudes toward the human body," Dr. Foulkes said. "One is registered in the creed of the voluptuary and the sensualist, which he expresses in these words: 'My body for myself.' This creed underlies no little of modern philosophy. It is blazoned both in the film and press, in magazine and book. It is the saturating spirit of modern cynicism. It is the breeding passion of criminal indulgence in deadly drugs, running the whole gamut from cocaine and heroin to equally devastating alcohol.

"There is a second creed concerning the human body. It is the creed of tyranny and despotism. It runs thus: 'Your body for me! My body is not big enough for my own hurts and desires.'

CRUEL CREED DEFINED

"This cruel creed is the taproot of economic and industrial injustice. It is responsible for all of man's inhumanity to man, and for what is worse, man's inhumanity to woman. It is the 'big stick' that herds the morally helpless into the prison camp of unrequited labor that extorts from them their life blood.

"It drags us into twelve hours a day, seven days a week factories. This is the creed that bids men reach out their hands and immolate tens of thousands of girls upon the pagan altars of their own appetites each year."

The third creed, Dr. Foulkes said, called for dedication of the bodies and lives of youth to the service of human need.

WAR PROBLEM DISCUSSED

Pacts to renounce war are useless without organized public opinion to support them, James Kelly of Glasgow, Scotland, general secretary of the World's Sunday-school Association, tonight told the delegates.

"It is true" Mr. Kelly said, "that so far as appearance goes the cause of peace has progressed exceedingly and has secured the allegiance of nearly all countries, but anyone who has the slightest knowledge of the continent of Europe alone has some idea how much bitterness still exists between nations and how there is a divided allegiance."

"It is the wildest optimism to assume that we can rest on our oars and feel that war has been definitely abrogated," the speaker continued. "If that were so there would be no meaning in the gigantic armaments which still exist, or in the efforts of almost all nations to invent more deadly instruments of destruction.

"If peace is really the deep-seated desire of all nations, why do they not disarm? It is because, though peace is on the lips of peoples, it is not in their hearts."

NEW PHONE SYSTEM FOR STATE CAPITAL

SACRAMENTO, July 6. (AP)—Offices in the capitol and other State buildings in Sacramento are to have a new interdepartmental dial telephone system, Frank N. Killam, superintendent of buildings and grounds, declared today.

Six hundred telephones used to connect State departments with each other and outside points are to be dialed so that a twist of a finger connects one office with another without going through the capitol switchboard.

EDUCATOR GIVEN LEAVE

OAKLAND, July 6. (AP)—A year's leave has been granted Dr. Lucy Lockwood Hazard, associate professor of English composition at Mills College here, to permit her to teach in Salt Lake City, it was announced today. CATHOLIC CHURCH NOT AGAINST SHORT SKIRTS

CHICAGO, July 6. (AP)—Rev. Gerald Fitzgibbons, director of the Catholic Women's Sodalities, told the convention of that organization today that questions of length of dresses and smoking or drinking by women are problems young women are best able to solve.

"The Catholic Church does not frown upon short dresses or even an occasional drink on the part of women," Fr. Fitzgibbons said. "We do not believe, however, in excess in any form whether in apparel or in public drinking.

"With proper education on the subject of dress we feel the young women can guide their own destinies and still be in style. Drink has been a pitfall for many a poor misguided girl. Flask carrying, public drinking, roadhouse parties and speakeasies we definitely frown upon and discussions among girls' groups support us in this stand.

"The church and the sodalities believe smoking cigarets by women breaks down the feminine reserve so vital to women. We feel cigaret smoking by women is but a fad which will pass," he said.

INVITING YOU to see the new AUTHENTIC PERIOD MODEL STEINWAYS

THE Italian influence is portrayed in this later Spanish design. The spiral turned leg columns, so reminiscent of the clerical Italian, the compound curve of arm and desk outline, the shield on body of case, executed in a free and simple manner—embellish this Steinway. Walnut is the most favored wood. There are other Steinway period models to match every decorative scheme—Louis XV, English, Wm. and Mary, Queen Anne, Gothic, Sheraton, Colonial and English Harpischord.

BOURBON BLAST FAILS TO ALARM

Threat to Write Own Tariff Bill Futile Gesture

"Solid South" Broken With Manufacturing Era

Constituents Warn Senators Jobs Are in Peril

WASHINGTON, July 6. (Exclusive)—The "declaration of war" on the part of the Democratic National Committee; stating that Senate Democrats will unite with Republican progressive insurgents to write a tariff bill after their own hearts is not taken seriously by administration leaders.

In a lengthy statement issued Friday night by its publicity bureau the Democratic national body served notice on the country and upon its Republican colleagues that the Progressive-Democratic Senate alliance has enough votes to dictate the terms of the tariff measure to be passed by the upper house this autumn.

SHOT HANGS FIRE

Rather belated, in the opinion of Republican leaders, is the Democratic ultimatum. For majority scouts in the Senate quietly but carefully canvassed the possibilities of such a situation before the Senate recessed and found no cause to fear that the Democrats would be successful in endangering the Republican ideal of a tariff measure.

Southern Democrats, from whom would come the bulk of the support and the majority of the votes in favor of any plan devised to put the administration in an embarrassing light, are more divided on the question of protection at present than any time in the history of the once-solid South.

SOUTH MANUFACTURES NOW

The growth of cotton manufacturing in the Southern States, as well as the growth of other industries demanding protection under the tariff laws, has caused many Southern Senators and Representatives who once followed the party banners of free trade or tariff for revenue only to see the cotton manufacturers' schedule, at least, through Republican tariff lenses.

Senators from North and South Carolina, from Tennessee and from other States where the textile industry rapidly is becoming an important part of the life of the section, were given pause when some of them received hearty condemnation for voting in favor of the farm debenture plan, which cotton manufacturers are convinced would result in foreign textile mills being enabled to purchase American cotton at a lower price than is paid by the American mill men.

MESSAGE FROM HOME

In fact, one of the North Carolina Senators—and he is a Democrat with a long Senate service behind him—bluntly was told by the cotton manufacturers of his State following the first vote on the debenture plan that if he persisted in his support of the scheme they would not only withdraw their support of him in the next election but work unceasingly to elect another man—perhaps a Republican—who would care for their interests in better fashion.

Such pressure, it is known, will be brought to bear upon many Senators who have the inclination to join in a movement to embarrass the administration but who will hesitate a good long while, it is believed, when they receive the edict of their constituencies on certain schedules.

It is safe to say that every Democrat, for local reasons, wants to see a high tariff placed on some commodity. The same is true of Republicans, of course, but that party has the precedent of years of advocacy of a high generally protective tariff behind it.

DEMOCRATIC FAILING

Therefore, leaders believe, it is extremely doubtful that the Democrats will be able to present a united front with their insurgent Republican brethren to force passage of a low tariff measure or even to force drastic revision of the schedules in the House bill, which they find particularly, objectionable.

Administration leaders are anxious to have the tariff bill passed before the opening of the regular session of Congress in December. They will broadcast their hopes in this regard far and wide over the country and will charge the Democrats and Progressives with the blame if this ideal is not realized.

INSURGENTS ALSO

Progressive or insurgent Republicans like Borah, Norris, Brookhart, Nye, the younger LaFollette and the rest present a slightly different problem, but the same argument for a split in their ranks holds good.

The only two items upon which the Democrats and Progressives appear to have a good chance of presenting a united front are the debenture plan, the fight for the inclusion of which in the tariff bill is to be led by Borah and Norris, and the battle to strike out the clause of the House bill abolishing the present system of naming the tariff commission and giving the President much greater powers in the raising of individual rates.

State Leading in Allotments on Forest Fires

WASHINGTON, July 6. (AP)—Federal funds totaling $1,400,000, an increase of $200,000 over last year, were allotted today to thirty-eight States to assist in the protection of forests from fire for the fiscal year beginning the 1st inst.

State and private expenditures augmenting Federal aid for the calendar year 1928 were $2,700,000. The area protected during 1928 was 237,292,650 acres of 416,147,700 acres needing such protection.

The 1929 fire protection allotments range from $375 for the State of South Dakota to $90,427 for California. High on the list were Washington with $90,389; Oregon, $83,575; Minnesota, $83,798; Michigan, $79,380; New York, $63,511.

BETTER-GRAPE MEETINGS SET

University Farm Service to Conduct Demonstrations

Improvements in Packing and Shipping to be Shown

Announcement of Program Made at Berkeley

BERKELEY, July 6. (AP)—In an effort to improve the quality of California grapes and facilities for their shipment and handling, the agricultural extension service of the University of California has scheduled a series of demonstrations in grape packing and shipping, it was announced today.

Co-operating with the university in this move, it was made known, are the California Vineyardists' Association, the State Department of Agriculture, the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific railroads. The demonstrations have been proposed for the period of the 29th inst. to August 17, next, and a definite schedule will be determined upon later, the announcement says.

Prof. L. B. Smith, assistant State leader of farm advisers, has been placed in charge of the demonstration program for the agricultural extension service.

The campaign for improved quality of grapes was inaugurated last February at the instigation of the California Vineyardists' Association. The demonstrations will be given at field meetings to be held at Santa Fe points in Kern, Tulare and Fresno counties during the period of the 29th inst. to August 3, next. From August 5 to 17, meetings will be held in Kern, Kings, Fresno, Madera, Merced, Stanislaus and San Joaquin stations of the Southern Pacific.

County farm advisers have been named to act as chairmen at the meetings, and it will devolve upon them to explain the purposes of the project. Samples of grapes will be judged and scored, while a representative of the vineyardists will conduct a discussion of grape qualities and market demands.

FEDERAL AID PLAN INDORSED BY BARBOUR

FRESNO, July 6. (Exclusive)—Unqualified indorsement of the Federal grape stabilization corporation as the agency through which the raisin and grape growers of California will obtain the benefits of Federal farm relief was given today by Representative Barbour of the Seventh District, member of the House Appropriations Committee.

"It only remains for the farmer to take advantage of the generous provision that the government has made for his welfare," he said. "The plan of relief fits exactly the conditions which have existed in the raisin and grape industry during the last few years. It offers the relief we have been seeking from the well-nigh intolerable conditions that have oppressed us.

"The act proposes an orderly system of marketing farm products so the proper return will be assured the producer. Under this plan surplusses in agricultural commodities, which always have had a depressing effect on the markets, can be prevented or controlled.

"This plan does not contemplate any tax, bill backs or the supply of capital on the part of the farmers. Congress has authorized the appropriation of $500,000,000 and $150,000,000 of this amount was appropriated for immediate use.

"The rest of the money will be available as needed and as a member of the Appropriations Committee I can give every assurance that the money will be ready when needed.

"The law specifically provides that all losses from surplus control operation shall be paid from the reserves, but if such reserves are inadequate, then such losses shall be paid as a loan from the $500,000,000 government revolving fund to be repaid from future profits.

"Operations of the Federal grape stabilization corporation will be under the supervision of the Federal Farm Board composed of outstanding business men and farmers, the very best men that can be selected by the President from the entire country."

The civil and military authorities in Michoacan also have been notified and are attempting to locate the kidnaped pastor, said to be held in a remote mountain camp of Gen. Elias Vergara, head of the asserted Cristero band.

Eminent American Scientis Confirm Value of Gland Treatment

Findings of Research Specialists in World's Gre Institutions of Medical Education Are Now in Acc With Dr. Wheeler's Pioneer Work

Gland Treatments Past Experimental Stage Now

Great Economic Gain Visioned by Late Doctor

Reprinted in Part From Oakland TRIBUNE, July 20, 1928

BERKELEY, July 20.—Glandular operations furnish the means for prolonging the active period of life, physical as well as mental, by not less than 50 per cent.

These were declarations today of Dr. Albert Schneider, former dean of the Berkeley police school, who has just been selected to inaugurate the rejuvenation operations made famous at San Quentin, into the Oregon State penitentiary at Salem.

A survey of the results of rejuvenation operations in all parts of the world has been completed by Dr. Schneider, former faculty member of the University of California, and now dean of the school of pharmacy at North Pacific College, Portland. His findings, as accepted by the Medical Review of Reviews, predict a revolution of the existing social order through scientific transplanting of glands and organs of human beings and animals in bringing about mental and physical rejuvenation.

Treatments Past Experimental Stage

"The Endocrinal and protein treatment for the purposes of retarding senile changes and reactivating the cell function has now passed the purely experimental stage," said Dr. Schneider, who has arrived in Berkeley to spend the summer.

"Apparently we have the means for prolonging the active period of life, physical as well as mental, by not less than 50 per cent.

"Voronoff, French scientist, suggests that normal man should live on an average to 140 years, a life period proportional to the average age periods of other mammalians, which is seven times the adult period. If we consider 20 years as the average age for the human adult, then seven times 20 is 140 years. It has been reported that the German Reichstag is contemplating adopting a measure making gland operations compulsory with a view to increasing human efficiency and to prolong life."

Dr. Schneider enumerates "benefits to the social group which may reasonably follow the general application of the gonadel and endocrinal reactivation treatment" or rejuvenation operations as follows:

Invalidism will be markedly decreased.

Competition in science, business will be prolonged and the life span increased from 40 to 70 years will be useful and happy.

The new highly active though ill-directed behavioristic reactions of the younger generation (15 to 20 years) can be more wisely directed by the richer and fuller experience of the still active older generation.

The older man will be active and more useful to society than the younger man because of greater learning, wider experience and broader vision.

In the domain of marriage, the older man will have the advantage over the younger man by virtue of greater poise, a more stable social position and greater wealth. The marriageable age can be advanced from 20 to 40 years.

Science, art, music and literature will develop to a much higher plane and in turn the coming generation can build upon the higher and more substantial and lasting plane.

There will be more time for leisure and greater opportunity to enjoy the pleasures and comforts of life.

The dread, so demoralizing in its effects, of being shelved at the age of 50, will no longer exist, and the realization that life from childhood to ripe old age will be quite free from suffering and disease and that there will be constant intellectual and spiritual growth, will be a joyful anticipation at all times.

Great Economic Gain Predicted

In addition, says Dr. Schneider, who inaugurated the early scientific training of Berkeley policemen under Chief August Vollmer, incalculable economic gain will ensue from the changed condition and the commercial, spiritual, cultural and moral status of society would be greatly enhanced.

Since coming to Berkeley, Dr. Schneider has been in conference . . . at San Quentin concerning operations performed . . . in rejuvenating prisoners. Formal acceptance of an invitation from Oregon State officials to take charge of . . . gland operations on selected cases at the northern penitentiary was given today. Work at Salem, Dr. Schneider announced, will begin about October 1. While primarily interested in the effects glandular operations may have in restoring prison inmates to society, Dr. Schneider sees, moreover, the far-reaching results of work done by pioneers in this field of scientific endeavor, despite the ridicule which, he says, has been heaped upon their efforts.

He bases his predictions of a changed social order on results of experiments of world-famous scientists and of close observations of the operations performed at San Quentin.

"General improvement in health is noted, especially in weakened and run-down constitutions; also a marked tendency toward normalcy in mental abnormalities and universally good results in muscular weakness. Also almost universally good results follow in tuberculosis, as well as apparent cures in diabetes. It is at this time too early to state definitely what the ultimate outcome . . . will be, but the results to date indicate that the effects are lasting and so far no ill effects of any kind have been observed. It might also be said that results in arthritis, gastro-intestinal disorders and neurasthenia have been excellent. According to results to date, not over 20 per cent of those treated show little or no improvement."

Moreover . . . San Quentin authorities have given hearty approval . . . because inmates who have received treatment are in better health, are more satisfied with their environment and make less trouble than before operations.

In urging rejuvenating operations for prison inmates, Dr. Schneider advocates that no parole be granted to any offender who has been given a long prison term, young or old who has not received at least three . . . treatments. He prescribes scientific handling of all prisoners for mental and physical improvement with a view to restoring at least some of them to society and to making pardoning and paroling safe for society.

Dr. Schneider's experiments, as well as his police school activities in Berkeley, have attracted wide attention on other occasions. Several years ago he startled scientists by partaking of Mexican "loco" weed in order to determine what effect this drug had upon the human system. He also created a sensation in scientific circles with experiments which he announced determined the cause for cancer.

1919 Stanford House Surgeon

In the year 1919, when Stanford House Surgeon of the San Francisco Hospital, Dr. Clayton E. Wheeler announced to some of his colleagues that he had been carrying on intensive research work, for more than a year, in the study of the functions, relations and inter-relations of the ductless, or endocrine, glands in vertebrate animals. These experiments started with tadpoles and his conclusions, gained by observing the effects of feeding different types of glands to these amphibians, were startling.

Experiments With Tadpoles

He had found that a tadpole fed with one kind of gland could quickly and prematurely be made to develop into a perfect little frog. Some were no larger than house flies, and these tiny, prematurely matured frogs never attained their normal size. They correspond to the human midgets who never grow to adult size because of the same basic glandular imbalance.

Other experiments proved that tadpoles, fed upon certain other glands, grew to be giant tadpoles which never turned into frogs but remained tadpoles of abnormal size.

This proved that different glands have diametrically opposite functions to perform in the living body, and that too much or too little activity of any gland will cause a change from the normal condition, which changes may vary (according to the degree and type of glandular defect) from over-development to failure to develop, from disease to certain deformities and from dwarfism to giantism. Underdevelopment of some parts, overdevelopment of others, certain mixed conditions, mental and physical, are the result of glandular unbalance.

Clinical Instructor Stanford University

Later, and during the time Dr. Wheeler was Clinical Instructor of Stanford University, he continued his experimental work on vertebrate animals, using guinea pigs, rabbits, dogs, goats and finally human beings, to demonstrate his theories of the influence upon the whole living mechanism (as well as of each gland upon every other) of the endocrine chain.

Experiments on Higher Animals

In higher animals the effect of glandular over-function, as well as under-function, was reproduced, in varying degrees, but in as definitely conclusive a manner as had been demonstrated in his experiments with the tadpoles and other lower animals.

Conclusions After Year's Experimentation

He persistently maintained his belief that many chronic diseases which had hitherto failed to yield to medical treatment, could be relieved by the proper method of supplying fresh glandular tissues to produce into the blood of the patient those secretions which, because of glandular defects, the ailing person's own organs were unable to manufacture.

Painless Gland Treatment Method Conceived

He decided that this treatment, to be successful in accomplishing its purpose, must be painless, that it would not be successful if fed by mouth in form of dried or chemically prepared or preserved tissues, that the tissues to be used for his purpose must be actively secreting glandular cells which would be assimilated into the body and secrete their vital element directly into the blood stream.

He did not approve of surgical interference with the patient's own glands by cutting and perhaps causing scars to form in good tissue in order to graft bits of glandular tissue into the tissue of the patient's glands. He therefore turned his attention to his present method, now greatly improved by the technique gained in experience in treating thousands of human patients with ailments almost as varied as there are different kinds of diseases.

This method is painless and has proven its value and lasting effects in the relief of many thousands of hopeless sufferers.

It consists in transplanting fresh tissues (from any of the ductless glands) under the skin into the fat layer of the abdomen.

Nature of Glandular Tissues and Secretions

It is a fact well known to science, that living tissues may be taken from a living body and that they will continue to live and produce new cells if placed, under proper conditions, in another living body which will supply them with the necessary blood nourishment and body heat.

Where the cells of such transplanted tissue are of the type (as in glandular tissue) which produces secretions, these cells will continue to produce those secretions which they supplied to the blood and body of the animal from which they were originally taken.

The thyroid gland produces a natural chemical secretion called thyroxin, the adrenal glands produce adrenalin, the pituitary gland produces pituitrin, etc. Whether these glands are taken from fish, fowl, quadruped or man, the secretion of each is distinctive and each produces its individual effects. In other words, thyroxin, from the thyroid gland of any vertebrate animal is chemically the same, and remains thyroxin whether it comes from the thyroid of animal or man. And this seems to be the fact with any of the other ductless glands.

Growth, Development Controlled by Endocrines

It is now a generally accepted fact that all living beings are physio-chemical organisms. Our nature, structure, development, nutrition, elimination, manner of life and death is controlled by the condition and function of our endocrine glands.

Experiments With Human Beings

With a conviction based upon this knowledge and verified by careful research and experiments upon animals, Dr. Wheeler began to put his findings to the test by treating human beings suffering from senility and a variety of other ills which he deemed due to glandular failure.

Dr. Wheeler's Pioneer Work at San Quentin

The results were convincing. In order to carry on his work in revitalizing the senile, or depleted human organism, he arranged to do research work in San Quentin Prison, where, in a comparatively short space of time, the transformation of ailing prisoners into healthy, [illegible] soon proved the efficacy of the [illegible] gland method.

"A Stock of Sp Parts for the H Machine"

Prof. Serge Voronoff, M.

Prof. Serge Voronoff, M. rector of Experimental and the Biological Labor the College of France, mous gland specialist, teacher of Endocrinology, in his latest book, "Con Life":

"The functioning of our depends directly on the activ our glands, and when this ing is interrupted the ca be sought, in the majority not in the condition of this organ, but in the state of the which regulates it."

"Wonderful to relate, glands have the same among all animals, same liquid and produce effects as in man. The secretion of a sheep's or glánd, is identical with man, and if a gland from these animals were in the body of a man, it the same influence as his gland of the functioning gans which it regulates. verse is equally true. If of a man were grafted of animal, that gland like the animal's own gland."

"The reason is that glands act solely by chemical substance which elaborate, and this chemically the same jects."

"With the exception caused by microbes, trouble of our organs are, cases, the consequence ances in the glandular Such being the case, it is of the malady that must be gated, and not the harm secondarily observed in affected."

"Through profound kno the effect produced by each of the territory over which of the functions it holds trol, we shall be able to into the innermost mecha our organism and often it* * *

"By the grafting of glands, to which may be cording to individual that of the thyroid the pituitary body, saved from old age and given the joy of dying age which is not at presen even by very old men."

After describing the seventy-three year old author who, seven years ceiving a transplanted "looks better than when sixty-three years of age," ronoff says:

HOOVER SPOILS POLITICAL PIE

[illegible] Gentry Amazed at President's Crust

[illegible] He Will Cook Up Own Campaign for 1932

Dr. Work's Exit Example of Recalcitrants' Panning

WASHINGTON, July 6. (Exclusive)—President Hoover has the Republican politicians guessing. They are running around in circles trying to find out who is bossing the politics of this administration and whether said administration is drifting politically, with the result that they are even less aware than before where they stand.

[illegible] as the politicians can [illegible] it, Mr. Hoover is his own [illegible] Moses. All who have aspired to that position have been reduced to the rank of advisory [illegible].

With Dr. Hubert Work retiring from the Republican national chairmanship as a result of his distaste for the role assigned him, it [illegible] dawns on the Republican [illegible] that Mr. Hoover intends to be his own national chairman. The successor of Dr. Work will be the [illegible] of the President and will be [illegible] to bring his rubber [illegible].

There is an ever-growing list of those who were prominently identified with the Hoover campaign for the Presidency, but who are no longer "in the picture." In addition to Dr. Work they include Senators [illegible], Republican, Idaho, and [illegible], Republican, Iowa; Mrs. [illegible] Walker Willebrandt, former Postmaster-General New, former [illegible] of Agriculture Jardine, [illegible] J. Donovan, former assistant to the Attorney-General, C. [illegible] Slemp, national committeeman for Virginia, and Col. Horace [illegible], Republican southern organizer.

The President has taken hold with no uncertain hand of the molding of the political policies which are to be relied on to effect his reelection in 1932 with a minimum of resistance. He aims to reduce duplication and bring about efficiency in political affairs, as he has into every other activity in which he engages from the art of government to the art of casting the trout fly.

They told him, the politicians did, that he was ignorant of the political art. But, viewing in retrospect the success attending his personal direction of his nomination and election campaigns, the President's ignorance of the art is no liability. Then, of course, there is a school of politicians who have come to the conclusion that, while Mr. Hoover may be unpracticed in their art, he is just about as ignorant of its principles as Calvin Coolidge, their great apostle. The Republican leaders began losing their bearings right after the election.

CLASH OVER SOUTH

Politicians were sharply divided from the first over the Hoover policy in the South. Those Republican leaders who are hoping to build up a white Republican party in the South applauded the action of the President in withdrawing patronage from the venal black and tan Republican machines in several Southern States. But leaders in Northern States having large colored population viewed the proceeding with alarm. Then along came the episode of Mrs. Hoover's tea, at which Mrs. Oscar DePriest, wife of the colored Illinois Representative, was a guest, putting the reverse English on the situation. Now, as a result of the revulsion of the South over this affair, the lily white Republicans are beset with fears of the futility of winning white Dixie to the G.O.P. and the northern leaders are reassured of the loyalty of the colored brethren.

The case of Dr. Work is pathetic. He does not seem to have had a moment of triumph since his first one when Mr. Hoover made him chairman of the Republican National Committee in perference to James W. Good, the outstanding figure in the Hoover canvass for the nomination. The understanding among the politicians was that Mr. Hoover felt that it would be rank ingratitude to pass over Dr. Work who had nursed the Hoover boom for months before it got into the open.

MERE FIGUREHEAD

In the election campaign Dr. Work was virtually only a figurehead. Mr. Hoover directed the campaign. He gave the orders. Dr. Work carried them out.

After the inauguration Dr. Work found himself still more of a figurehead. He found the Southern situation taken out of his hands entirely and confided to Postmaster-General Brown, the chief dispenser of Federal patronage in that region. Mr. Brown proceeded to put into effect the Hoover policies for regenerating the Republican party in the South. Dr. Work not only was not consulted but he did not approve many of the measures to this end that were adopted.

Then one day, one of the high officials of the national committee appeared in Dr. Work's office with what purported to be an edict for the disciplining of all Republican Senators who had voted for the deventure provision of the farm-relief bill as it was passed by the Senate.

DR. WORK INCENSED

According to this Ukase, the national committee was to put an administration candidate in the Republican primary next year against every Senator seeking renomination who voted for the debenture provision. This was to include Senator Borah, Republican, Idaho, "unless he speedily mends his way," according to the bearer of the reputed order.

Dr. Work was incensed. He said the national committee had no business interfering in party primaries. It is not for the committee, he argued, to pass judgment on Senators or to dictate nominations. The sole function of the committee is to elect candidates after they are nomination.

The national chairman then started out to investigate the origin of the order. There were immediate denials that the President had issued any such instructions. Shortly afterward Dr. Work resigned.

ERUDITION BALKS MARRIAGE

Girl Graduates Experience Difficulty Finding Men Who Are Culturally Companionable

CHICAGO, July 6. (AP)—The sweet girl graduate, model 1929, is encountering grave difficulties finding an interesting husband, observed Rev. Daniel A. Lord, S.J., of St. Louis, today. Father Lord is chairman of the Catholic Women's Sodality convention in session here.

The bachelor girl with her bachelor's degree is becoming too erudite for the college boy with his A.B., he said. Not that girls go to school any longer than their boy chums, Father Lord explained, but because cultural subjects are slighted in favor of commercial and professional studies in college courses for men.

"College women aren't marrying as much as they used to," he said, "partly because some of them want careers. But one of the fundamental reasons is the difficulty lots of them run against in finding college men whose conversation and companionship interest them.

"Not a few who do marry young gentlemen with diplomas find their husbands have little care for any mental exercise that is not linked up with a business or a profession."

NEW TARIFF COMPLETED BY MEXICO

Body Finishes Work of Revising Schedule After Two Years

MEXICO CITY, July 6. (Exclusive)—The Tariff Commission, which has been sitting for the past year, has now completed its labors.

The object of this commission was to examine the Mexican import and export tariff in detail, with a view to revising both the rates and the classification of commodities as might be found desirable.

The import duties and other taxes upon goods entering Mexico have hitherto comprised the following:

A consular fee of 10 per cent of the invoice value of the goods themselves (i.e. 10 per cent ad valorem.)

The duties based upon the customs tariff.

An additional 10 per cent of the customs duties, forming a surcharge allocated to the Federal government.

An additional 2 per cent of the customs duties, forming a surcharge allocated to the municipalities in which collections were made.

The new schedule of import duties has been so adjusted as to include the 10 per cent consular fee and the 10 per cent surcharge for Federal purposes. The surcharge for municipal purposes has not been absorbed, and has been increased from 2 to 3 per cent.

Thus, when the new tariff comes into force, the foreign exporter will not be called upon to pay the consular fee, and the importer will not pay the 10 per cent surcharge; at the same time, the total taxes payable upon imports will remain practically the same as before.

No copies of the new tariff are at present available to the public, neither is it known when its provisions will be brought into effect. Information upon these points will, however, be published in due course, it is stated.

LICENSE SUSPENDED IN GROUNDING OF BOAT

SAN FRANCISCO, July 6. (Exclusive)—Suspension of his master's license for ninety days was the punishment meted by steamship inspectors today to Capt. M. Enstrom, captain of the lumber steamer Hartwood, which went aground off Point Reyes, June 27, last, because the captain mistook the Drake's Bay gas buoy for the Point Reyes lighthouse. Capt. Enstrom pleaded guilty to inattention to duty.

SHIP EXPERTS BOARD ADVISED

Approval of Building Plans Recommended

Inspector-General Makes Radio Talk

Figures on Life Loss at Sea Given

WASHINGTON, July 6. (AP)—Establishment of a corps of experts to pass upon plans for ships before their construction was urged tonight by Dickerson N. Hoover, supervising inspector-general of the Commerce Department's steamboat inspection service, as a means of reducing the number of lives lost at sea.

In a radio talk over the National Broadcasting Company chain he said this practice is followed by the British Board of Trade and declared that if it is practicable to pass upon plans for buildings the same thing should hold true of ships.

LOW PERCENTAGE LOSS

"In the fiscal year 1928," he said, "more than 330,000,000 passengers were carried on steam vessels that are required by law to report the number of passengers carried. All of these vessels were inspected by our service.

"The passengers who lost their lives numbered eighty-one. For every passenger lost more than 4,000,000 were carried in perfect safety on the water.

NUMBER REDUCED

"And there is something else to be considered. Of the eighty-one persons who unfortunately lost their lives during 1928 we find that twenty were suicides and twenty were drowned accidentally; so at least half of the fatalities—and probably even more—had no relation to the question of efficient inspection.

"In that same year the number of lives directly saved by means of life-saving appliances required by our American law was 419."

Priests Depart From Mexico's Island Prison

MAZATLAN (Sin., Mex.) July 6. (AP)—More than 180 Catholic priests and many women, who were among the prisoners at Mexico's penal colony in the Tresmarias Islands because of participation during the past three years in the so-called religious rebellion, arrived here today by steamer.

The Mazatlan government provided immediately transportation to Mexico City.

Both local churches were turned back to ecclesiastical authorities at noon.

Ex-Californian Shot to Death

PHOENIX, July 6. (AP)—C. C. Rich, 57 years of age, formerly of Sawtelle, Cal., was shot to death in a watermelon stand here this morning by one of his partners, Ballard Day, 58, former plainclothes officer in Venice, Cal.

The men came to Phoenix last month and established a partnership in the stand with J. D. Smith, also of California.

Dry Officer Held in Raid Slaying

TECUMSEH (Okla.) July 6. (AP)—W. W. Thomason, Federal prohibition enforcement officer, surrendered to county officials late today and was placed in jail to await preliminary hearing next Tuesday on a charge of murder growing out of the death of James Harris.

Harris, with Oscar Lowery, was fatally wounded in a liquor raid here Thursday.

NORTHERN FIRES UNDER CONTROL

Patrols Keep Busy, However, to Bar New Outbreaks

Some Fears Still Felt for Marin County Blazes

Mill Valley Lays Its Plans for Future Protection

SAN FRANCISCO, July 6. (Exclusive)—Northern California's fire situation is completely in hand tonight, according to reports to forestry officials and activity has turned to patrolling danger zones to guard against new outbreaks.

Mill Valley, Marin county, launched plans for the rebuilding of more than 100 homes destroyed by deciding at a mass meeting to have the Town Council appoint a committee of civic leaders to confer with State and government forestry and fire-prevention experts on plans for reconstruction and more adequate protection in the future. Additional fire breaks are held essential and it is believed the felling of eucalyptus and bay trees in the territory will eliminate a constant source of danger because of their inflammability.

SOME SMALL FIRES

Meanwhile, orders were issued to stop all sightseers for the time being. Small fires still dot the region. A north wind and a careless cigarette or cigar easily might start a new conflagration, it is said, and officials have determined not to take the chance. The only exception to the order, aside from persons officially engaged, is for those traveling over the Mt. Tamalpais and Muir Woods Railroad. Sightseers may use the railroad under strict surveillance and a peremptory mandate against smoking. The two miles of track destroyed have been repaired.

Thirty pump tanks, which are filled either with water or chemicals, have been placed in the hands of patrol groups and they are engaged in extinguishing all small blazes.

PLUNDERING GOES ON

Reports of random plundering persist. Police charge it mainly to souvenir hunters. Orders were issued to stop any and all persons seen acting suspiciously and, in extreme cases, to shoot.

Of three fires elsewhere in northern and central districts two have been extinguished and reports of the third are vague.

A team of horses, two homes and several barns are said to have been burned in a 1500-acre blaze near Academy in Fresno county, before it was extinguished. Another fire along the Kings River in Fresno county is said to have been beaten out after burning 9600 acres.

A blaze has been reported at Coarse Gold, Madera county, but no details have been given.

Fog helped to control the Santa Cruz Mountain fires and the blaze in the Payne Creek region of Tehama county is reported out.

CHINESE REND HUMAN FLESH

Cannibalism Now Prevails in Many Provinces Where Appalling Famine Grips Hordes

BOSTON, July 6. (AP)—Reports of appalling conditions caused by famine in the Shensi, Suiguan, Kansu, Honan, Tehsien and Tien-tsin districts of China have been received by the American board of commissioners for foreign missions. Conditions are so terrible, missionaries have reported, that several cases of cannibalism have been authenticated.

Rev. Earle H. Ballou reported that only a few hundred miles west of Tien-tsin where he is stationed, the famine is so great that parents dare not let their children out on the streets for fear they will be stolen and sold, or actually eaten.

To assist in relief work the board has transferred Rev. Stephen C. Peabody of Appleton, Wis., to Yulinfu, Northern Shensi, to relieve Elmer W. Galt of Shenandoah, Iowa. Mr. Peabody has been in Peking since 1924. Both men have been released by the board to assist in relief work.

Failure of the spring crop and the extreme dryness which prevents planting for the fall in Southern Shensi means, according to Dr. E. T. Watson of Northfield Minn., head of the American Board Hospital in Fenchow, that there will be no food grown in that area until the spring of 1930.

Rev. Phillip D. Nutton, reporting on conditions in Shensi, Suiguan, Kansu, Honan and elsewhere, said, "The people are dying by the hundreds and thousands now, and the situation will grow worse until crops are harvested."

London Beauties Act as Cappers for Stock Firms

LONDON, July 6. (AP)—Slim, slick, beautiful ladies, who dance divinely, have established a new profession in London.

Seemingly an innocent beauty in chiffon swinging over the floor in the arms of an enraptured partner, one of these women will break out with the latest stock exchange quotations or while sitting out a dance will give sage advice on the wisest market buys.

For these clever women work on commission in stock brokers' offices. In a whirl of country house parties, town dances and dinner parties their task is to persuade men with money that a certain house should be intrusted with handling their investments.

"Sometimes one makes £100 a week," one of them confessed, "but sometimes also one has to wait three months before getting a good order."

Church Goes to Golf Course

HUTCHINSON (Kan.) July 6. (AP) If you can't get the golfer to church take the church to the golfer. That is the motto of Hutchinson's country club.

The management has decided to evangelize Sunday golfing by inviting local ministers to conduct afternoon services on the links. Twenty-minute services are to be held.

H. C. Ledyard, minister of the Hutchinson Universalist Church, was the first to address a golfing congregation. He contended that preaching on the golf links was as orthodox as preaching to a congregation from pulpits.

GOLDEN RULE DAY SET FOR DECEMBER 8

Children Over Entire World Will Benefit by Gifts

NEW YORK, July 6. (Exclusive) The newly incorporated Golden Rule Foundation has announced that December 8 had been chosen as the date for the international observance of Golden Rule Sunday.

This year's observance of Golden Rule Sunday will be the seventh annual one and will be international in its scope. While heretofore it has been observed for the benefit of the children of the Near East, this year the gifts received will be used for underprivileged children wherever they may be found in the world.

A survey committee, of which Bishop Francis J. McConnell is chairman, is at work, making a thorough study of places where funds are most needed, with which to do constructive child welfare work. A preliminary report of the committee suggests that special attention be given during the coming year to child welfare in China and the United States, allowing the donor, if he chooses, to designate the type of work and institution to which or through which he wishes to contribute. Funds will be administered through existing channels, without expense of administration so far as the Golden Rule Foundation is concerned, according to Charles V. Vickrey, executive vice-president of the ogranization.

GIRL WINS BALM FROM HARDINGE

Jury Gives Miss Livingston Sum of $25,000

Tulsa Divorcee Regards it as Vindication

Aged Millionaire Absent as Panel Reports

CHICAGO, July 6. (AP)—Miss Anne Livingston, Tulsa divorcee, tonight was awarded $25,000 damages from Franklin Hardinge, wealthy oil burner manufacturer, whom she sued for $250,000, charging breach of promise.

Miss Livingston was in the courtroom with her attorney when the verdict was read, but Hardinge was not present. He was, however, represented by counsel.

"I've been vindicated," was the only statement Miss Livingston would make and Hardinge could not be reached for comment. Franklin Hardinge, Jr., son of the aged defendant, was present, but declined to talk. Whether either side will appeal from the verdict was not determined immediately.

Miss Livingston sued the wealthy Chicagoan for $250,000, asserting she came to Chicago from Tulsa to marry him, and that he left her a few days before the wedding without even as much as an explanation.

Hardinge accused her of relations with Charles Nax, St. Louis advertising man, during the time she was engaged; of hiding facts from him concerning her divorce from Robert Puderbaugh and refusing to sign a prenuptial agreement under which she would have received $100,000 in lieu of dower rights.

Turkey Blames Graft for High Cost of Living

ANGORA (Turkey) July 6. (AP)—The high cost of baksheesh, Turkish economists have just declared, is an important factor in the cost of living in Turkey today, the necessities of life having soared to such dizzy prices during the past few years that the government has summoned its experts to find a remedy.

One expert reports that in order to get merchandise out of the Turkish customs the importer is forced to distribute among officials a sum averaging 30 per cent of the imported goods' value, money which eventually comes out of the consumers' pocket.

A battle against baksheesh must be waged, the report concludes, before the government can check the soaring cost of living, which has already reached an increase of more than 2000 per cent as compared with prewar prices.

PHILIPPINE 'SIAMESE' PAIR GIVEN RIGHT TO MARRY

MANILA, July 6. (AP)—Lucio and Simplicio Godino, 21 years of age, Philippine "Siamese" twins, announced today their intention of marrying Natividad and Victorina Matos, sisters, Tuesday, despite official opposition. After marrying, they said, they will go to the United States to enter vaudeville.

A license clerk's ruling that the twins are not single because they are joined together, was overruled by the Philippine Department of Justice, and they will be granted a license to marry. The clerk denied them licenses a few days ago, saying that while in one sense they are single because unmarried, in a larger sense they are not single because of the physical tie which binds them. The clerk held that they are one individual with a dual personality, and that their marriage would result in that one individual having two wives.

As a result of the decision of the Department of Justice, permission to wed probably will be granted Tuesday.

The twins are joined at the base of their spines. The tie is flexible and they are able to get around easily, although always back to back.

COMMUNITY CALLED AID TO TEACHER

Educator Cites How People of Section Can Render Help

BY FRANK CODY

(President Department of Superintendence, National Education Association)

WASHINGTON, July 6 (AP)—The people of a community can help their superintendent of schools first by proposing what purposes should be served through the educational system and then by leaving to the superintendent and his staff the question of how to secure the desired ends.

The public determines, in the last analysis, what changes are to be made in the boys and girls who attend the schools. But there are many publics, or at least many groups of citizens with different interests and needs.

Every community has its bankers, its plumbers, its housewives, its salesmen, its machinists, its farmers. Each group has particular needs which should be met by the schools. If these needs are not now met, the group is responsible for expressing them to the superintendent.

The various groups should recognize, of course, that education must be a unified process. The members of each group need to consider the good of the whole group higher than that of any individual group. Accordingly, the superintendent must weigh the needs of the different special groups with the needs of the general public. It is his task to arrive at a final integration of the purposes of the school.

After the goals of the school have been set, on the basis of the needs of the public, the superintendent expects to be free to choose or devise the best ways of attaining these goals. Teaching is both an art and a science.

The situation is not unlike that in the industrial field. The public proposes a certain standard for automobile tires, for example. The standard may be expressed as long life, such as an average wear of 25,000 miles.

But the public then makes no attempt to tell the tire-maker how to make tires which will last longer. Similarily, in education, the superintendent of schools expects the public to state its wants, but then to permit the superintendent to decide on the details of organization and method which will satisfy these wants.

MUSEUM TO AID PARKS TOURISTS

Birds, Mammals Native to Yellowstone Placed on Exhibition

YELLOWSTONE PARK (Wyo.) July. 6. (Exclusive)—A collection of all kinds of birds and smaller mammals native to the Yellowstone National Park, will be placed in the museum at Mammoth Hot Springs to aid tourists in the appreciation of the park's wonders and wild life.

The enlarging of the collections in the museums of the Yellowstone is in line with the movement which is under way for the establishment of better museum facilities in the national playgrounds, where visitors may go for more careful instruction and study of the animals, birds and wonders of the park. The movement has already resulted in the completion and dedication of a museum of hydrothermal phenomena at Old Faithful, the construction being made possible by the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial Foundation through the American Museum Association.

Efforts are being directed toward the collection of study groups and life history groups of the mammals and birds of the Yellowstone, and work is progressing rapidly along those lines. Two taxidermists are kept busy at the Mammoth museum, and during the first five weeks the taxidermist work has been going on, forty-five pieces and twenty-five specimens have been prepared for the museum.

ALLEN TOLD HE'S WRONG ON WITCHES

They Might Have Been Hanged or Pressed, but Never Burned

WASHINGTON, July 6. (AP)—"Witch burners" never existed among the Colonial fathers in America, a meticulous reader of the Congressional Record has informed Senator Henry J. Allen of Kansas.

In a speech on the reapportionment bill Senator Allen described the American population at the time of the Federal convention of 1787 as 3,200,000 freemen, 800,000 slaves and "some witch burners." J. H. Crooker of Kansas City, Mo., wrote to correct the Senator on that point.

"As a matter of fact," Crooker wrote, "no person ever was burned in New England for witchcraft or anywhere else in America."

A perusal of historical data convinced the Kansas Senator that his own early ideas of Colonial witch burning were founded on fiction—alleged witches were hanged on numerous occasions, and one witch was pressed to death, but no record could be found of a witch burning in America.

Marital Rifts in Italy Show Steady Gains

ROME, July 6. (AP)—Judicial separations—for divorce as known in the United States does not exist in Italy—showed a considerable increase between 1923 and 1926, the latter being the last year for which complete statistics are available.

In 1923 only 3648 couples brought their complaints before the tribunals and received official sanction for living apart. The next year saw 3745 winning such separations. In 1925 the number had jumped to 3853 and to 4077 in 1926.

Milan, the industrial center of the north, produced 845 of these court actions in 1926, whereas Rome counted only 358. Naples accounted for 376 in the same year, and Venice for 26[illegible].

The region where marital infelicity seems less prevalent than any other is Calabria. The courts of its main judicial seat, Catanzaro, granted only twenty-two separation decrees in 1926 against, however, eighty-two in the previous year.

Shrine Hospital Group Started in Two Cottages

ATLANTA, July 6. (AP)—Two little cottages on the outskirts of Atlanta, built to house and cure deformed children, were the nucleus of a vast Shrine hospital chain which stretches from Philadelphia to Honolulu and from Shreveport, La., to Montreal.

This striking growth was revealed here by Forrest Adair, Atlanta trustee of the Shriners' hospitals and vice-president of the local Scottish Rite hospital, in making public the annual report of the board of trustees of the Shriners' institutions.

BOY MURDERED AT WILD PARTY

Lake Worth in Texas Scene of Tragic "Celebration"

Victim Shot and Clubbed in Darkened Camp House

Two Accused After Couples Rush Away from Site

FORT WORTH (Tex.) July 6. (AP) Death put an abrupt ending to a post-holiday party of twenty young men and women on Lake Worth near here, when 18-year-old Audie Fentress was shot and clubbed to death as the tragic climax to an evening's riotous celebration in which several members of the party became intoxicated.

Philo Hopper and Cecil Odneal have been charged with murder but both deny connection with Fentress's death, and Odneal insists he was the only person in the party who attempted to save the boy's life.

Odneal said after the party arrived at a Lake Worth camp several couples went inside the camp house. He said he heard a shot and, borrowing matches, he examined the body of Fentress. The boy had been shot once through the head and beaten on the head.

Odneal said at the sound of the shot everyone in the party save himself fled and that he summoned an ambulance and remained until police arrived.

Ice Cream Aids Scientists' Work on Ice Machines

CAMBRIDGE (Mass.) July 6. (AP) Ice cream indirectly has done a good turn for scientific research.

The need of this confection for refrigeration has caused recently a rapid increase in commercial production of "dry ice," which is solid carbon dioxide, a substance of great usefulness in laboratories, heretofore unavailable to most scientists.

Now machines are made for the ice cream trade which produce quickly a handful of the snow-white stuff, so cold its contact with flesh leaves the effect of a burn.

"The commercial quantity production of this dry ice is a boon to research," says Dr. James P. Norris, director of the research laboratory of Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "It is an instance of applied science helping pure science."

POWER PERMIT EMBARGO URGED

Upper Basin States Will be Asked to Unite

Colorado Representative Seeks Federal Ban

Attorney-General Lining Up River Sentiment

DENVER, July 6. (AP)—Upper basin States of the Colorado River will be asked to join in an effort being waged by Representative Taylor to obtain a temporary embargo on all power permits along the Colorado River. Representative Taylor contends that the Federal Trade Commission should withhold issuance of all such permits until a definite distribution program is agreed upon which will protect all States in the basin.

Robert E. Winbourn, Colorado's Attorney-General, will be the intermediary for obtaining from the four upper-basin States a composite opinion as to the policy they believe the United States government should pursue in the matter, it was disclosed today. The four States usually are of one accord in their attitude on river development matters.

While the States drained by the river were waiting for the expiration of the time limit set for ratification of the seven-State compact under the terms of the Boulder Dam bill, a temporary embargo existed against the issuance of power permits. When the six-State compact became effective the embargo automatically was raised.

In a letter to Mr. Winbourn, Mr. Taylor expressed apprehension over the present situation, pointing out that it might be "a long time" before work is commenced on the Boulder Dam, and that "it will seriously jeopardize and complicate the rights of all seven States if any permits are granted on the river or its tributaries, except the Gila, before construction is commenced."

Mr. Taylor has presented the matter to President Hoover.

Parts of Two States Flooded

ST. JOSEPH (Mo.) July 6. (AP)—Heavy rains in Southwestern Iowa and Northwestern Missouri last night and today sent small streams out of their banks, causing much damage to crops.

Highways have been made impassable and rail service on the Burlington and Wabash railroads has been badly disrupted, due to washouts.

Southern Cross Lands in Persia

BUNDER ABBAS (Persia) July 6. (AP)—Capt. Charles Kingsford-Smith and three companions arrived here at noon today from Karachi, British India, in their airplane, the Southern Cross. The distance is about 700 miles.

The men are flying from Sydney, N. S. W., to London.

NEW WATER WAR STARTS

Seventeen Suits Filed Over Kings and San Joaquin River Rights; $1,207,213 Damages Sought

FRESNO, July 6.—Opening a new phase of long-standing litigation over riparian ownership to waters of the Kings and San Joaquin rivers, seventeen suits were filed here today by water users of the Tranquillity and James ranch districts of Fresno county, seeking to establish their right to certain quantities of water from the streams, and demanding damages in excess of $1,200,000 for asserted past infringement of the rights of the plaintiffs.

Separate suits against the Southern California Edison Company, San Joaquin Light and Power Corporation, Miller & Lux, Firebaugh Canal Company, and San Joaquin and Kings River Canal and Irrigation Company were filed by fifty landowners of the Tranquillity Irrigation District by J. S. Potts, treasurer of the district.

INJUNCTION ASKED

In each instance damages are sought for asserted infringement of the riparian rights of the landowners, the aggregate sum sought being estimated at in excess of $600,000. Each of the landowners also seeks issuance of an injunction to restrain each of the defendants from further interference with the normal flow of the streams in any way which would prevent the landowners from receiving their rightful volume of the water.

Other defendants named in the Tranquillity suit include Gravelly Ford Canal Company, alias Canal Company and Chowchilla Ranch Company.

The plaintiffs set up a claim to 100 second feet of water when the stream flow is 1360 second feet at the headgate of the San Joaquin and Kings River canal, and to all the flow of Fresno Slough when there are 760 second feet flowing in Kings River. They also ask an injunction prohibiting the impounding or diversion of water above their lands when the flow is not equal to the volume at which they contend they are entitled to divert water.

MILLER & LUX SUED

In another series of actions Herman Janss and H. W. Tuttle, as trustees for Reclamation District 1606, the James Irrigation District, seek an aggregate of $1,207,213 in damages from Miller & Lux, San Joaquin Power and the Firebaugh Canal Company on virtually the same grounds.

A third series of suits, three in number, is brought against San Joaquin Power, Southern California Edison and the San Joaquin and Kings River Canal and Irrigation Company for asserted interference with riparian rights of the estate of Joe Silveria, who died in 1927. It is asserted that for the past three years the defendant corporations have been impounding and diverting water of the rivers to the detriment of the Silveria estate, owners of eighty acres of asserted riparian lands.

Bank Robbed of $50,000 in Cash

DAUPHIN (Pa.) July 6. (AP)—Three men robbed the Dauphin National Bank here today of $50,000 in cash after blackjacking Cashier Harold F. Cobaugh as he was opening the bank for business.

Klan Removes Headquarters From Capital

WASHINGTON, July 6. (AP)—The Washington Post today says "the Ku Klux Klan has abandoned Washington as a national headquarters and is now back in Atlanta, Ga., the place of its birth."

Two reasons are given for the transfer. One official is quoted as explaining that the national headquarters was moved to Washington because this was believed to be the best place to direct its campaign against the Presidential candidacy of Alfred E. Smith.

"Well, the campaign is over now," he is quoted as saying. "Will we move back again? That may depend on who the candidates are."

The other reason ascribed is that "the Klan has just erected two new buildings in Atlanta, one a factory where the regalia is turned out, and the other an administrative building for the officials and clerks of the organization."

Traveler Cites Hunger Abroad

NEW YORK, July 6. (AP)—The amount of sickness due to malnutrition in Central Europe and the Balkans is "appalling," said Dr. J. M. Waugh of Cleveland, noted eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, who returned on the liner Volendam today from a tour of that region.

Malnutrition in Vienna has become so serious, Dr. Waugh asserted, that if relief is not afforded soon the people, hungry and depressed, will become easy converts to the communistic doctrines of Russia, and political upheavals are bound to result.

Wilbur Outlines Indian Policies

KLAMATH FALLS (Or.) July 6. (AP)—Secretary Wilbur of the Interior Depatment declared today that the new policy of the Indian Bureau contemplated the complete breaking up of reservation life as soon as it is possible to train the young Indian to handle his affairs.

He conferred with a number of groups concerning local tribal affairs before continuing his tour of inspection of Interior Department projects in the West.

PAIR HURT IN PLANE CRASH

Kern County Craft Wrecked Near Buttonwillow

County Airport Pilot and Student in Hospital

Motor Trouble Reported as Cause of Accident

BUTTONWILLOW, July 6.—When an Eagle Rock biplane crashed to the ground near here this afternoon, E. L. McIntyre, Kern County Airport pilot, and Cecil Cook of Bakersfield, advanced student flyer, were seriously injured. The accident was said to have been caused by motor trouble.

The ship belonged to the Golden State Airways and when word of the crash was received at the airport, Phil Markle, Golden State manager; Harold Griffis, airport manager, and several others hopped off immediately for the scene. Witnesses of the accident rushed the injured men to the County Hospital at Bakersfield.

Neither of the men was able to talk, hospital attendants said. The pilot has an injured back, fractured ankle and is in a semiconscious condition. Cook had not regained consciousness at a late hour. He has a fractured shoulder blade, sprained back, broken wrist and probable internal injuries.

The ship is reported to be a total loss. McIntyre holds a United States Department of Commerce limited commercial pilot's license and has been flying about a year. Cook holds a private pilot's license.

Rainier Deaths Inquiry Planned

PARADISE INN (Wash.) July 6. (AP)—While the Northwest's most competent mountain climbers were on their way up Mt. Rainier today in a final effort to recover the body of Forrest Greathouse, Maj. O. A. Tomlinson, superintendent of Rainier National Park, announced plans for an investigation of Tuesday's tragedy which cost two lives.

The searchers expected to reach Camp Muir tonight and to take up the search for the body of Greathouse early tomorrow.

Huge Trans-Sea Plane Finished

GENEVA, July 6. (Exclusive)—A new airship capable of carrying 100 passengers was completed yesterday by the Dornier factory at Rorschtch, on the Swiss side of Lake Constance, after two years of work.

The airship is driven by twelve motors with a combined force of 6000 horsepower, capable of an average speed of 200 kilometers per hour. Next week above Lake Constance the first trials will be made of the airship, which is destined to furnish regular passenger and mail service between Europe and America.

Grand Old Party Pachyderm 75 But Going Strong

Republicans at Jackson Hear Law Enforcement Pleas

Founding Celebrated With Impressive Program

JACKSON (Mich.) July 6. (AP)—In this city, named after a Democratic President of the United States, the Republican "who's who" of Michigan today celebrated the founding of the Grand Old Party seventy-five years ago under the oaks.

While party leaders of the State, including Senator Vandenberg, Gov. Green and Representative Michener, declared in no uncertain terms that the party was founded "under the Jackson oaks and nowhere else," Dr. Hubert Work, chairman of the National Republican Committee, and Secretary of Agriculture Hyde pleaded for law enforcement and respect for the Constitution, laying special emphasis on the Eighteenth Amendment.

PROHIBITION PRAISED

Dr. Work declared in his address that prohibition is a "law to be enforced because it is deemed essential to economic prosperity and good morals by our silent citizens who stabilize our scheme of government and control us."

"Of the issues of the last campaign only those of protection, prosperity and prohibition seem likely to appear," Dr. Work said. "Protection because it is fundamental to prosperity; prosperity because it is essential to human progress; prohibition because it is a law to be enforced."

BACKED BY HYDE

Dr. Work was seconded on his stand on the liquor question by Secretary Hyde.

"Every man has a right to an opinion as to the desirability of the Eighteenth Amendment," the Secretary asserted. "Equally he has an undoubted right to agitate for its repeal. But no man has a right to violate the Constitution nor to advocate its violation. The validity of constitutional government is the issue. The amendment is now, by all the rules of law, sacredly obligatory upon all."

SECRETS OF ETRURIA ENTOMBED WITH SAVANT

VENICE (Italy) July 6. (AP)—The secret of Etruria's lost language was carried to the tomb today by Prof. Alfredo Trombetti, who died of a heart attack while bathing off Lido.

Last April the professor, most famous of Italy's linguistic scholars, announced he was at last about to penetrate the veil of mystery which has shrouded the Etruscan tongue.

Spurred by a government money grant as aid, he had made sure progress in deciphering inscriptions of the ancient pre-Roman people and comparing them with the Latin. He thought finally he was on the verge of discovering the key, so to be able to shed light on the Etruscan racial origins and reconstruct at least some part of their lost literature.

He kept his peace and fellow-Etruscan students never knew just what he had in mind. The work represented more than thirty years labor to him and he wished to reveal the fruit of his investigations only when they were complete, baring finally the secrets of the strange race, apparently neither Aryan nor Semitic, to whom the Romans owed so much.

Bar of Steel Removed From Child's Brain

ULDUTH (Minn.) July 6. (AP)—A rubber-encased steel handle of an automobile door an inch and a half long and a half-inch wide was removed from the brain of 10-year-old Gertrude Krilling here today.

The girl was injured Thursday when she ran into the side of a moving automobile. The handle broke off, going into the girl's left temple. She remained conscious up to the time of her operation. Physicians reported her condition as favorable.

MEXICO CITY, July 6. (AP)—Gen. P. Elias Calles has postponed the date of his departure for a European trip for at least several days and possibly until the end of July, newspaper reports said tonight.

Gen. Calles had intended to leave tomorrow. The Mexico City press said he was going abroad to seek a cure for illness caused by physical strain in his recent campaign against the Mexican insurgents.

CLOSING BANKS TOPPLE OTHERS

Two More in Birmingham Pull Down Shades

Latest Suspension Due to Run, Say Owners

One Official Held Drowned, Another Shot, Third Ill

BIRMINGHAM (Ala.) July 6. (AP) Affairs of two banks which closed today, making a total of four banking institutions which have failed to open in the Birmingham district within the past ten days, are under investigation of State banking officials tonight.

Meanwhile searching parties are redoubling their efforts to find the body of Dr. A. W. Bell, president of the Woodlawn Savings Bank, one of the institutions which closed today. Dr. Bell was drowned this morning in the Coosa River near Vincent, Ala. He was reported to have gone in swimming with a party of friends shortly after he arrived at his country place for the week-end.

RUN PRECIPITATED

The report of the closing of the Woodlawn bank caused a run on the Southside Bank, which prompted officials to order its doors closed. Officials of the Southside Bank said the closing is temporary and that the bank will reopen for business Monday morning.

As the report spread throughout the district mild runs started at other banks. The runs were halted in most instances when officials announced that all depositors wishing to withdraw their funds would be paid promptly.

Judge C. E. Thomas, State Superintendent of Banks, arrived tonight from Montgomery to take charge of the banking situation here. He attributed the closing of the Woodlawn and Southside banks today to runs precipitated by the closing of two banks last week, the City Bank and Trust Company and the Avondale Bank and Savings Company. J. B. Lassiter, president of both institutions, is in a New York hospital, where he collapsed after receiving news of the closing of the banks.

ACCIDENT EPIDEMIC

John R. Wallace, cashier of the Avondale Bank and Savings Company, died the day before the bank closed from a bullet through his abdomen, said by members of his family to have been accidentally inflicted when a pistol he was handling dropped to the floor and discharged. Coroner Russum rendered a verdict of accidental death.

Plans for reorganization and reopening of the City Bank and Trust Company were completed today and Roderick Beddow, member of the board of directors and attorney for the institution, announced that more than $125,000 of the $250,000 stock proposed for the reorganized bank had been subscribed. He said the bank probably would reopen early next week.

Southside and Woodlawn banks were capitalized at $50,000. The City Bank had a capital of $500,000 and the Avondale bank $25,000.

LOVE OR NOT SHE MUST PAY

Court Rules Lost Affection Has Nothing to Do With Mate's Funeral Charge

MILWAUKEE, July 7. (Exclusive)—Because she did not love her husband, she should not be forced to pay for his funeral, Mrs. Emma Bellow declared in Judge M. F. Blensky's court here. The judge thought otherwise and awarded a judgment of $100 to George H. Long, Kansas City, Mo., undertaker. Mr. Bellows, it developed, died here and his body was shipped to Kansas City for burial. The widow did not accompany the body.

Was Forced to Quit After 38 Years Service

Bell Telephone Veteran Forced By Ill Health To Quit. Gains 15 Pounds. Now Well.

William W. Patterson, of 4282 35th St., San Diego, served the Bell Telephone Co. for 38 years, retiring on a pension in 1923. His father before him served the same concern when it was known as the Bell Telegraph Co., before they started the use of phones. Mr. Patterson's record is a long and enviable one. He is a Mason and a member of the Baptist Church. To the Sargon representative he recently made the following remarkable statement:

WILLIAM W. PATTERSON

"I was in such poor health six years ago that physicians advised me to quit work entirely. I resigned my position with the Bell Telephone Co., in Chicago and came West.

"I had suffered for 15 years with stomach trouble. I have been in five hospitals for examination and twice for X-Ray of the Stomach. About the only things I could retain were milk and the very lightest of foods. And even then I suffered terrible stomach distress after eating. My skin was yellowish and I was always constipated and bilious. At times I was so weak I could hardly stand. I had neuritis pains from head to foot. Headaches made my days and nights miserable, and continual constipation added to my troubles.

"Then, when all treatments and medicines failed, I started the Sargon treatment without much hope of its helping me, and I got the surprise of my life. In a few words—I am a well man. Only last night I ate a big steak, and I honestly believe if I had done this a few weeks ago it would have killed me. I never have the slightest trace of stomach trouble now. I sleep fine and get up rested and refreshed. And every pain of neuritis is gone. I have gained fifteen pounds and am strong and well and full of pep as I have ever been in my life. I just feel like a new man all over.

"Sargon Soft Mass Pills ended every bit of my constipation and biliousness. My headaches are gone, my color is good, and I can never say enough for this wonderful treatment."

Hundreds of Los Angeles people are daily consulting the special Sargon representative at the Owl Drug Store, 6th & Broadway, to learn first hand the amazing facts about this revolutionary new medicine. Sargon may also be obtained at all Owl Drug Stores in Los Angeles and other cities.—[Advertisement.]

LONDONERS INSISTENT ON MEETING

Note to Briand Presses Claim for Conference to Launch Young Plan

PARIS, July 6. (AP)—The British government in a note handed to Foreign Minister Briand by Ambassador Sir William Tyrrell tonight maintained its insistence that the conference of the powers to put the Young reparations plan into operation be held in London.

The note omitted precise indications as to the procedure favored by England, but it is understood to oppose the French plan for a preliminary conference of the powers to be followed by a meeting of experts and ultimately approved by another conference.

The British seem to agree with the French that the conference cannot meet before the beginning of August.

English Church Court Releases Repentant Man

CAMBRIDGE (Eng.) July 6. (AP)—John Stevens, wealthy Cambridge landowner, who was imprisoned in Bedford Jail by the Ecclesiastical Court at Ely for refusing to repair the Church of St. Edmund, standing on his property, was ordered released by the church court today.

Stevens has made an affidavit admitting that he is legally liable for the repairs to the church and regretting that he has resisted proceedings against him. He also has signed an undertaking to carry out the repairs and to pay the costs of the court proceedings.

The case stirred unusual interest in England because few people knew that the Church of England in some instances has the power to send persons to prison without recourse to the ordinary civil courts.

Fogarty, Dead, Blame Target in Land Fraud

CHICAGO, July 6. (AP)—Blame for an asserted $60,000 land fraud has been placed on Edward J. Fogarty, nationally known prison authority, who shot himself to death a month ago.

A 65-year-old widow, Mrs. Lydia Norman of Chicago, filed suit in the Federal Court at Waycross, Ga., a week ago demanding an accounting of Fogarty's executors. Seventeen hundred acres of fertile Georgia land, valued at approximately $60,000 was the property involved.

A series of contracts brought the price of the land lower and lower and made her interest checks less and less, she says.

COOL, PLEASANT ROOMS

even when it's 90° outside!

NO more suffering from summer heat for the families of wise home-owners. For nowadays they live in houses insulated with Celotex — houses that are cool and pleasant even when it's 90° outside.

Celotex shuts out scorching sun's rays during summer months. Through other seasons it protects you from chill, dampness and cold . . . keeps your home at a healthful, comfortable temperature all year 'round.

As a heat-stop, an inch of Celotex is as effective as 3 inches of wood, 8 inches of plaster board, 12 inches of brick or 25 inches of concrete.

Celotex is the only insulation made from the long, tough fibres of cane. It comes in big, strong boards, 4 feet wide, 7 to 12 feet long and 7/16 of an inch thick. Also made "double-thick"—7/8 inch.

When used on the outside of houses, as sheathing, Celotex adds structural strength . . . makes walls tight and permanent.

And on inside walls and ceilings, you can obtain finer, smoother plastered surfaces with Celotex Lath. This better lath, 18 inches by 48 inches and 7/16 of an inch thick (also made "double-thick" —7/8 inch), is especially designed to reinforce against plaster cracks and to eliminate disfiguring lath marks on any of your interiors.

GERMANY STARTS DRIVE TO SMASH PACT PLEDGES

Campaign Against "War Guilt" to Reopen Many Issues Settled by Versailles Treaty

BY EUGENE J. YOUNG

NEW YORK, July 6. (Exclusive)—When the Germans signed the Treaty of Versailles, a little over ten years ago, they were compelled to admit their responsibility for the World War. Definite clauses were inserted by the Allies as the foundation for the punishment visited on Germany in the various articles of the treaty.

In the preamble it was set forth that the war "originated in the declaration of war by Austria-Hungary on July 28, 1914, against Serbia, the declaration of war by Germany against Russia on August 1, 1914, and against France on August 3, and in the invasion of Belgium."

In Article 231 the declaration was made even more specific. "The Allied and Associated Governments affirm and Germany accepts," it says, "the responsibility of Germany and her allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the Allied and Associated Governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed upon them by the aggression of Germany and her allies."

Because of that guilt Germany was compelled to assume the great burden of reparations, she was forbidden to have a navy or army, the Rhineland was neutralized, she was deprived of territories in Central Europe and of her colonies and she was subjected to many trade discriminations both within and without her borders.

That is the reason why there has been a sudden rising in Germany—among her friends in other lands—of a new ebullition over the question of war guilt. There has been a day of mourning in Germany on the anniversary of the signing of the Versailles Treaty; there have been demonstrations in favor of a free Rhineland; and the government has issued a manifesto in which it says, "We know we are in agreement with all Germans in rejecting the assertion that Germany was responsible for the World War."

There is nothing new in this attitude. From the time the Versailles Treaty was signed there has been a repudiation by Germany of war guilt and a most elaborate attempt, through analysis of documents and facts, to establish the contrary. Significance lies in the reason for this fresh outburst. Germany's financial troubles are on the way to final settlement. She has gained, through the Young plan, an arrangement of the reparation debt which she can meet without trouble, even if she does not get further reductions in the future. So now she is free to devote herself to political rehabilitation. In the political conferences that follow acceptance of the Young plan and in the coming meeting of the League of Nations Assembly in September she will have a chance to raise political questions.

It is becoming evident that she intends to raise the issue of revision of the Versailles Treaty as the crux of her political campaign.

[illegible] NOTE HEARD

For the last year Germany has been cautious in her attitude. It was necessary for her to get the reparation plan moved out of the way before she had to pay the huge annuities prescribed; and necessary to get a final settlement which would permit the flotation of new loans in the American and other markets to provide ready funds. So Germany was on the defensive. It made no pressures but did not offer [illegible].

Anyone who has been following debates in the Reichstag and articles in the German press and elsewhere saw there was a change immediately the Young plan was adopted by the experts in Paris. The defensive battle had been won, with the cutting down of the reparation bill, the opportunity presented itself to force further concessions from the nations which had accepted the Young settlement, and the campaign to do so got under way with precision, as though it had been a war plan prepared by the general staff.

NOT CRITICISM

I am not setting this down in criticism of the Germans—for they are simply playing the old European game of diplomacy against those who are using old diplomatic methods against them—and I know something about the methods of that game before, during and after the war to attempt to lay guilt on Germany or its government. I am dealing with facts, as these facts and statesmen have to. The fact is that Germany has entered upon a campaign which is to stir Europe to its depths and may lead to some grave results.

[illegible] WATCH ON RHINE

[illegible] the campaign is centered on complete freedom for the Rhineland, which is to be demanded at the coming political conferences on the Young plan, and on return to Germany of the Sarre coal basin, now occupied by the French.

Foreign Minister Stresemann has served notice that Germany may balk at acceptance of the Young plan unless the Rhineland is completely freed of foreign control. It is not likely, in view of German financial necessities, that he would go so far, but it is notice of a first-class fight for all he can get.

SITUATION'S CRUX

The crux of this situation lies in these elements: (1.) As I have pointed out many times, France stands on the treaty provision giving her the right to occupy the Rhineland until all the treaty is fulfilled. (2.) France is willing to retire if a League of Nations commission is given permanent authority to watch the Rhineland and see it is kept free from military activities. (3.) Germany offers to submit to such supervision until 1935, but will not accept it after that date unless the supervision is extended to a neutral zone on the French side of the frontier.

The Germans are well aware that the latter idea will never be accepted by France, because it would forbid military occupation of Alsace-Lorraine and leave those provinces upon to full propaganda efforts of the German Rhineland.

WILL WIN FIRST BATTLE

It is practically certain the Germans will come off victorious in the battle of the Rhineland, getting most, if not all, they demand. France will no longer have the support of Britain, which it enjoyed all the while the Conservative government was in power. Labor has served notice that it intends to withdraw the British garrisons and will do everything in its power to get France to follow suit.

Coupled with this pressure will be strong American influence, which wants to wipe out the danger spot of the Rhine. Our people are actuated not only by desires for peace but by knowledge that our financial and trade interests will be facilitated with the settlement of this question.

Premier Poincare and the French Nationalists will undoubtedly stand out against too hurried evacuation. Poincare is demanding that Germany shall make some of her payments under the Young plan and shall put out a large quantity of the bonds provided by it before the troops leave the Rhineland. But he is not fully supported by his own majority in Parliament or his cabinet. It is well known that Foreign Minister Briand is ready to make generous terms with Berlin and wants to "liquidate the war" as soon as possible. He has let it be known he will stop occupation as soon as possible.

POLAND TO FEEL PRESSURE

Coincidentally with the Rhine ebullition we are seeing the beginning of the new move within Germany to protest the continuation of the Eastern "outrage"—that is, the separation of Germany proper from East Prussia by the Polish corridor to the Baltic and the continued possession of Eastern Silesia by Poland.

Germany gave pledges at the time of the Locarno conference that she would never attempt to alter these arrangements by force, but she has never assented to them and will doubtless increase her outcries and her pressures as soon as she feels free to do so—that is, when her debt total and the Rhine question are arranged.

Then she will be in a position to bring enormous pressure to bear on the Poles, for she will undoubtedly have the help of Russia. Between them they can stir up trouble on all the eastern and northern frontiers of Poland and they can choke the foreign trade of that country in a way to endanger its whole economic structure. They can act with all the more freedom because the British Labor government is favorable to the Berlin and Moscow regimes and opposed to the Polish dictatorship and the French alliance.

Two other campaigns are already under way: One for the restoration of former German colonies and the other for the extension of German influence in Central Europe.

Stresemann, in his recent speech, challenged the right of the British to do as they pleased with former German East Africa, which was put under a mandate to Britain after the war. The Conservative government planned to unite this mandate with a purely British colony and so take it directly under the imperial administration. Germany says it must be held separate and kept under control of the League of Nations Mandates Commission.

OLD PLACE DESIRED

Behind that demand is an insistence that, since Germany was not guilty of starting the war, she should again be given "her place in the sun" through the possession of colonies from which she can get raw materials for her industries. Of this we shall hear much more.

The second drive is on the subject of rights of minorities in various European countries. In the last session of the League Council Stresemann compelled such concessions that he will be able to air at the coming session of the League Assembly grievances of Germans in Poland and elsewhere and any other grievances which may suit his purpose.

It will be well to watch the emergence of this German campaign. Coupled with the entente with Russia and the friendship of the British Cabinet, it may upset a lot of things in Europe and cause first-class rows.

INTEREST RIFE IN BIONDI CALL

Apostolic Delegate Pays White House Visit

Copy of Lateran Treaty Presented to Hoover

Vatican Status Subject of Speculations

WASHINGTON, July 6. (AP)—The action of President Hoover in receiving Mgr. Fumasioni Biondi, apostolic delegate in the United States, at the White House this week has revived speculation in official and diplomatic circles regarding the status of American-Vatican relations.

There has been considerable discussion in these circles over the fact that Mgr. Biondi delivered to the President a copy of the Lateran Treaty recently signed between the Vatican and Italy, in which the latter recognized the sovereignty of the Papal State.

The visit was described in Catholic circles here as the customary visit which the delegate pays after the President assumes office. Mgr. Biondi, who has been in Rome in connection with the Mexican church settlement almost continuously since March 4, does not have any diplomatic rank which is recognized by the American government.

While the visit itself was emphasized in high administration circles to indicate no intention of recognition of the Vatican by the United States, it was said at the State Department today there is no doubt that the United States is now officially aware of the existence of the sovereignty of the Vatican.

The department, so far as it could be learned in the absence of Secretary Stimson and other high officials, did not arrange the call of Mgr. Biondi at the White House.

Rehearing Asked by Gas Company on Value Ruling

SAN FRANCISCO, July 6. (Exclusive)—The Pacific Gas and Electric Company today asked the Railroad Commission for a rehearing of its recent decision that $26,586,000 is a fair price for the San Francisco distributing system of the company, which the municipality proposes to buy. The company values the property at $60,000,000.

The company contends the evaluation is unfair and unjust, denies the Commission's jurisdiction, questions the legality of the Public Utilities Act under which the Commission evaluates and avers the city acted illegally in going to the commission.

A $3,050,000 item for severance damage is criticised particularly, the company maintaining the amount should be $27,000,000.

Canada Takes Kindly to Plan for Conference

OTTAWA (Ont.) July 6. (AP)—Suggestions contained in Washington dispatches that the scope of the proposed conference between Premier MacDonald, President Hoover and Premier MacKenzie King should be enlarged so as to permit the President and Mr. King to discuss certain matters affecting Canadian-American relations, have aroused interest here.

According to these reports, Senator Borah favors a personal talk between the President and Mr. King on such matters as the radio situation, and the movement of liquor from Canada to the United States.

Tallman Clew Found Phoney

SAN FRANCISCO, July 6. (Exclusive)—Misguided efforts to revive the William Loren Tallman disappearance mystery went for naught today. A report was made to police that a woman, whose identity was not disclosed, had confided to a radio operator that she had attired Tallman in a steward's coat and had him take her luggage ashore unmolested when the Admiral Benson, on which Tallman supposedly was a prisoner, docked here on the night of June 6, last.

Detectives interviewed the radio operator, who is employed on the Admiral Peoples, and obtained a flat denial from him that he had received such a confidence from any woman or any other person.

Death Sentence in Child Slaying

UKIAH, July 6. (AP)—Thomas Lehew, convicted slayer of 7-year-old Theresa Johnson of Fort Bragg, was sentenced to hang Friday, September 13, next, at San Quentin prison by Superior Judge Preston of Mendocino county here today.

Lehew, a woodsman, accepted sentence calmly and permitted no trace of emotion to show on his face when the death sentence was pronounced.

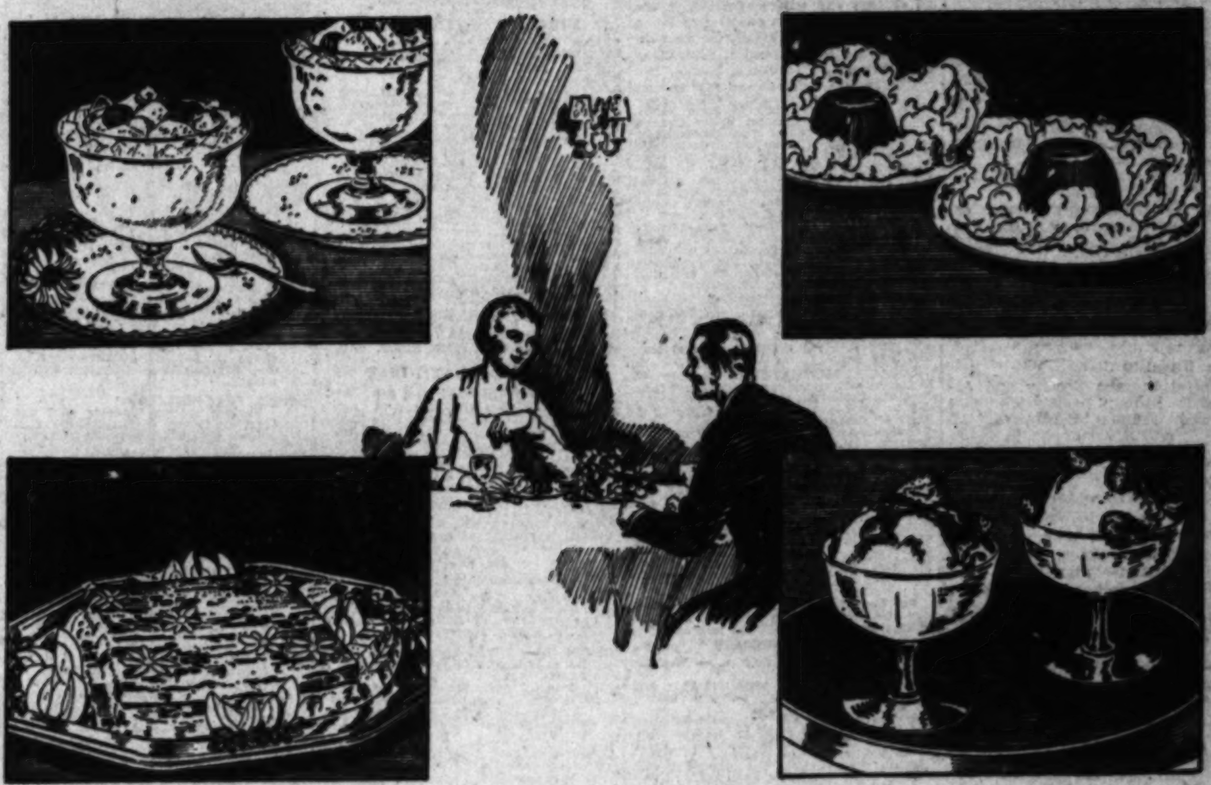
GENERAL ELECTRIC
ALL-STEEL REFRIGERATOR



How's This
for a hot-weather dinner?

One of these evenings; when the long, warm day has left you exhausted and nothing tastes good, how would you like to sit down to a dinner like this? An ice-cold fruit cup, jellied chicken and ham, a salad of crisp lettuce with a stuffed tomato in aspic. And, for dessert, a strawberry sundae. Tempting, isn't it? And so pleasantly easy to prepare.

All the real work can be done in the cool of the morning. Then your General Electric Refrigerator will do the rest . . . chill new flavor into every course.

Fifty degrees is accepted by scientists as the "danger point" in the preservation of food. There are now more than 300,000 General Electric Refrigerator users and not one has spent a single dollar for repairs.

The model illustrated, 9½ square feet of shelf area with the features shown below, can be purchased for $16.25 a month. See it at our display rooms.

POLICY ON RAIL GUNS DISCLOSED

Plans for Use of Mobile Artillery Cited as Good Disapproves Crail Bill

WASHINGTON, July 6. (AP)—The policy of the War Department to use railroad artillery as a mobile reserve on Atlantic and Pacific Coasts was disclosed today in a letter from Secretary Good to acting Chairman James of the House Military Committee in disapproving the Crail bill to station eleven additional railroad heavy artillery guns at Fort MacArthur, California.

The bill was introduced by Representative Crail, Republican, California, in March and Mr. James asked the Secretary of War for a report on the measure.

"The War Department does not favor the enactment of this legislation," Secretary Good wrote. "The policy of the War Department is to employ all railroad artillery as a mobile reserve for use wherever needed. To designate any of these guns for employment at a specific place would operate to nullify their favorable characteristic of strategic mobility, the capability of movement over long distances.

"It is planned to station railroad guns on both coasts as they become available," the Secretary said, "but it is not planned to retain them permanently for use in or near any one set of fixed defenses."

La Muchedumbre Frenética Hace Pedazos el Avión de Mitchell y Newcomb

CLEVELAND (O.) Julio 6.—La tragedia y el vandalismo han sido hoy las notas lamentables que ensombrecieron la loca manifestación que estalló en el aeropuerto de Cleveland al aterrizar el "City of Cleveland", azul avión de Roy L. Mitchell y Byron K. Newcomb, a las 12:39:50 a.m., tras dejar establecido un nuevo récord de duración de 174 horas, 59 segundos. En ese punto mismo, empezó una aclamacion de fanáticos, que no se contentaron con aplaudir y vitorear, sino que, ansiosos de llevarse reliquias, hicieron añicos el aeroplano de los triunfadores. En el motín pereció un joven, y varias docenas de personas resultaron lastimadas.

Stevt Kusko, mozalbete de 16 años, murió pisoteado por los cascos de los caballos de la policía y por las plantas de los frenéticos asistentes. Perdió pie el infortunado joven, pues recibió un empellón que le hizo rodar bajo los caballos de la policía montada, que trataba de contener a la multitud enardecida. Un montón de escombros es todo lo que queda del "City of Cleveland", pues los vándalos, ávidos de recuerdos materiales, entraron a saco en el avión mencionado.

Agotados por más de una semana de vuelo continuo, "Newk" y "Mitch" se fueron a descansar. Excedieron en cerca de hora y media el récord de resistencia sentado hace poco en Fort Worth (Tejas) por los pilotos Reginald L. Robbins y James Kelley, que volaron 172 horas, 32 minutos, y 1 segundo.

"Nuestro avión habría podido continuar, y fue nuestro estado físico el que nos hizo tomar tierra", manifestó Mitchell apenas desembarcado. "Mañana mismo podríamos tripular este mismo avión y batir nuestro récord sin reparar siquiera el motor, si no fuera porque nos hallamos extenuados."

Expira en Washington el Almirante E. W. Eberle

WASHINGTON, Julio 6. — Ha fallecido hoy aquí a los sesenta y cinco años de edad, el almirante retirado Edward Walter Eberle, conocidísimo en Sudcalifornia por haber sido allí jefe supremo de la Flota de Batalla de los Estados Unidos, puesto desde el que fue llamado a esta capital para que ocupase el cargo más elevado de la Armada de los Estados Unidos. En Agosto de 1928 se le dio su retiro por causa de edad.

Nació el distinguido marino en Denton (Tejas) el 17 de Agosto de 1864, y se graduó en la Academia Naval en 1887. Durante las cuatro décadas y pico que prestó servicios, contribuyó de manera efectiva a transformar nuestra Armada de buques de madera en otra de modernos acorazados y cruceros de acero. Ayudó a perfeccionar el mecanismo de Tanner para sondeos. En 1918 ascendió a contraalmirante, y pasó, en tierra, por todos los puestos de importancia. En 1889 se casó con la señorita Tazie Harrison, de San Francisco, parienta del presidente Benjamin Harrison. Cuando, en 1923, arrió su bandera de cuatro estrellas a bordo del California, en el Pacífico, puso término a sus servicios en el mar, y vino a esta capital para ser jefe de operaciones navales hasta su retiro.

Cochet Defendió su Corona de Tennis Contra Borotra

WIMBLEDON (Inglaterra) Julio 6.—Henri Cochet volvió a ganar hoy el campeonato británico de tennis derrotando a Jean Borotra, el "éuscaro saltarín," en el match final. Cochet apabulló por completo a su paisano, ganándole en series seguidas por 6-4, 6-3, 6-4. Cochet posee asimismo el campeonato de los Estados Unidos, que ganó el otoño próximo pasado.

La victoria de hoy del pequeño Enrique le ha reconquistado el título que ganó aquí en 1927, cuando derrotó a William T. Tilden y a Borotra en tres series seguidas.

El equipo norteamericano de parejas ganó el campeonato británico de tennis para parejas masculinas, pues John Van Ryn y Wilmer Allison vencieron a la pareja inglesa de la copa de Davis, constituida por H. G. Gregory e I. G. Collins. En reñido combate de cinco series ganaron los norteamericanos por 6-4, 5-7, 10-12, 6-4.

Después de 26 Días de Arder, se Logra Apagar un Pozo Petrolero

Ayer por la mañana pudo ser extinguido en Santa Fe Springs el pozo petrolero McKeon No. 2, después de haber estado ardiendo furiosamente durante veintiséis días.

Con oportunas conexiones laterales, hechas desde una cámara subterránea, pudo desviarse la mayor parte del petróleo brotante, y evitar que siguiera alimentando las llamas que salían de la boca del mismo.

Cuando se adaptaron bombas neumáticas de alta presión a las cañerías laterales, las llamas se redujeron en volumen, y cuando hubieron disminuido hasta no parecer más que una tea prendida, se abalanzó una cuadrilla de operarios hasta el pozo, y le taparon la boca con gigantesco casquillo de metal.

Este pozo no queda perdido para la producción, y van a comenzar desde luego los trabajos para escombrarlo, ponerle nuevas conexiones en la parte superior, y explotarlo. Tal dijo en el teatro del incendio el señor Robert McKeon, miembro de la McKeon Drilling Company, que no se ha separado del campo petrolero desde que comenzó a arder el pozo, y no ha cesado de dar atinadas órdenes para apagarlo.

FORD URGES ELECTRICITY MONOPOLY

Linking of All Nation's Power Facilities Under One Head Favored

NEW YORK, July 6. (AP)—The Electrical World in its current issue quotes Henry Ford as advocating control of all the nation's power facilities by a single central "directing organization." Such a monopoly, the automobile manufacturer said, would be the best means to reduce the rigors of human toil and give the people cheap light and power.

"It has got to come as the one necessary and economic method of power production," Mr. Ford continued. "Our national power system will become a unit, just as our postal system is. This would mightily speed the day when electric power would fulfill its destiny as the bearer of mankind's burdens."

Critics of the power industry, he asserted, have overemphasized the profit aspect of the problem, losing sight of the tremendous service rendered to the people.

Drifting Boat Tells Tragedy

SAN RAFAEL, July 6. (AP)—A fifty-five-foot motor boat with two holes stove in the hull was found adrift off Point Tomales, south of Drake's Bay today. All marks of identification had been removed from the craft but the engine bore the name of the A. R. Robbins Marine Engine Works of San Diego.

County authorities saw in the discovery a clew to some hijacking episode on the high seas. The boat was found by Mrs. Walter B. Sellmer, wife of the game warden in this district.

Hundreds of boys came on foot from distances of several hundred miles in order to attend the jamboree.

VAIL FIELD GOES OUT OF SKY PICTURE

Western Air Express Goes Into New Plane Port on Valley Boulevard

When a large red and silver Fokker passenger plane arrived here at 12:10 p.m. yesterday from Oakland, Vail Field passed out of the local aeronautical picture. All mail and passenger activities of Western Air Express were transferred immediately to the new airport on Valley Boulevard. The change was made without any ceremony on public reception, due to the fact that the airport is not yet fully completed.

The first ship to arrive with passengers on regular schedule was a Loening amphibian from Catalina Island. At 5 o'clock a Fokker from Salt Lake City arrived, and at 9 p.m. the Kansas City ship reached port. At 7 p.m. a Boeing mail plane departed for Salt Lake City.

All planes will use the new field, arriving from and departing for the following cities:

San Francisco, Avalon, Las Vegas, Nev.; Salt Lake City, Tia Juana, Kingman, Holbrook, Albuquerque, Amarillo, Wichita and Kansas City.

According to C. C. Cole, general superintendent of operations, there will be fourteen arrivals and departures a day, beginning Wednesday, when a new San Francisco schedule calling for departures from here at 8:50 a.m. and 5 p.m. will go into effect.

The new airport lies south of Alhambra and is a twenty-minute drive from the postoffice, Cole said. When completed, it will represent an investment of about $1,000,000 and will be given an A.A.A. rating by the Department of Commerce, the highest possible standing. It already is unique among the airports of the world, having the only hexagon-shaped service hangar ever constructed. This permits of six large Fokker planes being worked on at the same time with great economy of labor and time, Cole said. He estimates that the unique arrangement saves fifty mechanic hours a week over the conventional type of hangar.

BOOKED AS PANTAGES CASE 'FIXER'

Former Officer Arrested on Bribe Offer Charge in Auto Death Inquiry

Accused of attempting to bribe a witness against Mrs. Lois Pantages, wealthy theater owner's wife awaiting hearing on a charge of second-degre murder, William R. (Paddy) McGee, 1015 East Seventy-eighth street, yesterday was arrested and held in jail. McGee, who is 45 years of age, and a bail bondsman and former special deputy sheriff, denies the charge, although he admits being a friend of the Pantages family and, according to Dep. Dist.-Atty. Jones, says he has been interviewing witnesses in the case.

Dep. Dist.-Atty. Jones issued the complaint against McGee, charging the man with trying to bribe a witness in the case against Mrs. Pantages. Mrs. Pantages was arrested following a fatal automobile crash on June 16, last, between a car she was driving and one driven by Joe Rokumoto, a Japanese, who died later of injuries.

Alexander Pantages, husband of Mrs. Pantages, yesterday afternoon said McGee never had been employed by him or authorized to have anything to do with the case.

"My attention was called to the paper this afternoon," said Mr. Pantages, "wherein a man named McGee claims he was investigating the case for me.

"McGee was never employed by me or authorized to have anything to do with the case."

OFFER CHARGED

Jones asserted that at the inquest, on June 22, last, while a Coroner's jury was out debating the Rokumoto death, McGee approached William H. Dutton, who was one of the arresting officers of the Hollywood division. According to Jones, McGee tried to influence Dutton's testimony in case Mrs. Pantages was brought to trial, saying:

"There will be plenty on the line."

This, according to Jones, was a

ELKS' DRILL CAUSES CLASH

Threatened Damage to New Lawns at City Hall Results in Removal of Apparatus

A minor disturbance in the smoothly functioning Elks' convention arrangements came yesterday when members of the City Park Department and Elks' officials clashed over permitting the Jackson (Mich.) Zouave drill team to give exhibitions on the south lawn of the City Hall grounds.

The Zouave team, famous in Elkdom for its exhibitions, has been giving regular programs on the City Hall grounds since arriving here several days ago and has attracted large crowds as spectators. Yesterday, however, the visitors found their scaling wall, a regular part of the equipment, dismantled and an order waiting them to move the scene of their activities.

Hot statements were immediately forthcoming from Executive Chairman Carl McStay of the convention committee, and Capt. William Sparks, wealthy Jackson radio manufacturer and leader of the Zouaves.

APOLOGY DEMANDED

"The public officials responsible for practically wrecking the drill platform of the Jackson Zouaves," said Chairman McStay, "may attempt to justify their action on the pretext that flowers or shrubbery in the park area adjoining the City Hall were being damaged by people desiring to witness the exhibition of this famous drill team but in reality they have offered the only affront to visitors attending the Elks' convention that has come to the attention of our executive committee. This drill platform was erected in a place selected by and with the approval of the official custodian of the City Hall, who yesterday advised us that officials of the Park Department had complained because some people had trampled on flowers or shrubbery and that he was arranging to have the platform moved to another location of the City Hall grounds some time Saturday.

NOT TO INTERFERE

"We received a report this morning that the platform had been torn down and virtually wrecked during the night, and such discourtesy and lack of consideration to a visiting delegation warrants action by the proper executive of the city of Los Angeles, and an official apology in the name of the city, and it is to be hoped that this action will be taken."

"Having been Mayor of Jackson, Mich., I place no blame on the Mayor of your city for the unfortunate occurrence this morning," said Capt. Sparks. "It took a great deal of persuasion to bring the Zouaves to Los Angeles and we are sorry this happened. The stand is not damaged beyond repair and we will not let this incident interfere with any pleasure we can give the people of Los Angeles with our drill teams."

LAWNS PERILED

Spectators who crowded the lawn of the City Hall to view the drill of the Zouaves aroused park department officials to the point that the drill was ordered shifted to the court on the Spring-street side of the Municipal Building.

The apparatus used by the Zouaves was set up, several drills were held amid the enthusiastic acclaim of hundreds of spectators, but the ground tackle being insufficient to support the apparatus, the drills were called off by Capt. Sparks.

Neither President Van Griffith of the Park Commission, Secretary Hassert nor Supt. Shearer could be located yesterday to get their views on the situation. Dr. E. P. Ryland, member of the commission, said he knew nothing of the situation. He said he had heard nothing of the Elks asking permission to use the area on the First-street side of the City Hall, but presumed that the order to change the scene of the drill was for the purpose of protecting the new lawn from damage.

The situation is regarded as similar to that at Pershing Square, which was prohibited to the Shriner bands recently by a majority of the Park Commission, because of the damage that might be done to the lawns in that park.

RAYBOLD RITES CONDUCTED

Funeral rites for George Irving Raybold, principal of the Garvanza School, were conducted yesterday at the Little Church of the Flowers, Forest Lawn Memorial Park. Mr. Raybold resided at 4524 Fountain avenue. He leaves his widow, Mrs. Emma Raybold, a teacher in the public schools.

ADDITIONAL THOUSANDS DUE TO REGISTER TODAY

Headquarters Swamped by Stream of Delegates Pouring in From All Parts of Nation

No hunters were needed to find Elks in Los Angeles yesterday. Pouring in from all parts of the country to attend the sixty-fifth national convention of their order, which opens here today, thousands of them thronged the streets, filled the hotels, made railroad depots a riot of color and generally took possession of the city.

Yesterday saw special trains bring delegations from Columbus and Toledo, Baltimore and New York City. Today twenty more special trains will arrive. Tomorrow another score of Elk specials are due before all the expected arrivals are complete.

Registration headquarters in the Subway Terminal Building with its staff of 100, was swamped with work all day yesterday, and up to a late hour unable to give even an estimate of the thousands that registered from out-of-town places. The arrival of Murray Hulbert, Grand Exalted Ruler of the national organization, provided a climax for the various reception committees meeting the incoming delegates. Hulbert and Mrs. Hulbert detrained at Central Station at 9:10 a.m.

SERVICES IN CHURCHES

Opening the convention this morning with appropriate services, many Los Angeles churches will adopt the text "And the Greatest of These is Charity," in honor of the benevolent work of the Elks Lodge. In the morning special services will be held at St. Vibiana's Cathedral, the First Baptist Church, and St. Paul's Cathedral, and in the evening at St. John's Episcopal Church and the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

The outstanding official convention event today will be the first session of annual convention of the California Elks Association at the Elks Temple. The first sporting event of the convention week will open at the Los Angeles Gun Club where trap shooting for the Southern California championship will begin. At 4 p.m. visiting Elk bands and glee clubs will give concerts in Westlake Park, Pershing Square, Lincoln Park, Exposition Park, Lafayette Park and other places. The concerts will be broadcast over local radio stations. At 7 p.m. the California Elks Association will hold a ritualistic contest in the Elks Temple.

NOTABLES ARRIVE

Listed among outstanding arrivals at the Elks' convention headquarters yesterday were Charles S. Hart of Bronxville, N. Y., business manager of the Elks' Magazine. Hart made the trip to Los Angeles via airplane. Mrs. Hart had preceded him here and both are stopping at the Biltmore.

Hart is given credit for conceiving the idea of sending across the continent the four purple and white automobiles that have contacted Elks' lodges along four different transcontinental routes in the interests of the convention. The four machines will contact with a purple and white Elks' plane outside of the city within the next few days and make a triumphal entry into the city.

Past Grand Exalted Rulers whose arrival was listed yesterday included Fred Harper of Lynchburg, Va.; Bruce A. Campbell, East St. Louis, Ill.; William A. Martin, San Francisco; Rush L. Holland, former United States Assistant Attorney-General of Washington, D. C.; William W. Mountain, Flint, Mich.; John F. Malley, Springfield, Mass., chairman of the Elks' National Foundation Trustees; Charles H. Grakelow, Philadelphia; John G. Price, Columbus, O.; James G. McFarland, Watertown, S. D.; John P. Sullivan, New Orleans, and Edward Righter, also of New Orleans.

Among Grand Lodge dignitaries to arrive was John Powel, Esteemed Lecturing Knight of the Grand Lodge, with the Baltimore Lodge, No. 7, delegation which brought 100 members, wives and families. The Baltimore contingent was headed by Exalted Ruler Charles Newman. In the party also was Senator Harry O. Levin, who enjoys the distinction of being the only Republican among the forty-two Representatives of the city of Baltimore in the Maryland Legislature.

Several thousand persons, including the uniformed escort and caballeros of the local lodge, met the delegation of New York Lodge, No. 1, at the Santa Fe depot last night. As the train steamed in the local band struck up "The Sidewalks of New York." The 275 New Yorkers responded with cheers.

Heading the delegation is Peter F. McKenney, Past Exalted Ruler. Accompanying him is his daughter, Miss Anna Marie McKenney. Secretary W. T. Phillips said there are seven Past Exalted Rulers in the delegation.

HULBERT WELCOMED

The consummation of the Elks' National Foundation fund of $20,000,000, the establishment of a junior Elks' order, the limitation of membership in the senior order in an attempt to obtain quality rather than quantity, and the welding of the whole into an organization that will put "laws on the statute books will be respected and enforced," are the four things Grand Exalted Ruler Hulbert declared are uppermost in promise of a large bribe to the officer to let down his testimony.

PANTAGES CASE CHARGES MADE

Mrs. Pantages was not held by the Coroner's jury. Following the failure to name any one responsible for Rokumoto's death, Dist.-Atty. Fitts issued a complaint charging her with second-degree murder. She first was accused of driving a car while intoxicated, a violation of Sec. 112, the State Motor Vehicle Act.

STORY TOLD

Dutton told his version of the asserted bribery overture to Jones. Investigators Chriss and Winn interrogated McGee at the District Attorney's office. He was placed under arrest and booked by Deputy Sheriff Riley in the District Attorney's office.

Following his confinement in the County Jail, McGee, reluctantly admitted he is a brother-in-law of Tom Finn, ex-Sheriff of San Francisco.

"I heard they were looking for me at the District Attorney's office and went down there voluntarily to see what they wanted," he said. "There is no truth in the statement that I tried to bribe any one."

According to McGee, he has known Alexander Pantages for thirty-five years and attended the Rokumoto inquest out of interest as a friend. He said he had insufficient money of his own to offer bribes and had not been retained by Pantages or any other agency interested in the case. He said he is engaged in the real estate, insurance and bond business. Since the inquest, he said he has made two business trips to San Francisco.

Since the accident, Mrs. Pantages has been in a hospital as result of injuries received in the collision. Following the District Attorney's action in issuing a complaint, he sent Dr. Charles W. Decker to examine her and ascertain if she was able to be arraigned. Dr. Decker reported on the 1st inst., that Mrs. Pantages was seriously injured, and had undergone an operation as well as her nose having been broken. The physician stated that she should would not be able to go into court for at least two weeks. A later examination was ordered to be made in ten days.

Dep. Dist.-Attys. Jones and Costello in charge of the case, have been interviewing witnesses in the interim.

WONDERLANDS

This is as it should be. Some of these northern counties have been as isolated as the North Pole. They have everything but money and a knowledge of salesmanship . . . geysers spouting medicated waters, minerals of untold richness, scenery so overwhelming that it fairly leaves you breathless, and the most magnificent forests in the world.

SHOWMANSHIP

Their efforts to sell these wonders to the world are fairly pathetic. In one Northern California town they have shut up a great spouting geyser in a fire hydrant. The result is that it has all the wild beauty and romantic thrill of a kitchen sink or a horse trough.

MURDER MYSTERIES

Chicago feels that Frederick Wensley, the famous Sherlock Holmes of Scotland Yard, could help solve its "gang murder mysteries;" so they are sending for him. After he is through there he might come out here and try to find the Pacific Ocean.

The only mystery about Chicago gang murders is why the police permit armed gangs of men—every one of whom is as well known as Lake Michigan—to practice the fine art of murder without interference or punishment.

THE ARCH REBEL

The tender solicitude for the whereabouts of Gen. Jose Gonzales Escobar may be due partly to the fact that the rebel chieftain is known to have brought six automobiles loaded with money across Pulpito Pass on his last retreat.

Jail Hangs Up Welcome Sign

When it comes to showing hospitality to visiting Elks, Deputy Chief John L. Shand is one of those in the front receiving line. Shand, by virtue of his office, is head man at the City Hall and he could see no reason why even a jail should discriminate against the antlered tribe. A glance out of his window revealed that the whole town was displaying welcome signs, so Shand got busy and posted a large welcome sign above the barred main entrance.

"Anyhow," mused the chief jailer as he fastened the sign in place, "stone walls do not a prison make."

"But, brother," chimed in a trusty who was polishing a cuspidor near by, "how they do help!"

his mind as he arrived here yesterday.

Hulbert's arrival at the Union Pacific station at 9:10 a.m. from his home in New York was the signal for the greatest individual demonstration preceeding the convention. His train was met by a large and colorful band of greeters from the local Elks' Lodge No. 99, headed by Exalted Ruler Edward Gibbs, and he and Mrs. Hulbert were escorted to the Biltmore through long lines of cheering people.

At the station lodge chanters and deputy esquires in full uniform, enforced by the No. 99 band, sang songs of welcome, while another demonstration was held before the Grand Exalted Ruler could make his way through the crowd that gathered in front of the Biltmore.

Talking to newspaper representatives a few minutes later in the hotel, Hulbert expressed his wish that his sincere appreciation of his welcome be carried to the people of the city, and he commented on the spirited convention garb of the streets and of the apparent growth since he has visited here last.

In a general discussion of the affairs of the lodge, the Grand Exalted Ruler traced the growth of the organization from its inception sixty-two years ago in New York City with one small lodge to its present status of more than 1500 lodges, having in excess of 800,000 members and owning property with an assessed valuation of more than $125,000,000.

"It took thirteen years to establish the first thirteen Elks' lodges," said Hulbert. "We organized twenty-eight new lodges last year and I can see an even greater field for growth in the future."

This growth, however, the Grand Exalted Ruler believes, should be limited, so that the "deadwood" within will be eliminated and a higher type of member encouraged. To this end he will introduce legislation at the coming convention which will give each lodge the right to place a maximum membership on their organization, and other applicants would be placed on a waiting list.

JUNIOR ORDER PLANNED

In the Elks' National Foundation, an endowment fund for social service work, Hulbert sees one of the greatest works ever undertaken by any organization. One thousand lodges and 1000 individuals have been asked to raise $1000 each, creating a nucleus of $2,000,000, which at 5 per cent would result in an annuity of $100,000. Overhead, it is planned, will be entirely absorbed by the Grand Lodge Budget and by other means so that every cent would go to charitable or educational work.

"It is the most unusual and unique plan ever offered to a lodge member," said the speaker.

The junior Elks' organization will be known as the Antlers, already unofficially functioning in some States, and will accept applications for membership from young men between the ages of 15 and 21 years, and those arriving at the latter age will be eligible to make application for membership in the senior organization. At the convention opening its executive sessions next Tuesday, Hulbert will introduce legislation that, if adopted, will make the Antlers a national organization.

Among those who greeted the Grand Exalted Ruler at the station were Carl McStay, executive chairman of the convention; Monroe Goldstein, executive secretary; Col. Walter P. Andrews, to be elected the next Grand Exalted Ruler, and various Grand Lodge officers who arrived in the city previously.

More than 10,000 copies of the refrain of Jack Wendell's new song "Hello Bill," written to welcome the Elks to Los Angeles, will be distributed to the public tomorrow by the Owl Drug Company, according to announcement made yesterday. The copies are printed in rotogravure, the first time in the history of sheet music for a song to have appeared in that form. During the convention of the "Antlered Herd" the welcome song will be featured by vocal and instrumental musicians at all the big night clubs, at various radio stations and by hotel entertainers and later will be made into records for the phonograph.

Man Killed and Woman Injured

One man was fatally injured and a woman badly hurt in traffic accidents yesterday. The man, Arthur G. Shekell, 48 years of age, died from injuries he received when his car collided with another. He died at the Georgia-street Reciving Hospital. He was a merchant in Lomita.

Mrs. Frances Warden, 69, of 1958 Boncello street, was seriously injured last night when a street car jumped th track and struck her. The accident occured in front of her home. The conveyance was in charge of Conductor L. S. Jenks. The accident is said to have been caused by a brick lying on the track. Mrs. Warden was treated at the Georgia-street Hospital for head and chest injuries.

COUNTY MUST PROVIDE OFFICES FOR JUSTICES

A new opinion provided the County Board of Supervisors by County Counsel Mattoon yesterday holds that the county must furnish offices for justices of the peace scattered in various parts of the county. These offices formerly were maintained by fees collected by each justice with the fines he imposed. All fines now go into the county treasury and there are no accompanying costs. Deputy Counsel S. V. O. Prichard prepared the opinion.

DAY NURSERY HELPS MOTHERS

Film Extras Park Their Children There

Arthur Rogers in Carpenter Shop

If MAMMA is an extra girl in motion pictures, what does she with her children? If she has to support her child or children, she leaves Billy or Barbara at the Community Chest's Assistance League Day Nursery, across the street from one end of the Fox Film Studios. The address is 5610 De Longpre avenue.

Fifty children, from 2 to 9 years of age, are there from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily. The interior is cloister-cool. The furniture is all child-size. Everything is in scale. Colors are bright but soft. Kindergarten is taught daily from 9 to 11:30 a.m. and 3 to 4 p.m. The older children go out to school.

The staff consists of Miss Hazel V. Williams, superintendent; a part-time elementary grade teacher, a kindergarten teacher, a trained nurse and a practical nurse.

The Assistance League Day Nursery is but one of seven day nurseries maintained by the Community Chest. All seven have a total average daily attendance of 967 children.

PORTER NAMES INVESTIGATOR

Mosher Appointed Private Detective for Mayor

Holds Record as Educator and Dry Agent

Scrutiny of Potential Office Holders First Duty

The new $325 a month secretary for Mayor Porter, who will make confidential investigations, will be W. J. Mosher, who has a long record as a detective and investigator. Mayor Porter made the appointment yesterday.

The position, which is in addition to the private secretaryship, held by the Mayor's son, Lee C. Porter, was created in record time by the Council last Wednesday, at the request of the Mayor.

The duties of the office, Mayor Porter said, will be to go outside the Mayor's office and scrutinize matters under discussion which, in the nature of things, the Mayor himself cannot attend to. He will have office room in the Mayor's suite. He said he will proceed first to investigate potential appointees.

Mosher is 53 years of age, a graduate of the University of Minnesota, and formerly Superintendent of Schools in Redwood Falls, Minn. Eight years ago he resigned as probation officer of San Diego county and came to Los Angeles, where he became a Federal prohibition agent. He held this job for two years, and then left, under a reorganization.

Since that time he has been upon the county secret service staff, part of the time as undercover investigator for the Sheriff's liquor squad. About four years ago he was arrested by city police officers, who said they discovered three gallons of moonshine in his car, which was parked at North Spring and Court street. Mr. Mosher laughed about the matter yesterday, and stated that while he was never able conclusively to prove that he was "framed," he won an acquittal in Municipal Judge Sheldon's court.

During the life of the 1928 grand jury he was an investigator for that body, reporting almost daily to Mr. Porter. He left the county's employ the 1st inst., to go with his present chief.

CAP FINALLY SLAPPED ON FIERY WELL

Flames in McKeon No. 2 at Santa Fe Springs End After Twenty-six Days

After burning fiercely for twenty-six days McKeon oil well No. 2 at Santa Fe Springs was extinguished late yesterday morning.

Successful sideline connections from an underground chamber drained off most of the escaping oil before it could rush to the surface and feed the flames roaring from the mouth of the well.

As high pressure vacuum pumps were hooked on to the sidelines the flames lost their volume, and when they had decreased to a mere torch a crew rushed in and placed a giant metal cap over the well.

The well will not be lost to production and work of cleaning away debris and placing new fittings on top will start immediately, it was announced at the fire scene by Raleigh McKeon of the McKeon Drilling Company. McKeon has been on the job every day directing the fight against the blaze.

A meter on the side suction lines showed that the well is making 5000 barrels a day. Its former average was 5500 barrels. Oil experts declared this small loss in production remarkable after the long period the well remained ablaze.

PAIR DEAD IN SUICIDE ATTEMPTS

One Blinded and Another Dying, All Having Used Guns to Seek Surcease

Two men are dead, a third is totally blind and another is reported dying at Georgia-street Receiving Hospital as the result of suicide attempts yesterday.

Walter P. Bullock, said once to have been a wealthy rancher of the Verdugo region, was found dead in a room at the Statler Hotel, 423 East Seventh street, with a bullet wound in his head. A note found near the body was addressed to his wife, Dora, and their son, Raymond, in care of Verdugo Ranch. It asked forgiveness for his deed.

Ed Maynard, 45 years of age, tried to end his life with a revolver in his room at 315 East Fourth street. The bullet, according to police surgeons, severed the optic nerve and caused instant blindness.

J. P. Schoelerman, 53, of 403 North Figueroa street, slashed the arteries in his wrists, after scribbling a note in a pocket memorandum book in which he asked "Mr. Zimmerman and Mr. Cerrina" to look after his affairs. No reason was assigned. Police say he will die.

The body of a man identified from papers on his person as John W. Shaw, 42, of 2000 Preston street, was found in Elysian Park, with a bullet wound in the head.

THRONG AT BAURHYTE OBSEQUIES

Utility Company Officials and Many Others at Rites; Interment Tomorrow

With the chapel crowded by a great number of former friends and business associates, including executives of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation, funeral services were conducted yesterday at 4 p.m. for William Baurhyte, former president of the corporation, at Pierce Brothers' undertaking establishment, 720 West Washington street. Interment will be private tomorrow.

In eulogizing Mr. Baurhyte, Dr. Bradford Leavitt of the Neighborhood Unitarian Church of Pasadena, who officiated, said he will be remembered primarily for his kindliness and thoughtfulness in all human relationships even above his great material accomplishments. Mr. Baurhyte, he said, was especially beloved by his employees, because he treated them all as human beings and friends instead of cogs in a great machine.

Besides his widow, other close relatives of Mr. Buarhyte who attended the services were his three sisters, Mrs. Kate Vassault of San Francisco, Mrs. J. A. Burdette of Belmonte and Mrs. George Branch of Salinas.

Mr. Baurhyte, who was 69 years of age, died unexpectedly Thursday night at his home, 1033 West Edgeware Road. He had come to this city from San Francisco in 1903 as second vice-president of the gas corporation and was made president in February, 1924, serving in that office until he retired in March, 1928.

LOCAL K.C. GROUP OFF FOR EUROPE

Reception by Pope on Program of Tour That Ends in September

"We're going to tell the world about our California home," sang fifty Knights of Columbus and fifty of their wives, mothers and sweethearts as they boarded a train at Santa Fe station yesterday for New York whence, on the 10th inst., they will sail on the Tuscania for a tour of Europe. Arriving at Havre, the party will visit interesting parts of France and then will tour Switzerland, Holland, Germany and other European countries.

While in Rome the party will visit Pope Pius, and will be the first Knights to have been granted an audience with the Pope since the signing of the pact between the Roman Catholic Church and the Italian government. The party will return to Los Angeles September 18 and on the way back will visit England and Ireland.

The tour is under the auspices of Los Angeles Council No. 621, Knights of Columbus, which has a membership of 1500, one of the largest Councils in America. Thomas B. Flannagan, secretary of the Council, is in charge of the party and the committee on arrangements includes Rev. Joseph A. Sullivan, John J. Schumacher, Thomas P. White and Peter Spellacy.

Mrs. Halfill's Funeral Set

Funeral services will be conducted for Sarah E. Halfill, 82 years of age, tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock at her home, 541 Park View avenue.

Mrs. Halfill had been a resident of this city since 1892 and had been in ill health for a long time. She passed away at her home on Friday. She was the widow of Albert Halfill, who was known as the "father of the tuna industry" and who was a pioneer fish packer of San Pedro. He died in 1924.

DEMISE OF SIEGEL LAID TO DISEASE

Coroner's Jury Declares He Died Natural Death in Norwalk Hospital

The death of Albert Siegel, 28 years of age, who died at the Norwalk State Hospital on the 1st inst., was due to natural causes for which no individual was responsible, a Coroner's jury found yesterday.

The conclusion of the jury, it was announced by Coroner Nance, who presided, was that "death was due to double lobar pneumonia and beginning meningitis, with chronic mastoiditis a contributary cause and it was found, from evidence submitted, that death was due to natural causes and not to any criminal action, accident or negligence on the part of any individual."

Yesterday's inquest was called by Coroner Nance to investigate circumstances surrounding young Siegel's death when it was reported by the Le Roy Bagley funeral parlors that the body, when delivered there, bore bruises on the jaw, knee and head; also on assertions made by the dead man's father, Bernard Siegel, that his son was not addicted to intoxicants, following his arrest, June 21, last, on a charge of drunkenness.

DRIVER MUST STAND TRIAL IN ACCIDENT

Isaac Ratner Accused of Manslaughter in Death Resulting from Crash

Isaac Ratner, manager of a dairy at 247 North Utah avenue, must stand trial by Superior Court on manslaughter charges growing out of the death of Nathan Horn in an automobile crash on June 18, last, Municipal Judge McConnell ruled yesterday. The court fixed bail at $2500.

Dep. Dist.-Atty. Bialock called witnesses who testified that Ratner's machine crashed into one occupied by Horn and John Estrin, 2862 Grinnell avenue, while passing a standing street car at Brooklyn avenue and State street. Horn was thrown to the pavement and his skull fractured, Bialock charged.

HARBOR CHANCE ONE OF LIFETIME

Government's Special Favor Shown Project Here

Failure to Meet Conditions May Lose Subsidy

Time Ripe, Says Writer, for Clinching Opportunity

BY CHARLES C. COHAN

A significant feature of the plan to unify the harbors of Los Angeles and Long Beach is the Federal government's part in the project. The government is in effect a partner in it but is not trying to force the issue. On the contrary, the Federal attitude is that the government was invited into the project by Los Angeles and Long Beach and was so impressed with the advantages of the conditions offered to accomplish the development of a truly national port that the project received governmental sanction and a large subsidy.

In other words, the government favors the project because, more than any other instance in American harbor development, it presents opportunities for materializing great national port ideals.

IDEALS VISIONED

The government's position is that the projected breakwater extension which it has committed itself to subsidize to the amount of $7,000,000 as an essential part of the unification plan is far more important for some time to come to Los Angeles and Long Beach than to the government. However, the Federal authorities see in the project an admirable opportunity for trade expansion and at the same time the creation of a national port that will be a model for other extensive harbor developments in which governmental aid is enlisted.

The Los Angeles and Long Beach harbors have been developed from an extensive natural tidal basin. The advantages offered by the Terminal Island shoreline are well utilized. Dredging and other improvements contribute largely to the usefulness of the harbors. The proposed breakwater extension is of enormous value in their protection and as a way to increase materially their shipping and anchorage facilities.

ESPECIALLY FAVORED

The government has given aid to harbor improvement elsewhere but it is an impressive fact that not before has it shown the disposition to enter into any harbor development to the extent that it does in connection with the port unification project here. Furthering that attitude is governmental recognition of the strategic position of this portal in the promotion of commerce and as a naval station.

In the view of the government a harbor merits consideration as a national port when it actually serves a wide region and will further the welfare of that territory in ensuing years.

The service of the unified port here goes far beyond Southern California. It is the oceanic outlet for the products of at least ten great States back of it and promises to be the foremost Pacific port for the entire western region from the Canadian line all the way down our Pacific Coast and along a considerable stretch of the Mexican west coast.

These facts make the project attractive to the government. Likewise there are details of operation that appeal favorably to Federal authorities.

For example, the unified belt-line railroad service in the Los Angeles Harbor area and which readily can be expanded to include the Long Beach Harbor district fits in exactly with the government's idea of the right kind of harbor traffic conditions.

The opportunity for unified supervision of the combined ports is another thing that stimulates governmental interest.

An outstanding point of importance seen by the government is the avoidance, through unification, of needless or costly duplicated work.

Authoritative opinion holds that if Los Angeles and Long Beach pass up this proposition to form a united port with real national completion they likely never again can interest the government to aid in putting it through.

Today's Bible Text

But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel. 1 Timothy v:8.

BEING MISSED

Seems funny for a lot of folks to be struggling along without their ancient ration of coupons and trading stamps. What has come over business?

THE OUTSIDERS

Sports who looked on at the Schmeling-Uzcudun embroilment are not worrying so much about the foreign menace. At least not while Jack Dempsey is still able to totter to his lunch.

NO MORE USURY

The court holds that an arbitrary appraisal fee that is deducted from the amount of a loan may bring that loan into the usurious class. We are not permitting the capitalists to gain any ill-gotten dough. That is why the courts are checking up on all usury intimations. It is going to be hard to get away with it.

THE NEW JAPAN

The population of Japan is said to be now increasing at the rate of nearly a million a year, while emigration from the empire is less than 20,000 souls. So it may be readily understood that there is a problem. The country must become more and more industrial to provide a living for its own growth. The new Japan is going to be thickly studded with factories and they are going to make most of the things the Orient needs.

IN THE KITCHEN

From over the country come reports that there are quite a number of male students in the various cooking schools and domestic science classes. It is getting so that about the only way a gent may have waffles in the home is to build them himself. With all the women deserting the kitchen some one must look after that part of the house. Also if a young man is a good cook some bright young business woman is apt to snap him up as a partner—in the home.

THE YELLOW STREAM

The Bank of England indicates a little worry over the continued drain of gold in the direction of America. We are acquiring the bulk of the world's supply of the yellow metal. There are a lot of Englishmen who put their savings into American dollars and these are, of course, secured by further stores of gold in the treasury vaults. The financiers will have to look after this yellow stream. Perhaps the new international bank of adjustments will be able to divert the channel.

THE NEW WARFARE

United States Army officials have been testing out a combat tank that would carry havoc into the war game. They say that this armed caterpillar has scooted at the rate of forty-two miles an hour over the open terrain. A contrivance that can chase an army across a raw country at that rate of speed represents the horrors of war at their zenith. It is said, further, that with a couple of turns with a monkey wrench a mechanic can convert the machine into a boulevard speedster capable of doing sixty-five miles an hour. The nations will be in a hurry to call off their wars when this wild cat gets to running.

STAYING ALOFT

The man with a game leg says that there is no great value left in these endurance flights in which the plane is refueled in the air. It has been found that good motors may run almost indefinitely if built and treated right. It has also been found that refueling is not necessarily an awkward or hazardous process. Furthermore, the staying qualities of the human machine are pretty well understood. The matter of individual endurance is the only thing left and this is not now vital to the cause of aviation. After a group of flyers have remained aloft for a week and have been refueled a dozen times the circumstance that somebody else can stay up for 160 or 260 hours is not of vast import. Presently in making these refueling contacts a couple of planes will collide and crash together to the earth. Then it will be conceded that a new mark of motor endurance is hardly worth while.

"HELLO, BILL!"

A month ago the City of the Angels was ablaze with flags and bunting and the salutation, "Welcome, Nobles," was heard on every hand. This week our city streets will echo with the more homely, but no less cordially enthusiastic greeting of, "Hello, Bill!" while on our public buildings and along our chief thoroughfares white and purple streamers mingle with the red, white and blue of Old Glory.

In their thundering thousands Los Angeles welcomes the mighty herds of Elks migrating westward from every State in the Union; from the members of this great fraternal and benevolent order, honoring our city with their sixty-fifth national conclave, we hope to win another laurel to add to our long-established reputation that has made Los Angeles the favorite convention city of America.

We care not how fast and furious such hosts come knocking for admission at our city gates. Our pleasure in meeting them is measureless, our enthusiasm is inexhaustible. Ere the last Shriner caravan had finished its long trek eastward over the hot sands, the vanguard of the Elks arrived. Nothing would please us more than to have folks say that life in Los Angeles is just one convention after another. All we hope is to hear a host of kindly hearts proclaim that in entertaining such vast numbers of notable citizens Los Angeles learns by experience and at every fresh endeavor scores a new triumph.

That joyous, if somewhat hectic, first week of June, when Los Angeles was alive with fezzes and bright uniforms and the strains of marching music but stirred our spirits and put us in better fettle for the equally colorful and inspirational second week of July, made over and subscribed to Elkdom. We learned from the Shrine convention some wrinkles to apply for the pleasure of our present guests.

Undoubtedly the feature of that occasion was the stupendous motion-picture electrical pageant. With the massed showmanship of Hollywood behind it that spectacle vied in glory with the Aurora Borealis. The same pageant on an even more comprehensive scale will again be staged at the Coliseum for the benefit of the Elks and those of our residents who were unable to witness it on its first presentation. We have also given extra attention to the heavy problem of housing this multitude of visitors and regulating traffic under such abnormal conditions, difficulties that would tax the accommodations of a city the size of New York.

"Hello, Bill" is simple and colloquial and American. A poem of a hundred stanzas or an official welcome of a thousand studied words could not so nearly express the spirit of the Elks. It is a far cry from the "roaring sixties" of the last century, when the society of the "Jolly Corks" in New York was reorganized as the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Yet that lapse of years is negligible compared with the distance in accomplishment, influence, ideals, example and national significance traveled by this mighty organization since it first came into being.

For this reason the unaffected lodge greeting with the accompanying handshake means for a brother Elk admission to a society with obligations as sacred as those of the knights of old who blazoned more pretentious mottoes on their shields and sealed their fealties with more resounding oaths. If they get pleasures beyond the ordinary out of their lives, it is because they put into them more than ordinary kindness for the lives of others.

And when in the deep religious silence of the eleventh hour of the day the Elks pause from their pains or pleasures to remember those brothers who have said "Hello, Bill," for the last time on earth, who knows if any form of worship in all church history ever brought its members so close to the world of spirits or nearer to communion with their loved ones in the great beyond?

REAL PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

There will be real public ownership of the power plants to be built at Boulder Dam, though the United States government, under the plan favored by Secretary Wilbur, publicly will not construct or operate them. Present prospects indicate that the plants will be built by the companies or municipalities, or both jointly, which are interested in the purchase of power.

The stock of the local public utility corporations so interested is owned by the public and has wide distribution. The Southern California Edison Company, especially, is publicly owned in the best sense, as it has one of the largest lists of stockholders of any company in the United States and makes special efforts to dispose of its securities to the general public. Not only are these companies publicly owned, but publicly controlled, since they are under the jurisdiction of the State Railroad Commission as to both rates and character of service.

In this respect, they are more public than the so-called municipal enterprises, which are not under the commission, and which, while owned by the public in a sense, tend to be run by politicians for the benefit of politics. The public has a far better chance to get rid of poor management, high rates and bad service in a corporation than it has under municipal ownership.

Considering the taxes they pay, the rates collected by the corporations compare favorably, not only here, but all over the country, with the rates of municipal plants. If corporation rates are in any instance too high they can readily be brought down through public regulation. Municipal rates cannot be so reduced.

These corporations, here and elsewhere, discovered long ago that the road to profit lay through a large volume of business, only to be obtained by the lowest rates at which service could possibly be furnished.

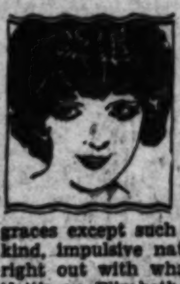
The LEE SIDE o' L.A.

BY Lee Shippey

Personal Glimpses of World-Famed Southlanders

CLARA BOW is said to be the most widely known 22-year-old—and perhaps she is. In many countries besides her own—in Europe, South America and the Orient, she is one of the most popular actresses.



And yet she can't act.

But how she can be natural!

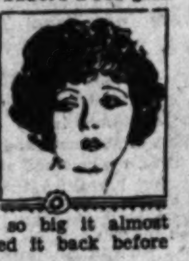
She's so natural she can't be any other way. She has no veneer, no social graces except such as spring from a kind, impulsive nature. She comes right out with what she feels, even if it's an Elizabethan adjective.

But she has an amazing imagination. She becomes, for the time, the girl whose actions she is living, whose thoughts she is thinking. If you'd address her as Miss Bow at such a moment she'd have to stop and think who Miss Bow is.

She did what every schoolgirl dreams of doing—became a star at 16. She probably has been more envied by the youngsters of many lands than any mere queen ever was. Yet we left her home feeling sorry for her. She seemed like a poor little girl who had been invited to a wonderful party because of her gift for entertaining, but had noticed less-entertaining girls snickering behind their hands, and was just about to burst into tears. She has acted hoyden roles so convincingly that she is, she believes, misjudged.

Used to Rolling Her Own

One reason for Clara's popularity in Spanish countries is that her hair photographs black, but it's a red-gold cloud. As she shook hands, we could hardly see her for the hair. "Sit down," she said, and dashed across the room, snatched up in her arms a backless seat so heavy it almost overbalanced her and so big it almost hid her, and lugged it back before we could protest.



"We were awfully poor," she said. "Three little rooms in a Brooklyn flat. Mother an invalid, father undersized and untrained. He picked up odd jobs around the wharf. My childhood playground was the street. But I learned a lot about life.

"I learned more from pictures than from school. I didn't go to pictures just to see. I went to live 'em. I'd go home and be a one-girl circus, taking the parts of everyone I'd seen, living them before the glass. And the kids I played with laughed at my round baby face and unruly light hair and called me Snookums.

Scared Nameless

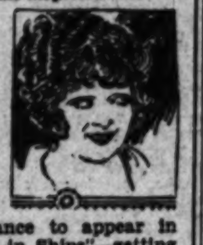
"Still, when a magazine announced a contest for would-be film actresses, I sent in my photograph. It was one of those you get in exchange for this-coupon-and-$1. Then I died 500 deaths and lived 1000 triumphs a day till at last a letter came telling me to report for a test.

"Dad went with me. He was always a grand old dad. There were a lot of prettier, better dressed girls there, and I shrank against the wall. Finally the editor came out and looked around. When he saw me he grinned.

"'What's your name?' he asked.

"'I don't know,' I answered, truthfully. I'd just been a lot of different people in my mind.

He took me to another office, where there were some famous artists. I was made up, but all wrong. They laughed at me, and Corliss Palmer made me up right. Then they told me to fall off a roof and almost drown at sea and watch my sweetheart crashing in an airplane. It was hard to do, there in an office."



Empty Triumph

Clara won first honors, but no job resulted. So she had to go to work in a doctor's office. She kept trying, and finally got a chance to appear in "Down to the Sea in Ships"—getting $50 a week. It was life she knew, so she was just natural—and that picture made her.

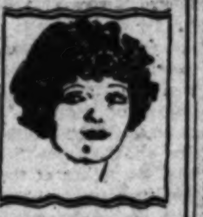
But success came too late to save her mother, who died without seeing her daughter on the screen. Clara feels that prosperity a little sooner might have saved her—and so there is bitterness in thoughts of that success.

Since then Clara has won fame but not happiness. "I've had too many tough-girl parts," she complains. "So people whisper about me—say I'm the bad girl of Hollywood. I'm not. I lead a very quiet life. I haven't any boy friends. If I try to help one he goes around saying 'Clara Bow's crazy about me.' I like to drive—fast—and swim and play in my gym—but they've made me quit that to keep from getting too muscular. I like to look up at the stars, and think. I think lots more than people think I do. I like highbrows better than cads. There are highbrows I'd like to be friends with, but I know I'm not up to them—yet. So I study."

Could you beat that for modesty and simplicity?

"Do you read much?"

"I do now. The talkies keep you reading all the time, studying. You have to learn parts instead of saying anything which comes naturally. And then I've just bought 'Henry the Eighth'!"



Could you beat that for charming ingenuity?

"I do hope the picture I'm making now goes well," she added, earnestly, "for I'm just sweet and nice in it."

We hope so, too, for we couldn't help liking her. She seemed one of the frankest, honestest people we'd ever met.

(Next Sunday, Dr. Robert A. Millikan)

SCRAPPING CREEDS

"Scrapping Creeds" is the subject of an editorial in a recent church periodical. As a rule it might seem out of place for a secular paper to discuss matters as highly specialized as church creeds. It is sometimes difficult for the editorial mind to comprehend how many angels may be able to stand on the point of a needle.

But when the church press takes the initiative in discussing the scrapping of creeds, it is put into language we can understand. Even laymen may be able to get the point.

In these days the secular press seems to be defending creeds more than are the churchmen. A church without a point of view and a formulated statement of it would not seem to get very far.

There are those who loosely say, that if a man lives right, it does not make much difference what he believes. It does. When a man looked down the barrel of his gun to see whether it was loaded, it made a world of difference. He believed it empty. He was of a kind with the motorist who struck a match to see whether his tank had any gas in it. It had!

Thoughts are things. It makes a lot of difference what we think. A creed is a statement of belief. A church without a creed is so much junk. Point of view gives direction of action.

There doubtless are many points of creed that are outworn and could be scrapped. In some cases they are positively harmful and keep many from places of worship.

But a church without a creed is an institution without impact and will make little dent upon the age.

THE THOUGHT STEERERS

A correspondent explains that a new department in governmental affairs is being created in Japan. It is equivalent to a social education bureau and will have the task of leading and directing public thought in the channels where the administration thinks it belongs. The bureau will make studies of the student mind and have its ear to the ground for grievances and complaints. When the leaders are convinced that the public thinking and vocalization are becoming peevish and dangerous attempts will be made to meet the situation by books, pamphlets, lectures and motion pictures. In this country the men in the street would call this the division of propaganda. At that there may be warrant for its existence. Revolutions are frequently the result of unpatriotic misdirection. The energy could just as well have been guided into proper channels and converted to the public good.

TEST OF CITIZENSHIP

If the so-called good citizen will give his pledge to have no commerce with the bootlegger, nor to lend aid and comfort to the rum-runner the country would soon be as dry as the desert.

CLAPPING HANDS

The noise that plants make when growing must be enhanced mightily when nature brings her palms together.

TOO MUCH CULTURE

By James J. Montague

The thief-taking folk of the future
Will not be all scowls or all sneers,
Nor flattened of feet from patrolling a beat,
Nor abraded abaft of their ears.
They will chat in the language of culture,
Using elegant grammar with ease,
But there won't be much kick to the average "dick"
When they all have got college degrees.

I am certain that Barney the burglar
His bit will still busily ply
When he asks, "Who is dere?" with a bellicose air
And a soft voice responds: "It is I."
The man who is deft with a jimmy
And equally apt with a "gat"
Will not be afraid to go on with his trade
When he hears conversation like that.

The lawyer, the doctor, the parson,
And even the factory boss
In these scholarly days are well versed in the ways
To put erudition across.
But grammar, employed by a person
Whom the erring assume is a cop
Will, to borrow a cliche from the criminals' speech,
Prove merely a pitiful flop.

The people who profit by plunder
Are lacking the graces of mind,
They stand most in awe of the men of the law
Who to violent words are inclined.
The English one learns in a college
Suits most mortal men well enough,
But it's simply the truth to insist that the sleuth
Is only efficient when rough.

THE RINGED PLANET SATURN

BY FREDERICK C. LEONARD, S.M., Ph. D.
Of the University of California at Los Angeles

Unique among the worlds known to the astronomer is the ringed planet Saturn, now visible at midnight to the naked eye as a brilliant yellowish-white star due south and a little more than a third of the way from the horizon to the zenith. At that hour of night the planet may be identified as a lone first-magnitude object, just about as high above the southern horizon as the North Star, Polaris, is above the northern.

Saturn is a member of the sun's family of planets like the earth, but is much larger and more remote from the sun than our abode is; and Saturn is the nonpareil of the planets in that, in addition to possessing nine moons or satellites, it is the center of a wonderful ring system without a counterpart, so far as is known, elsewhere in the universe. The globe of the planet is encircled in its equatorial plane by several very thin, flat rings, one inside the other, and concentric with the planet. Through the telescope, Saturn, with the variegated cloud belts on its surface, its numerous satellites, and its marvelous ring system, presents one of the most magnificent sights in the heavens.

A few facts concerning the planet may be of interest. First, it is a nonluminous body like the earth, shining by reflected sunlight, and revolving around the sun in obedience to the law of gravitation. In the order of increasing distance from the sun, Saturn is the sixth planet out, our earth being the third, and revolves once around the central luminary in a period of twenty-nine and one-half years in a somewhat elliptical orbit, at a mean distance of about 886,000,000 miles from the sun. Since the earth is, in round numbers, 93,000,000 miles from the sun, and Saturn, the earth and the sun, in the order named, are now very nearly in the same straight line, Saturn having been "in opposition" to the sun on June 19, the present distance between the earth and Saturn is somewhat less than 800,000,000 miles.

The planet itself is the second largest in the solar system, being exceeded in size only by Jupiter and being some 72,000 miles in mean diameter; volume for volume, Saturn is more than 700 times as large as the earth. While our earth is the densest planet of all, being five and a half times as heavy as an equal volume of water, Saturn is the rarest, being but a little more than seven-tenths as dense as water, and obviously so light that it would float on water. Since the planet is so much larger than the earth, however, it is really ninety-five times as massive, but the force of gravity on its surface is on the average only slightly greater than that here on earth.

Saturn rotates on its axis once in about ten and a half hours, so that its day is considerably less than half as long as ours. On account of its low density and comparatively high speed of rotation, the planet is very "oblate," that is, flattened at the poles and bulged at the equator, the difference in length between its equatorial and polar diameters amounting to more than 10 per cent of the length of either one of them. Saturn is by far the most "square-shouldered" planet of all, our earth being literally as round as a bowling ball.

Saturn is so remote from the sun that it receives but one-ninetieth as much light and heat per unit of area as the earth does, and its surface temperature is probably 150 degs. below zero—or freezing—on the Centigrade scale.

It is unlikely that Saturn or any of the other giant planets, namely, Jupiter, Urans and Neptune, possesses what we should call a solid surface. All that we can see of Saturn through a telescope is its heavily cloud-laden atmosphere, which, as in the case of Jupiter, though less conspicuously, appears to consist of varicolored belts running parallel to the planet's equator. This great globe is doubtless still in a fluid, or semi-fluid, state, and, in company with the other giant planets, is probably at an early stage of evolution, totally unfit to support anything like life as we know it.

Turning our attention next to the ring system, we find that it is separated from the planet's surface by a distance of 7000 miles and that it is 171,000 miles in diameter. It consists of three rings, one within the other. The innermost ring, which is the faintest of the three, is called the "crape ring." The middle ring, the brightest of all, is at its outer edge fully as bright as the planet itself, and is separated from the outermost ring by a gulf called in honor of its discoverer, "Cassini's division," which is some 3000 miles wide. The rings are extremely thin, being probably not more than ten miles thick, and when they are turned edgewise to the earth, as they are occasionally, they are totally invisible.

The question always asked of the astronomer by a visitor at an observatory who is privileged for the first time to behold Saturn through a telescope, is: "What are the rings?" The answer to this question is that the rings are now known definitely to consist of myriads of individual particles or tiny moonlets, each of which revolves independently around the planet like a miniature satellite, and which are so small, so numerous, so compacted and so remote from us, that they present in their ensemble the appearance of continuous disc-like rings. Over a century ago the great French mathematical astronomer, Laplace, proved that a solid ring would be unstable—that it would be broken up by the tidal strains to which it would be subjected by the gravitational pull of the planet upon it.

About the middle of the last century the famous English physicist, Clerk-Maxwell, showed that the rings could be neither solid nor fluid, and that accordingly they must consist of separate particles. In 1889, the great American observer, Barnard, found that the innermost or crape ring, which is presumably the least dense of the three, does not cast a perfectly black shadow, as it would do if it were solid, but that a certain amount of sunlight filters through the interstices separating the particles composing the ring. Finally the illustrious American astronomer, Keeler, in 1895, by means of that most remarkable of all astronomical instruments, the spectroscope, obtained ocular proof that the rings revolve around the planet precisely as we should expect them to do, if they consist of discrete or disconnected particles. There now exists no doubt, from the foregoing and much additional evidence, as to the character of these wonderful appendages, which make the Saturnian system unlike anything else in the heavens.

Lastly, it may be inquired, why does Saturn possess rings? Some one has remarked that rings are strange substitutes for satellites and such, indeed, they are. It has been demonstrated mathematically that a fluid satellite, if revolving around the planet in as close proximity to it as the rings are, would be liable to disruption by the tidal strains to which it would be subjected by the planet. Here, then, undoubtedly lies the answer to the question, Why has Saturn rings? It is not probable that a single sizable satellite ever did exist in the region now occupied by the rings, that it was subsequently rent asunder by the planet, and left behind these rings as its disintegrated remains. Much more likely is it that the material now constituting the rings, as a result of the gravitational stresses to which it is subject, has never been able to coalesce into a single globe, and never will. And so it continues as a swarm of minute particles in the form of these thin broad rings, which, as has been said, make Saturn unique among the host of heaven.

MARCHING SONG

(Dedicated to B. P. O. E.)

Brothers on the way are we,
Answering the friendly call,
Ours the open hand and free,
Seeking each the good of all.

Here today and off tomorrow,
Whether skies be gray or blue;
There's no time for grouch or sorrow,
While we have our stuff to do.

Every corner rightly turned
Gets us farther on our way;
Then the joy of rest well earned
At the finish of the day.

Faring forth with song and laughter,
Building better than we know;
Night before or morning after—
Here's to us—Come on—let's go!

When the parting time is near
And the last good-bys are said,
Let there be no falling tear,
Give us cheerio instead.

Let there be no sad farewell then,
But with laughter and a song,
As we hit the homeward trail then,
Let's just say: "Well, Bill, so long!"

WHERE CAN I LEARN

Algebra?

BY LOUISE L. TEMPLE

[Prepared in co-operation with the Los Angeles evening high schools. Questions concerning free evening classes will be answered if stamped addressed envelope is inclosed. Address Louise L. Temple, care of The Times.]

A knowledge of algebra is necessary to pass certain examinations in the city and county civil service, especially in building for higher positions. This study is also required for entrance to the California Institute of Technology and in the aviation schools.

A free class in algebra is offered by the Polytechnic Evening High School, 400 West Washington Boulevard, beginning July 8, and meeting from 7 to 9 p.m. on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

There will also be a class in geometry, which can be used in any type of geometric or constructive drawing, such as architecture and in designs for inventions.

While the instruction in these classes is free, a dollar book deposit is required for each textbook, just to insure its safe return when the student is through with it.

NEW ADVANCES INDICATED IN EDUCATION VIA RADIO

Many Agencies Busy on Problems With Prospects of Concrete Results by Fall

BY DR. RALPH L. POWER

Additional impetus has been given to education via radio during the summer months with the result that in the fall something concrete probably will come of the movement.

The National University Extension Association, as well as all the major educational bodies, have radio committees. A special committee of the American Academy of Political and Social Science recently made an official report on the subject, and the conference called by the Secretary of the Interior resulted in a committee and sundry sub-groups.

Through it all there seems to be a feeling that radio in some cases can be used to do a better job than ordinary instruction, but such cases are few and far between.

OAKLAND EXPERIMENTS

On the other hand, even though it may not be perfect, it would seem that radio education ought to be continued as a part of the adult education movement for those whose school days have been halted before reaching their self-appointed goal.

In the first six school grades radio seems to be practically useless. But as we go up the scale of years the broadcast is most useful in high schools and colleges.

The schools of Oakland experimented for three years with radio and stopped about two years ago. Officials stated that there were not enough schools equipped with receivers to justify the amount of time and expense involved to put the programs over.

NEW YORK FUNDS LOW

In the schools of the State of New Jersey are 30 per cent equipped with receiving sets and Nebraska comes second with 26 per cent. In most of the rural districts, where they used to raise funds to buy a phonograph or stereopticon set, they are now acquiring radios.

New York City's school system began an experiment two years ago. The report on this venture said that radio had developed educational potentialities as far as school work is concerned, but it will require considerable study before it goes into the curriculum.

The outlay for a central radio station in each school in New York, including initial cost and upkeep, would be considerable. No provision was made in the 1929 budget so the movement there is at a standstill.

BUFFALO'S PLAN

The Seneca Vocational School, part of the school system in Buffalo, has its radio station for engineering instruction. Yet it makes up an annual program to include educational talks and study courses for listeners-in from the Society of Natural Sciences, the City Hospital, Buffalo State Teachers' College and so forth.

But it does not use broadcast as a part of its regular classroom instruction.

The Benson Polytechnic School of Portland, Or., last year used its radio station to give four courses of fifteen hours each in civics, geography, music appreciation and radio memory.

The Damrosch hour and the Standard school broadcast both have been successful, so far as their sphere of influence extended.

IDEAL ARRANGEMENT

Arthur Garbett, educational director of the Pacific Coast division of the National Broadcasting Company, says he believes the ideal radio arrangement would be for a central school in each community to function as a university and broadcast lessons through radio, telephone, phonograph and so forth. Its graduates then would proceed to a university for post-graduate work. This seems very much like a utopian idea, but it appears within the bounds of possibility.

It is true that radio means mass education, whereas the tendency in modern education is to appeal to the individual because the object of education is to develop individual capacities.

Then again, radio impressions are not so durable as the printed word or picture.

And the younger children cannot be reached via radio to the extent that the older ones can.

ACTION SLOW

Boards everywhere are under a constant pressure for increased economy and the various boards of education are extremely cautious. All of which leads many to believe that radio education never will be emphasized in the elementary or grade schools to the extent that it will serve in high schools and colleges.

Later on, the lower schools are likely to be well equipped with sets in order to hear notable events in the classroom or auditorium, such as the President's message, welcomes to heroes, and events of real national interest and importance.

Harry Langdon Obtains License to be Married

Harry Langdon, motion-picture comedian, and Mrs. Helen Walton yesterday went to the county marriage license bureau, where they signed a notice of intention to marry. Langdon gave his age as 42 years and his address as the Hollywood Athletic Club. Mrs. Walton, 32, lives at 7720 Hollywood Boulevard. She formerly lived in Toledo, O.

Langdon and his former wife, Rose Langdon, were divorced last year and the final decree entered on motion of Attorney Patrick J. Cooney on the 3rd inst. This decree was accompanied by a property settlement of $70,000 for Mrs. Langdon and an interest in several pictures then in which Langdon appeared. One of Mrs. Langdon's grounds for divorce was cruelty.

NEPHEW AND NIECE BEGIN WILL FIGHT

Bequests of Susan Currier Attacked on Ground That She Was Incompetent

A niece and nephew, each of whom was bequeathed $10, yesterday attacked the will of Susan Currier of Walnut, who died May 30, 1928, leaving an estate of stocks, notes, mortgages and ranch property worth $426,060.

Contestants are Jennie Chappell and James N. Glenn, who contend that Mrs. Currier was mentally incompetent to make a will because of her advanced age, and also that she was improperly influenced by Hugh A. Thatcher, husband of a niece of Mrs. Currier, now dead.

Mrs. Currier was 87 years of age, and was 81 when her will was made. Besides leaving one-seventh of the residue of her property to Thatcher, Mrs. Currier left $1000 to Mrs. C. E. Hughes, a friend, and $3000 each to George A. Goodell, Murray C. Goodell, Ralph K. Goodell, Albert Quinn Nichols, Currier Thatcher, Marian Brashear Morris, Forrest B. Callan and Monroe Callan, all grand-nephews and grand-nieces.

Nephews and nieces besides Thatcher who inherit one-seventh of the estate are Jacob M. Callan, Ada May Brashear, Susie Nichols and Mary Goodell. Mrs. Thatcher, deceased, would have inherited two-sevenths.

NEW FIRE CURB MOVEMENT ON

Group Formally Organizes for Forest Protection

State-wide Campaign Against Red Peril Launched

Motor Vehicle Department to Lend Aid in Drive

Launching the State-wide campaign against the red menace to California's grain and wooded areas, the Stop Forest Fires Committee was organized formally at a meeting held in the headquarters of the Automobile Club of Southern California. M. B. Pratt, State Forester, is chairman of the new organization, E. E. East, chief engineer of the Automobile Club of Southern California, is vice-chairman, and C. C. Cottrell of the California State Automobile Association, is secretary.

Included in the committee are S. B. Show, district forester, United States Department of Agriculture; Dr. L. I. Hewes, regional director, United States Bureau of Public Roads; C. H. Purcell, State highway engineer; H. W. Keller, director, Automobile Club of Southern California; Charles F. Todd, president of the County Supervisors' Association; Horace M. Albright, director, National Park Service; Charles B. Wing, chief, Division of State Parks.

MOTOR DIVISION TO AID

The Stop Forest Fires Committee is a co-ordination of Federal, State and county authorities to cope with the problem of fires in forests, brush and grain land. Co-operation not only of these agencies but of the State Division of Motor Vehicles will be had in the strict enforcement of State laws against throwing lighted matches, tobacco, or other inflammable material from moving vehicles.

The new fire hazard developed by airplanes also will be given attention. Investigation shows that fires are being started by lighted cigarets dropped from planes. The co-operation of airplane passenger lines will be enlisted to prevent the spread of this new menace.

LEGISLATION STUDIED

The committee has indorsed and will support actively the Englebright bill now before Congress, and is making a study of other legislation providing appropriations for more adequate fire prevention in forest areas.

In view of the light rainfall last season, and the consequent greater fire hazard, an intensive campaign of fire prevention will be inaugurated immediately by the committee.

'Talkies' Lure Radio's Stars, Says Article

"They're in the Talkies Now," in the July issue of Radio Entertainment magazine, explains what has happened to many of the popular radio entertainers.

Another feature of the number is an interview with Paul Whiteman, maestro of jazz, who continues his Tuesday night programs from KMTR, Hollywood. With Harry Von Zell announcing, the feature goes over the Columbia network eastward.

June, the month for brides, has made serious inroads in the ranks of radio announcers and in "Dan Cupid Shoots Arrows," a resume of the list of June brides and bridegrooms is given.

Walter O. Look of Los Angeles also writes in Radio Entertainment of the world's mightiest organ which has just been installed in Chicago with the possibility that its music may be given over a radio chain as well as in the Chicago Stadium.

FIELD CHOSEN FOR ZEPPELIN

will be available at the field.

Adjacent mains of the corporation serving Los Angeles with fuel gas carry a gas which shows a higher British thermal unit and a higher pyrofax element than the gases at other fields inspected. The gas is also declared freer of poisonous carbon-monoxide gas. This gas is known as blau gas and is used as a fuel content.

The gas analysis was made by the Carbide and Carbon Chemical Corporation and results showed that Dr. Eckener will have nothing to worry about in replenishing his fuel supply, Lieut. Lange said. The local company also will service the airliner when it moors here.

A stub mooring mast now at San Diego will be reassembled at the Los Angeles airdrome.

One officer and two chief petty officers from the United States Navy's base at Lakehurst, N. J., will await the Graf's arrival here and take charge of landing and get-away operations, Lieut. Lange announced. The landing crew will be selected from local members of the California National Guard.

Lieut. Lange is chief pilot of the Goodyear airship Volunteer, and was selected by Dr. Eckener to make a personal investigation and decision on the Graf's proposed landing here.

The Graf has a summer flying schedule never before attempted by any aircraft, it was revealed in Dr. Eckener's communication. The ship is capable of cruising 120 hours and traveling 10,000 miles without landing. It carried sixty persons across the Atlantic and back to Germany last summer. Five 550-horsepower Maybach motors drive it through the air.

HEDGE DAMAGE DISALLOWED

City Attorney Werner yesterday reported to the Council that in the matter of the claim of Bert W. Jones for $1 damages to his cypress hedge, due to the burning of weeds by a city department, there is no municipal liability, wherefore the claim is disallowed.

DAVIS DEFENSE PLANS CHANGED

Bribery Defendant Will Not Take Stand Tomorrow

Delay Likely in Submission of Case to Jurors

Lawyers, Court Reporters and Others Face Call

A definite switch in defense plans in the Davis bribery case which has been on trial before Superior Judge Wilson since last Monday came yesterday and as a result the case probably will not be submitted to the jury of seven women and five men until some time near the end of this week.

Harold L. (Buddy) Davis, former chief deputy District Attorney who is charged with having accepted a $7500 bribe from Ben Getsoff, a Spring-street tailor, briber and confessed fixer, to "let up" on the prosecution of Ed Rosenberg, one of the defendants in the Julian stock-fraud case, will not take the stand as the first witness tomorrow morning, as was announced at the close of the session Friday afternoon.

Instead a long list of lawyers, court reporters and others who had to do with the investigation and prosecution as well as the defense in the Julian fraud case will be called. From this list, which includes twenty names, the defense will attempt to show Davis's own actions and statements during the Julian cases. An effort will be made to establish the defense contention that the former chief deputy District Attorney not only prosecuted Rosenberg to the best of his ability but opposed efforts to dismiss the case against him.

Jack Rosenberg, brother of the man who now is in the County Jail as the result of his conviction along with Keyes and Getsoff on bribery charges probably also will be called as a defense witness to testify that Davis sought the conviction of Ed Rosenberg along with the other defendants.

No explanation was offered for the sudden switch in defense plans yesterday with the exception of an announcement by Paul D'Orr, chief defense counsel, that "an effort will be made to bring before this jury all of the facts surrounding the charge against Davis. And it is the belief of the defense that it is unfair to attempt to convict anyone without every bit of testimony bearing on his actions, when it can be connected directly to the charge against him, being placed before the jury."

From the prosecution ranks headed by Chief Dep. Dist.-Atty. Stewart came little information yesterday.

"Our case is in and we believe that we have presented a good case," he said. "It is now up to the defense and we are just sitting by waiting to see what they are going to offer. We do not believe that the Julian stock-fraud case and the Keyes case should be tried all over again in this matter. If this sort of testimony is offered it goes without saying that we will object."

LECTURE ON PHILIPPINES SCHEDULED

Political and Social Science Academy Will Meet This Week

The relations of the great powers and their dependencies is the general subject for discussion at the annual summer meeting of the Los Angeles Center of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, which will be held Thursday and Friday. The two-day session will be held at the University of California at Los Angeles, in connection with the summer session.

Friday evening at the Public Library, Fifth and Hope streets, Dr. Joseph Ralston Hayden, professor of political science, University of Michigan, will speak on the subject, "Philippine Nationalism and the United States." At 2 o'clock Friday afternoon he will lecture in Millspaugh Hall on "Hindu Nationalism and British Policy." Dr. Hayden accompanied Col. Carmi A. Thompson, President Coolidge's special commissioner, in a survey of conditions in the Philippine Islands in 1926.

Other lectures dealing with world problems include: "Mussolini and the New Roman Empire," by Dr. Henry Russell Spencer, professor of political science at Ohio State University, Thursday afternoon. On Friday afternoon he will speak on "Soviet Russia and the Far Eastern Peoples." The subject, "Geographical Problems of the British Empire," will be discussed Thursday evening by Ernest Young, assistant director of education, Middlesex, Eng.

Today's Bible Text

But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel. 1 Timothy v:8.

BEING MISSED

Seems funny for a lot of folks to be struggling along without their ancient ration of coupons and trading stamps. What has come over business?

THE OUTSIDERS

Sports who looked on at the Schmeling-Uscudun embroilment are not worrying so much about the foreign menace. At least not while Jack Dempsey is still able to totter to his lunch.

NO MORE USURY

The court holds that an arbitrary appraisal fee that is deducted from the amount of a loan may bring that loan into the usurious class. We are not permitting the capitalists to gain any ill-gotten dough. That is why the courts are checking up on all usury intimations. It is going to be hard to get away with it.

THE NEW JAPAN

The population of Japan is said to be now increasing at the rate of nearly a million a year, while emigration from the empire is less than 20,000 souls. So it may be readily understood that there is a problem. The country must become more and more industrial to provide a living for its own growth. The new Japan is going to be thickly studded with factories and they are going to make most of the things the Orient needs.

IN THE KITCHEN

From over the country come reports that there are quite a number of male students in the various cooking schools and domestic science classes. It is getting so that about the only way a gent may have waffles in the home is to build them himself. With all the women deserting the kitchen some one must look after that part of the house. Also if a young man is a good cook some bright young business woman is apt to snap him up as a partner—in the home.

THE YELLOW STREAM

The Bank of England indicates a little worry over the continued drain of gold in the direction of America. We are acquiring the bulk of the world's supply of the yellow metal. There are a lot of Englishmen who put their savings into American dollars and these are, of course, secured by further stores of gold in the treasury vaults. The financiers will have to look after this yellow stream. Perhaps the new international bank of adjustments will be able to divert the channel.

THE NEW WARFARE

United States Army officials have been testing out a combat tank that would carry havoc into the war game. They say that this armed caterpillar has scooted at the rate of forty-two miles an hour over the open terrain. A contrivance that can chase an army across a raw country at that rate of speed represents the horrors of war at their zenith. It is said, further, that with a couple of turns with a monkey wrench a mechanic can convert the machine into a boulevard speedster capable of doing sixty-five miles an hour. The nations will be in a hurry to call off their wars when this wild cat gets to running.

STAYING ALOFT

The man with a game leg says that there is no great value left in these endurance flights in which the plane is refueled in the air. It has been found that good motors may run almost indefinitely if built and treated right. It has also been found that refueling is not necessarily an awkward or hazardous process. Furthermore, the staying qualities of the human machine are pretty well understood. The matter of individual endurance is the only thing left, and this is not now vital to the cause of aviation. After a group of flyers have remained aloft for a week and have been refueled a dozen times the circumstance that somebody else can stay up for 160 or 260 hours is not of vast import. Presently in making these refueling contacts a couple of planes will collide and crash together to the earth. Then it will be conceded that a new mark of motor endurance is hardly worth while.

"HELLO, BILL!"

A month ago the City of the Angels was ablaze with flags and bunting and the salutation, "Welcome, Nobles," was heard on every hand. This week our city streets will echo with the more homely, but no less cordially enthusiastic greeting of, "'Hello, Bill!" while on our public buildings and along our chief thoroughfares white and purple streamers mingle with the red, white and blue of Old Glory.

In their thundering thousands Los Angeles welcomes the mighty herds of Elks migrating westward from every State in the Union; from the members of this great fraternal and benevolent order, honoring our city with their sixty-fifth national conclave, we hope to win another laurel to add to our long-established reputation that has made Los Angeles the favorite convention city of America.

We care not how fast and furious such hosts come knocking for admission at our city gates. Our pleasure in meeting them is measureless, our enthusiasm is inexhaustible. Ere the last Shriner caravan had finished its long trek eastward over the hot sands, the vanguard of the Elks arrived. Nothing would please us more than to have folks say that life in Los Angeles is just one convention after another. All we hope is to hear a host of kindly hearts proclaim that in entertaining such vast numbers of notable citizens Los Angeles learns by experience and at every fresh endeavor scores a new triumph.

That joyous, if somewhat hectic, first week of June, when Los Angeles was alive with fezzes and bright uniforms and the strains of marching music but stirred our spirits and put us in better fettle for the equally colorful and inspirational second week of July, made over and subscribed to Elkdom. We learned from the Shrine convention some wrinkles to apply for the pleasure of our present guests.

Undoubtedly the feature of that occasion was the stupendous motion-picture electrical pageant. With the massed showmanship of Hollywood behind it that spectacle vied in glory with the Aurora Borealis. The same pageant on an even more comprehensive scale will again be staged at the Coliseum for the benefit of the Elks and those of our residents who were unable to witness it on its first presentation. We have also given extra attention to the heavy problem of housing this multitude of visitors and regulating traffic under such abnormal conditions, difficulties that would tax the accommodations of a city the size of New York.

"Hello, Bill" is simple and colloquial and American. A poem of a hundred stanzas or an official welcome of a thousand studied words could not so nearly express the spirit of the Elks. It is a far cry from the "roaring sixties" of the last century, when the society of the "Jolly Corks" in New York was reorganized as the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Yet that lapse of years is negligible compared with the distance in accomplishment, influence, ideals, example and national significance traveled by this mighty organization since it first came into being.

For this reason the unaffected lodge greeting with the accompanying handshake means for a brother Elk admission to a society with obligations as sacred as those of the knights of old who blazoned more pretentious mottoes on their shields and sealed their fealties with more resounding oaths. If they get pleasures beyond the ordinary out of their lives, it is because they put into them more than ordinary kindness for the lives of others.

And when in the deep religious silence of the eleventh hour of the day the Elks pause from their pains or pleasures to remember those brothers who have said "Hello, Bill," for the last time on earth, who knows if any form of worship in all church history ever brought its members so close to the world of spirits or nearer to communion with their loved ones in the great beyond?

REAL PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

There will be real public ownership of the power plants to be built at Boulder Dam, though the United States government, under the plan favored by Secretary Wilbur, publicly will not construct or operate them. Present prospects indicate that the plants will be built by the companies or municipalities, or both jointly, which are interested in the purchase of power.

The stock of the local public utility corporations so interested is owned by the public and has wide distribution. The Southern California Edison Company, especially, is publicly owned in the best sense, as it has one of the largest lists of stockholders of any company in the United States and makes special efforts to dispose of its securities to the general public. Not only are these companies publicly owned, but publicly controlled, since they are under the jurisdiction of the State Railroad Commission as to both rates and character of service.

In this respect, they are more public than the so-called municipal enterprises, which are not under the commission, and which, while owned by the public in a sense, tend to be run by politicians for the benefit of politics. The public has a far better chance to get rid of poor management, high rates and bad service in a corporation than it has under municipal ownership.

Considering the taxes they pay, the rates collected by the corporations compare favorably, not only here, but all over the country, with the rates of municipal plants. If corporation rates are in any instance too high they can readily be brought down through public regulation. Municipal rates cannot be so reduced.

These corporations, here and elsewhere, discovered long ago that the road to profit lay through a large volume of business, only to be obtained by the lowest rates at which service could possibly be furnished.

LEE SIDE o' L.A.

BY Lee Shippey

Personal Glimpses of World-Famed Southlanders

CLARA BOW is said to be the most widely known 22-year-old—and perhaps she is. In many countries besides her own—in Europe, South America and the Orient, she is one of the most popular actresses.

And yet she can't act.

But how she can be natural!

She's so natural she can't be any other way. She has no veneer, no social graces except such as spring from a kind, impulsive nature. She comes right out with what she feels, even if it's an Elizabethan adjective.

But she has an amazing imagination. She becomes, for the time, the girl whose actions she is living, whose thoughts she is thinking. If you'd address her as Miss Bow at such a moment she'd have to stop and think who Miss Bow is.

She did what every schoolgirl dreams of doing—became a star at 16. She probably has been more envied by the youngsters of many lands than any mere queen ever was. Yet we left her home feeling sorry for her. She seemed like a poor little girl who had been invited to a wonderful party because of her gift for entertaining, but had noticed less-entertaining girls snickering behind their hands, and was just about to burst into tears. She has acted hoyden roles so convincingly that she is, she believes, misjudged.

Used to Rolling Her Own

One reason for Clara's popularity in Spanish countries is that her hair photographs black, but it's a red-gold cloud. As she shook hands, we could hardly see her for the hair. "Sit down," she said, and dashed across the room, snatched up in her arms a backless seat so heavy it almost overbalanced her and so big it almost hid her, and lugged it back before we could protest.

"We were awfully poor," she said. "Three little rooms in a Brooklyn flat. Mother an invalid, father undersized and untrained. He picked up odd jobs around the wharf. My childhood playground was the street. But I learned a lot about life.

"I learned more from pictures than from school. I didn't go to pictures just to see. I went to live 'em. I'd go home and be a one-girl circus, taking the parts of everyone I'd seen, living them before the glass. And the kids I played with laughed at my round baby face and unruly light hair and called me Snookums.

Scared Nameless

"Still, when a magazine announced a contest for would-be film actresses, I sent in my photograph. It was one of those you get in exchange for this-coupon-and-$1. Then I died 500 deaths and lived 1000 triumphs a day till at last a letter came telling me to report for a test.

"Dad went with me. He was always a grand old dad. There were a lot of prettier, better dressed girls there, and I shrank against the wall. Finally the editor came out and looked around. When he saw me he grinned.

"'What's your name?' he asked.

"'I don't know,' I answered, truthfully. I'd just been a lot of different people in my mind.

He took me to another office, where there were some famous artists. I was made up, but all wrong. They laughed at me, and Corliss Palmer made me up right. Then they told me to fall off a roof and almost drown at sea and watch my sweetheart crashing in an airplane. It was hard to do, there in an office."

Empty Triumph

Clara won first honors, but no job resulted. So she had to go to work in a doctor's office. She kept trying, and finally got a chance to appear in "Down to the Sea in Ships"—getting $50 a week. It was life she knew, so she was just natural—and that picture made her.

But success came too late to save her mother, who died without seeing her daughter on the screen. Clara feels that prosperity a little sooner might have saved her—and so there is bitterness in thoughts of that success.

Since then Clara has won fame but not happiness. "I've had too many tough-girl parts," she complains. "So people whisper about me—say I'm the bad girl of Hollywood. I'm not. I lead a very quiet life. I haven't any boy friends. If I try to help one he goes around saying 'Clara Bow's crazy about me.' I like to drive—fast—and swim and play in my gym—but they've made me quit that to keep from getting too muscular. I like to look up at the stars, and think. I think lots more than people think I do. I like highbrows better than cads. There are highbrows I'd like to be friends with, but I know I'm not up to them—yet. So I study."

Could you beat that for modesty and simplicity?

"Do you read much?"

"I do now. The talkies keep you reading all the time, studying. You have to learn parts instead of saying anything which comes naturally. And then I've just bought 'Henry the Eighth'!"

Could you beat that for charming ingenuity?

"I do hope the picture I'm making now goes well," she added, earnestly, "for I'm just sweet and nice in it."

We hope so, too, for we couldn't help liking her. She seemed one of the frankest, honestest people we'd ever met.

(Next Sunday, Dr. Robert A. Millikan)

SCRAPPING CREEDS

"Scrapping Creeds" is the subject of an editorial in a recent church periodical. As a rule it might seem out of place for a secular paper to discuss matters as highly specialized as church creeds. It is sometimes difficult for the editorial mind to comprehend how many angels may be able to stand on the point of a needle.

But when the church press takes the initiative in discussing the scrapping of creeds, it is put into language we can understand. Even laymen may be able to get the point.

In these days the secular press seems to be defending creeds more than are the churchmen. A church without a point of view and a formulated statement of it would not seem to get very far.

There are those who loosely say, that if a man lives right, it does not make much difference what he believes. It does. When a man looked down the barrel of his gun to see whether it was loaded, it made a world of difference. He believed it empty. He was of a kind with the motorist who struck a match to see whether his tank had any gas in it. It had!

Thoughts are things. It makes a lot of difference what we think. A creed is a statement of belief. A church without a creed is so much junk. Point of view gives direction of action.

There doubtless are many points of creed that are outworn and could be scrapped. In some cases they are positively harmful and keep many from places of worship.

But a church without a creed is an institution without impact and will make little dent upon the age.

THE THOUGHT STEERERS

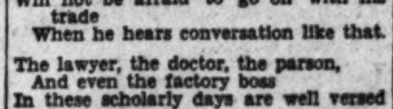
A correspondent explains that a new department in governmental affairs is being created in Japan. It is equivalent to a social education bureau and will have the task of leading and directing public thought in the channels where the administration thinks it belongs. The bureau will make studies of the student mind and have its ear to the ground for grievances and complaints. When the leaders are convinced that the public thinking and vocalization are becoming peevish and dangerous attempts will be made to meet the situation by books, pamphlets, lectures and motion pictures. In this country the men in the street would call this the division of propaganda. At that there may be warrant for its existence. Revolutions are frequently the result of unpatriotic misdirection. The energy could just as well have been guided into proper channels and converted to the public good.

TEST OF CITIZENSHIP

If the so-called good citizen will give his pledge to have no commerce with the bootlegger, nor to lend aid and comfort to the rum-runner the country would soon be as dry as the desert.

CLAPPING HANDS

The noise that plants make when growing must be enhanced mightily when nature brings her palms together.



TOO MUCH CULTURE

By James J. Montague

The thief-taking folk of the future
Will not be all scowls or all sneers,
Nor flattened of feet from patrolling a beat,
Nor abraded abaft of their ears.
They will chat in the language of culture,
Using elegant grammar with ease,
But there won't be much kick to the average "dick"
When they all have got college degrees.

I am certain that Barney the burglar
His bit will still busily ply
When he asks, "Who is dere?" with a bellicose air
And a soft voice responds: "It is I."
The man who is deft with a jimmy
And equally apt with a "gat"
Will not be afraid to go on with his trade
When he hears conversation like that.

The lawyer, the doctor, the parson,
And even the factory boss
In these scholarly days are well versed in the ways
To put erudition across.
But grammar, employed by a person
Whom the erring assume is a cop
Will, to borrow a cliche from the criminals' speech,
Prove merely a pitiful flop.

The people who profit by plunder
Are lacking the graces of mind,
They stand most in awe of the men of the law
Who to violent words are inclined.
The English one learns in a college
Suits most mortal men well enough,
But it's simply the truth to insist that the sleuth
Is only efficient when rough.

THE RINGED PLANET SATURN

BY FREDERICK C. LEONARD, S.M., Ph. D.
Of the University of California at Los Angeles

Unique among the worlds known to the astronomer is the ringed planet Saturn, now visible at midnight to the naked eye as a brilliant yellowish-white star due south and a little more than a third of the way from the horizon to the zenith. At that hour of night the planet may be identified as a lone first-magnitude object, just about as high above the southern horizon as the North Star, Polaris, is above the northern.

Saturn is a member of the sun's family of planets like the earth, but is much larger and more remote from the sun than our abode is; and Saturn is the nonpareil of the planets in that, in addition to possessing nine moons or satellites, it is the center of a wonderful ring system without a counterpart, so far as is known, elsewhere in the universe. The globe of the planet is encircled in its equatorial plane by several very thin, flat rings, one inside the other, and concentric with the planet. Through the telescope, Saturn, with the variegated cloud belts on its surface, its numerous satellites, and its marvelous ring system, presents one of the most magnificent sights in the heavens.

A few facts concerning the planet may be of interest. First, it is a nonluminous body like the earth, shining by reflected sunlight, and revolving around the sun in obedience to the law of gravitation. In the order of increasing distance from the sun, Saturn is the sixth planet out, our earth being the third, and revolves once around the central luminary in a period of twenty-nine and one-half years in a somewhat elliptical orbit, at a mean distance of about 886,000,000 miles from the sun. Since the earth is, in round numbers, 93,000,000 miles from the sun, and Saturn, the earth and the sun, in the order named, are now very nearly in the same straight line; Saturn having been "in opposition" to the sun on June 19, the present distance between the earth and Saturn is somewhat less than 800,000,000 miles.

The planet itself is the second largest in the solar system, being exceeded in size only by Jupiter and being some 72,000 miles in mean diameter; volume for volume, Saturn is more than 700 times as large as the earth. While our earth is the densest planet of all, being five and a half times as heavy as an equal volume of water, Saturn is the rarest, being but a little more than seven-tenths as dense as water, and obviously so light that it would float on water. Since the planet is so much larger than the earth, however, it is really ninety-five times as massive, but the force of gravity on its surface is on the average only slightly greater than that here on earth.

Saturn rotates on its axis once in about ten and a half hours, so that its day is considerably less than half as long as ours. On account of its low density and comparatively high speed of rotation, the planet is very "oblate," that is, flattened at the poles and bulged at the equator, the difference in length between its equatorial and polar diameters amounting to more than 10 per cent of the length of either one of them. Saturn is by far the most "square-shouldered" planet of all, our earth being literally as round as a bowling ball.

Saturn is so remote from the sun that it receives but one-ninetieth as much light and heat per unit of area as the earth does, and its surface temperature is probably 150 degs. below zero—or freezing—on the Centigrade scale.

It is unlikely that Saturn or any of the other giant planets, namely, Jupiter, Urans and Neptune, possesses what we should call a solid surface. All that we can see of Saturn through a telescope is its heavily cloud-laden atmosphere, which, as in the case of Jupiter, though less conspicuously, appears to consist of varicolored belts running parallel to the planet's equator. This great globe is doubtless still in a fluid, or semi-fluid, state, and, in company with the other giant planets, is probably at an early stage of evolution, totally unfit to support anything like life as we know it.

Turning our attention next to the ring system, we find that it is separated from the planet's surface by a distance of 7000 miles and that it is 171,000 miles in diameter. It consists of three rings, one within the other. The innermost ring, which is the faintest of the three, is called the "crape ring." The middle ring, the brightest of all, is at its outer edge fully as bright as the planet itself, and is separated from the outermost ring by a gulf called in honor of its discoverer, "Cassini's division," which is some 3000 miles wide. The rings are extremely thin, being probably not more than ten miles thick, and when they are turned edgewise to the earth, as they are occasionally, they are totally invisible.

The question always asked of the astronomer by a visitor at an observatory who is privileged for the first time to behold Saturn through a telescope, is: "What are the rings?" The answer to this question is that the rings are now known definitely to consist of myriads of individual particles or tiny moonlets, each of which revolves independently around the planet like a miniature satellite, and which are so small, so numerous, so compacted and so remote from us, that they present in their ensemble the appearance of continuous disc-like rings. Over a century ago the great French mathematical astronomer, Laplace, proved that a solid ring would be unstable—that it would be broken up by the tidal strains to which it would be subjected by the gravitational pull of the planet upon it.

About the middle of the last century the famous English physicist, Clerk-Maxwell, showed that the rings could be neither solid nor fluid, and that accordingly they must consist of separate particles. In 1889, the great American observer, Barnard, found that the innermost or crape ring, which is presumably the least dense of the three, does not cast a perfectly black shadow, as it would do if it were solid, but that a certain amount of sunlight filters through the interstices separating the particles composing the ring. Finally the illustrious American astronomer, Keeler, in 1895, by means of that most remarkable of all astronomical instruments, the spectroscope, obtained ocular proof that the rings revolve around the planet precisely as we should expect them to do, if they consist of discrete or disconnected particles. There now exists no doubt, from the foregoing and much additional evidence, as to the character of these wonderful appendages, which make the Saturnian system unlike anything else in the heavens.

Lastly, it may be inquired, why does Saturn possess rings? Some one has remarked that rings are strange substitutes for satellites and such, indeed, they are. It has been demonstrated mathematically that a fluid satellite, if revolving around the planet in as close proximity to it as the rings are, would be liable to disruption by the tidal strains to which it would be subjected by the planet. Here, then, undoubtedly lies the answer to the question, Why has Saturn rings? It is not probable that a single sizable satellite ever did exist in the region now occupied by the rings, that it was subsequently rent asunder by the planet, and left behind these rings as its disintegrated remains. Much more likely is it that the material now constituting the rings, as a result of the gravitational stresses to which it is subject, has never been able to coalesce into a single globe, and never will. And so it continues as a swarm of minute particles in the form of these thin broad rings, which, as has been said, make Saturn unique among the host of heaven.

MARCHING SONG

(Dedicated to B. P. O. E.)

Brothers on the way are we,
Answering the friendly call,
Ours the open hand and free,
Seeking each the good of all.

Here today and off tomorrow,
Whether skies be gray or blue;
There's no time for grouch or sorrow,
While we have our stuff to do.

Every corner rightly turned
Gets us farther on our way;
Then the joy of rest well earned
At the finish of the day.

Faring forth with song and laughter,
Building better than we know;
Night before or morning after—
Here's to us—Come on—let's go!

When the parting time is near
And the last good-bys are said,
Let there be no falling tear,
Give us cheerio instead.

Let there be no sad farewell then,
But with laughter and a song,
As we hit the homeward trail then,
Let's just say: "Well, Bill, so long!"

WHERE CAN I LEARN

Algebra?

BY LOUISE L. TEMPLE

[Prepared in co-operation with the Los Angeles evening high schools. Questions concerning free evening classes will be answered if stamped addressed envelope is inclosed. Address Louise L. Temple, care of The Times.]

A knowledge of algebra is necessary to pass certain examinations in the city and county civil service, especially in building for higher positions. This study is also required for entrance to the California Institute of Technology and in the aviation schools.

A free class in algebra is offered by the Polytechnic Evening High School, 400 West Washington Boulevard, beginning July 8, and meeting from 7 to 9 p.m. on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

There will also be a class in geometry, which can be used in any type of geometric or constructive drawing, such as architecture and in designs for inventions.

While the instruction in these classes is free, a dollar book deposit is required for each textbook, just to insure its safe return when the student is through with it.

NEPHEW AND NIECE BEGIN WILL FIGHT

Bequests of Susan Currier Attacked on Ground That She Was Incompetent

A niece and nephew, each of whom was bequeathed $10, yesterday attacked the will of Susan Currier of Walnut, who died May 30, 1928, leaving an estate of stocks, notes, mortgages and ranch property worth $426,060.

Contestants are Jennie Chappell and James N. Glenn, who contend that Mrs. Currier was mentally incompetent to make a will because of her advanced age, and also that she was improperly influenced by Hugh A. Thatcher, husband of a niece of Mrs. Currier, now dead.

Mrs. Currier was 87 years of age, and was 81 when her will was made. Besides leaving one-seventh of the residue of her property to Thatcher, Mrs. Currier left $1000 to Mrs. C. E. Hughes, a friend, and $3000 each to George A. Goodell, Murray C. Goodell, Ralph K. Goodell, Albert Quinn Nichols, Currier Thatcher, Marian Brashear Morris, Forrest B. Callan and Monroe Callan, all grand-nephews and grand-nieces. Nephews and nieces besides Thatcher who inherit one-seventh of the estate are Jacob M. Callan, Ada May Brashear, Susie Nichols and Mary Goodell. Mrs. Thatcher, deceased, would have inherited two-sevenths.

NEW FIRE CURB MOVEMENT ON

Group Formally Organizes for Forest Protection

State-wide Campaign Against Red Peril Launched

Motor Vehicle Department to Lend Aid in Drive

Launching the State-wide campaign against the red menace to California's grain and wooded areas, the Stop Forest Fires Committee was organized formally at a meeting held in the headquarters of the Automobile Club of Southern California. M. B. Pratt, State Forester, is chairman of the new organization, E. E. East, chief engineer of the Automobile Club of Southern California, is vice-chairman, and C. C. Cottrell of the California State Automobile Association, is secretary.

Included in the committee are S. B. Show, district forester, United States Department of Agriculture; Dr. L. I. Hewes, regional director, United States Bureau of Public Roads; C. H. Purcell, State highway engineer; H. W. Keller, director, Automobile Club of Southern California; Charles F. Todd, president of the County Supervisors' Association; Horace M. Albright, director, National Park Service; Charles B. Wing, chief, Division of State Parks.

MOTOR DIVISION TO AID

The Stop Forest Fires Committee is a co-ordination of Federal, State and county authorities to cope with the problem of fires in forests, brush and grain land. Co-operation not only of these agencies but of the State Division of Motor Vehicles will be had in the strict enforcement of State laws against throwing lighted matches, tobacco or other inflammable material from moving vehicles.

The new fire hazard developed by airplanes also will be given attention. Investigation shows that fires are being started by lighted cigarets dropped from planes. The co-operation of airplane passenger lines will be enlisted to prevent the spread of this new menace.

LEGISLATION STUDIED

The committee has indorsed and will support actively the Englebright bill now before Congress, and is making a study of other legislation providing appropriations for more adequate fire prevention in forest areas.

In view of the light rainfall last season, and the consequent greater fire hazard, an intensive campaign of fire prevention will be inaugurated immediately by the committee.

'Talkies' Lure Radio's Stars, Says Article

"They're in the Talkies Now," in the July issue of Radio Entertainment magazine, explains what has happened to many of the popular radio entertainers.

Another feature of the number is an interview with Paul Whiteman, maestro of jazz, who continues his Tuesday night programs from KMTR, Hollywood. With Harry Von Zell announcing, the feature goes over the Columbia network eastward.

June, the month for brides, has made serious inroads in the ranks of radio announcers and in "Dan Cupid Shoots Arrows," a resume of the list of June brides and bridegrooms is given.

Walter O. Look of Los Angeles also writes in Radio Entertainment of the world's mightiest organ which has just been installed in Chicago with the possibility that its music may be given over a radio chain as well as in the Chicago Stadium.

FIELD CHOSEN FOR ZEPPELIN

will be available at the field.

Adajacent mains of the corporation serving Los Angeles with fuel gas carry a gas which shows a higher British thermal unit and a higher pyrofax element than the gases at other fields inspected. The gas is also declared freer of poisonous carbon-monoxide gas. This gas is known as blau gas and is used as a fuel content.

The gas analysis was made by the Carbide and Carbon Chemical Corporation and results showed that Dr. Eckener will have nothing to worry about in replenishing his fuel supply, Lieut. Lange said. The local company also will service the airliner when it moors here.

A stub mooring mast now at San Diego will be reassembled at the Los Angeles airdrome.

One officer and two chief petty officers from the United States Navy's base at Lakehurst, N. J., will await the Graf's arrival here and take charge of landing and get-away operations, Lieut. Lange announced. The landing crew will be selected from local members of the California National Guard.

Lieut. Lange is chief pilot of the Goodyear airship Volunteer, and was selected by Dr. Eckener to make a personal investigation and decision on the Graf's proposed landing here.

The Graf has a summer flying schedule never before attempted by any aircraft, it was revealed in Dr. Eckener's communication. The ship is capable of cruising 120 hours and traveling 10,000 miles without landing. It carried sixty persons across the Atlantic and back to Germany last summer. Five 550-horsepower Maybach motors drive it through the air.

HEDGE DAMAGE DISALLOWED

City Attorney Werner yesterday reported to the Council that in the matter of the claim of Bert W. Jones for $1 damages to his cypress hedge, due to the burning of weeds by a city department, there is no municipal liability, wherefore the claim is disallowed.

DAVIS DEFENSE PLANS CHANGED

Bribery Defendant Will Not Take Stand Tomorrow

Delay Likely in Submission of Case to Jurors

Lawyers, Court Reporters and Others Face Call

A definite switch in defense plans in the Davis bribery case which has been on trial before Superior Judge Wilson since last Monday came yesterday and as a result the case probably will not be submitted to the jury of seven women and five men until some time near the end of this week.

Harold L. (Buddy) Davis, former chief deputy District Attorney who is charged with having accepted a $7500 bribe from Ben Getzoff, a Spring-street tailor, briber and confessed fixer, to "let up" on the prosecution of Ed Rosenberg, one of the defendants in the Julian stock-fraud case, will not take the stand as the first witness tomorrow morning, as was announced at the close of the session Friday afternoon.

Instead a long list of lawyers, court reporters and others who had to do with the investigation and prosecution as well as the defense in the Julian fraud case will be called. From this list, which includes twenty names, the defense will attempt to show Davis's own actions and statements during the Julian cases. An effort will be made to establish the defense contention that the former chief deputy District Attorney not only prosecuted Rosenberg to the best of his ability but opposed efforts to dismiss the case against him.

Jack Rosenberg, brother of the man who now is in the County Jail as the result of his conviction along with Keyes and Getzoff on bribery charges probably also will be called as a defense witness to testify that Davis sought the conviction of Ed Rosenberg along with the other defendants.

No explanation was offered for the sudden switch in defense plans yesterday with the exception of an announcement by Paul D'Orr, chief defense counsel, that "an effort will be made to bring before this jury all of the facts surrounding the charge against Davis. And it is the belief of the defense that it is unfair to attempt to convict anyone without every bit of testimony bearing on his actions, when it can be connected directly to the charge against him, being placed before the jury."

From the prosecution ranks headed by Chief Dep. Dist.-Atty. Stewart came little information yesterday.

"Our case is in and we believe that we have presented a good case," he said. "It is now up to the defense and we are just sitting by waiting to see what they are going to offer. We do not believe that the Julian stock-fraud case and the Keyes case should be tried all over again in this matter. If this sort of testimony is offered it goes without saying that we will object."

NEWS OF SOUTHERN COUNTIES

RIVERSIDE MAN [illegible] ON COMMISSION

Citrus Expert to Aid in War Against Fruit Fly

Agricultural Department Names Board of Seven

To Study Condition in Groves of Florida

RIVERSIDE, July 6.—Dr. J. H. Quayle, a member of the Riverside citrus experiment station staff and one of the most eminent authorities of the world on the Mediterranean fruit fly, today accepted membership on a commission of seven in whose hands the Secretary of Agriculture next week will intrust the important mission of determining progress made in eradication and control of the fly in Florida and recommending the next steps in the Herculean task of stamping the pest out of the southern groves.

Names of the other six prominent men chosen by the national agricultural head for the important task had not been furnished Dr. Quayle yesterday.

In an urgent telegram, Secretary Hyde yesterday stressed the pressing need for an immediate report from the scientists and requested Dr. Quayle to be in Washington Monday for the opening meeting of the commission. The Secretary described the situation as "very urgent."

Because of an extended itinerary scheduled for his trip next week through the northern part of the State Dr. Quayle will find it impossible to start for the East before the 14th inst., and he so informed the Secretary in a telegram sent shortly after receipt of the department head's communication. Dr. Quayle had accepted the post two days ago.

Unless the other six commissioners decide to await his arrival in Washington, Dr. Quayle will meet them in Florida about the 20th of this month, he announced. He is uncertain how long the survey of the infested area will require.

Virtually the entire future policy of the Federal Department of Agriculture and the other kindred organizations collaborating in the battle against the fruit fly is believed to hinge on the report to be made to Secretary Hyde by the special commission. There is uncertainty as to whether efforts to eradicate the fly should be continued on as large a basis as has been carried out during recent months or the work of the agriculturists and horticulturists be confined to controlling the spread of the pest

Child's Life in Danger

GARDEN GROVE, July 6.—The life of 20-months-old Harriet Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Davis of this city, hangs in the balance today as the result of a post-Independence Day accident.

A group of children playing about the street found an unexploded Roman candle. Some one produced a match and lighted the contrivance, which exploded and set fire to the child's dress. Her clothing was burned from her body before help arrived.

MINISTER KILLED IN AUTO CRASH

REDLANDS, July 6.—Members of the Nazarene Church here and residents of Redlands in general were shocked to learn of the death of Mrs. William Kopp in an automobile accident on the way to Colorado, where the Kopps were to make their home.

Rev. and Mrs. Kopp were both ministers of the Nazarene Church and served here as pastors during the time Rev. C. E. Lehman was ill a short time ago. Then Kopp accepted the pastorate of a church in Colorado and went there by train, leaving Mrs. Kopp and children to follow by automobile.

Mrs. Kopp and the children were on their way to Colorado when they had an accident and she was killed and two of the children seriously hurt.

CLUB SEATS OFFICERS

TUJUNGA, July 6.—Mrs. Anna A. Underhill was installed president of the Tujunga Woman's Club at the annual meeting held here. She will serve for another year as head of the organization. Other officers installed are Mrs. Ruth Snow, Mrs. Hattie Tieman, Mrs. Ethel Buck and Mrs. Eva Buck, vice-presidents; Mrs. Edith Wooldridge, recording secretary; Mrs. Flora White, federation secretary, and Mrs. Cora Smithson, treasurer. A luncheon preceded the installation program.

OFFICIALS CHRISTEN NEW JAIL

Deputy Sheriffs Break Bottle of Moonshine at Ceremonies at Ventura

VENTURA, July 6. — With appropriate ceremonies, ground was broken yesterday for the excavation on which will rise the new $150,000 jail, Sheriff's office and Justice Court behind the present Courthouse structure. Under Sheriff Howard Durley, Deputy Sheriffs William Suytar and Ray Ransdell and Dep. Dist.-Atty. Burton Rogers performed the rites by breaking two bottles of contraband "hootch" over the drilling machine when it went into operation.

The earth, which is to be removed from the present hill to make way for the new structure, is to be hauled to Seaside Park and used for filling in low places there.

Work Started on Hospital in Pasadena

PASADENA, July 6.—Excavation work for the new $1,000,000 Sisters of Mercy Hospital which, when completed, will be one of the finest institutions of its type on the Coast, was started today at the building site on Washington street at Foothill Boulevard. The six-story building will be completed within six months, E. C. Groves of the hospital land committee predicted.

Because the contractors, Barret & Hilp of San Francisco have been building another Sisters' hospital in Orange, operations here have been delayed since the building permit was issued several months ago.

Permit to build on the Washington street site was granted only after a long fight during which the hospital sought the right to build on Howard street and, later, on Brigdon Road. The present site is just outside the city limits.

Plans for the hospital building provide for 200 beds. Gothic architecture will be employed, and the building will stand on a portion of six and one-half acres of land.

New Coach for Anaheim High

REDLANDS, July 6.—Ben Carpenter, swimming instructor at the Redlands municipal plunge, has been appointed head athletic coach for Anaheim Union High School in Orange county. He has been offered the chance to take over the Anaheim work in September.

Carpenter, who played football at the University of Redlands in 1917 and 1918, has had considerable coaching experience. Following his graduation from Oregon Agricultural College, where he also starred in football and swimming, he became athletic coach at Commercial High School, Portland. He turned out successful teams there and then accepted the job as head coach at Visalia High School. He now holds the latter position and teaches swimming in Redlands during the summer periods.

Recently Carpenter took a civil-service examination in Los Angeles for the position of head of the swimming department of the municipal park system. He passed the test and is in line for appointment.

THREE AUTO VICTIMS IN SAME HOSPITAL

SANTA MONICA, July 6.—With both legs broken and almost severed, Pierce Wheeler, 2 years of age, lies at the Santa Monica Hospital today. At the same hospital is his mother, Mrs. Ruth Wheeler, in a critical condition, and another son, Cary W. Wheeler, 5, all victims of a crash last night at Fourth street and Georgina avenue, this city. Surgeons said Mrs. Wheeler had probably sustained a broken back, a compound fracture of the pelvic bone, skull fracture and internal injuries.

According to the police report Mrs. Wheeler was driving her machine when it crashed with a car driven by Bayard K. Gibson, 1602 Georgina avenue, this city. The Wheelers reside at 210 Chadburn avenue, Brentwood Heights. Gibson was uninjured and was not held following the accident. Pierce Wheeler was believed to have sustained a fractured back as well as the injuries to his legs. The child's left leg was almost severed between the knee and thigh, and his right at the ankle. The elder Wheeler boy was only slightly hurt.

WHOLE FAMILY POISONED

Four Members of Glendale Group Taken Ill Following Morning Meal

GLENDALE, July 6.—Four members of the family of J. C. Wood, 1616 Delvalle avenue, were under the care of physicians today as a result of poisoning, all four of them being stricken with illness immediately after they had eaten a cereal and milk at breakfast today. Mr. and Mrs. Wood, their daughter, Geneva, 4 years of age, and their son, Billy, 6, all ate some of the food before becoming ill.

Dr. H. R. Boyer, who was summoned, diagnosed their illness as due to arsenic poisoning and had them transferred to the Physicians and Surgeons Hospital. Detective Lieutenant Charles P. Blake, reported that the only form in which he was able to find any arsenic in the house was in an ant paste, that had not, he declared, been moved from its position for months, to judge by its dusty appearance.

Blake has turned over samples of the milk and cereal to the city health department for analysis. Only one member of the Wood household, the maid, Verna Loomas, who lives at 2824 East Broadway, Eagle Rock, escaped, having waited for her own breakfast until she could prepare the morning meal for the family.

Police investigating the case have been unable to uncover any circumstances that would lead them to suspect any person as the poisoner.

VOTERS RUSH TO WATER WAGON

Registration Indicates Heavy Vote at City Bond Election

SAN DIEGO, July 6.—With 69,080 San Diego voters registered for the $2,350,000 water bond election to be held here the 16th inst., a record-breaking march to the polls is expected and hoped for by bond supporters, who believe in the need of the money to modernize the city's water facilities, and pay for steps to be taken to develop future resources.

When the water bond issue of $2,750,000 was submitted to voters here last March 19, only 26,214 citizens cast ballots, according to figures from City Clerk Wright's office. This was slightly more than one-third of the 68,071 registrations for that election. The bonds were indorsed by 16,734 votes and rejected by 9670. They failed to pass by only 742 of the necessary 17,476 required for the two-thirds majority of the votes cast.

Funds sought at the coming election will be less by $400,000 the amount asked for the Lake Hodges Reservoir land options.

Interest in the election and the urgent need of a new Otay pipe line, one of the major issues of the election, are thought to be responsible for the more than 1000 citizens who have registered since the last election.

Officers Hear Vox Populi at San Diego

SAN DIEGO, July 6.—Because the Board of Supervisors has "heard from many sources" that the valuation placed by Tax Factors, Inc., on the Rancho Santa Margarita "is too low," in the words of Chairman Charles Good, twelve prominent property owners have been summoned to appear before the board Tuesday morning "to tell what they know."

It was in the same connection that the board decided to call the owners of Santa Margarita Ranch to "show cause why the valuation should not be increased." Stung by criticism from throughout the county to the effect the big rancho "valuation had been lowered while virtually every other piece of property had been raised," the Supervisors decided to "give the matter a thorough airing."

Subpoenas were issued by the board's clerk and served by the Sheriff's office upon Col. Ed Fletcher, Councilman James V. Alexander, George L. McKeehan of Oceanside, Charles Mendenhall of Escondido, Daniel Quinn and Fred Myers of Fallbrook, Ralph M. Dyar of Beverly Hills, George Sawday of Witchcreek, Harry D. Brodie of Oceanside, Paul Healy of San Diego, George Cromwell of Los Angeles, and Jack C. Adams of Pala. Dyar represents Rancho Cuyamaca, the valuation of which was appreciably raised by Tax Factors. Cromwell represents the San Diego Water Company.

Twenty-six applications for reduction of appraisement were presented by small property owners to the board yesterday, and three minor concessions were made. The board announced its next public meeting for Monday.

Bus Companies Form Merger

MAYWOOD, July 6. —A $75,000 corporation has been formed by four existing bus line concerns which will soon operate in this district as the new East Side Transit Company, the object of the new organization being to give better bus service to the district. The territory to be served will be Maywood, Bell, Huntington Park, Cudahy, Bandini and Belvedere Gardens.

The concerns which have merged were formerly known as the Holbrook & Shuler Company, the Stimson Transit Company, the Hudgewood & Adams service in Belvedere, and the Bandini bus line.

Frank J. Rice, a director of the organization, states that the new corporation would make possible improved local bus service in the district which is to be served, and he states that a taxicab service is to be operated in Huntington Park soon by this concern.

The tentative officers are Charles B. Holbrook, president; J. B. Stimson, secretary and treasurer; Vernon Shuler, Guy Eddy and Frank J. Rice, directors. The offices will be located at 4255 Fifty-second Drive, in Maywood.

WHERE TAX MONEY GOES

UPLAND, July 6.—Money to be raised for conducting Upland business affairs for the year amounts to $58,000, it was announced today, following completion of report of funds needed in the various departments.

Of the $58,000 to be raised by taxes, $38,000 goes into the general fund, $8500 for the library, $2000 for principal and bonded indebtedness, $4500 for music, parks and advertising and $5000 for fire fighting. A new pump and motor to be installed at Upland's new city well will cost the city $11,863.

EXPENSIVE SENTIMENT

Trusty Faces "Extra Hitch" for Spending Fourth of July With His "Kid" in Order to Help Him Celebrate the Day

ONTARIO, July 6. — Carl Lee, 32 years of age, 225 West Park street, former trusty at San Bernardino County Jail, couldn't spend the Fourth of July one year ago with his small son, so he walked away from the prison camp early this week, determined to shoot firecrackers "with the kid" this Fourth.

Today he was on his way back to the prison camp, with probability of spending an extra "hitch" for his few days' vacation.

Arrested here for walking away from the camp, Lee told police, "I just had to spend the Fourth with the kid, that's all. Me and the kid are pals but he's never shot fireworks before."

Lee said he tried to get a parole for the day while working on the road in Lytle Creek Canyon, but was denied it, so he watched his chance and walked to Ontario in three hours.

"Me and the kid had a great time, shootin' fireworks the night of the Fourth, too," he said. "Me run away? Say, if I was running away, do you suppose I'd come home? I was going back tonight and meet the line in the morning. You see, I was doing time last Fourth and couldn't be with the kid, and I was doing time again on his birthday last year and couldn't be with him. Say, what's three or four months more, anyway? I spent the Fourth with the kid, didn't I?"

Lee had fifty-eight more days to serve when he decided he had to spend the Fourth with the wife and "kid."

CUDAHY MARRIES ACTRESS

Scion of Meat Packer Family and Muriel Evansen Take Vows in Riverside Courthouse

RIVERSIDE, July 6. (Exclusive)—Michael J. P. Cudahy, scion of the Cudahy meat packer line, was married here at high noon today to Muriel Evansen, motion-picture actress, by Justice of the Peace Difani in his office at the County Courthouse.

The ceremony was performed in the basement of the courthouse where the Justice of the Peace has quarters. When the couple entered Justice Difani was preparing to perform wedding rites for a young Mexican couple, Juan Espinosa and Felicidas Villabuna. Cudahy and Miss Evansen took seats in the tiny quarters and watched the ceremony with interests. When their turn came they stepped forward and "acted natural."

The bride and bridegroom left the Courthouse immediately for a wedding luncheon at the Mission Inn. They plan a month's honeymoon in Honolulu.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward P. Daniels of Hollywood accompanied the couple here and stood up with them during the brief marriage ceremony.

Young Cudahy, 21-year-old participant in an attempted New Year's elopement three years ago, and Miss Evansen, were dressed in sports clothes. Miss Evansen wore a gray sports ensemble, set off by a corsage of orchids, while Cudahy appeared in white flannels and a gray sports coat.

The couple applied here last week for a license to wed.

Although Cudahy's mother, Mrs. Edna Cudahy, was not present at the wedding it is understood that she was not opposed to the marriage.

Miss Evansen, known on the screen as Muriel Evans, is 18 years of age. She came here from Minneapolis eight years ago and resided with her mother at 1823 Garfield Place.

Bits of Hay Cause Arrest

POMONA, July 6.—Bits of hay together with fingerprints, brought about the arrest today of Marion R. Hamilton, 16-year-old San Bernardino youth, and following a grilling by Chief of Police William S. Kirby, and other officers, the lad confessed to the theft of four automobiles in this city during the past month.

His downfall came as a result of his theft last night of a machine belonging to John Connor, local oil salesman, the machine being found in the residential section with the back seat littered with pieces of barley hay. The boy was apprehended in the vicinity, and recognized by officers as being an old offender. Search of his room revealed bits of the same variety of hay, and coupled with fingerprints found on the cars his confession was but a matter of a few minutes.

Judge White, at the boy's hearing today in Justice Court held him to answer to juvenile authorities on Connor's complaint.

Elderly Woman Hurt by Auto

VENTURA, July 6.—Mrs. Dora McPhail, an elderly Santa Barbara woman who has been visiting her son here, was seriously injured this afternoon when a car containing tourists from Utah struck her and knocked her down as she was crossing a street.

She was taken to the Big Sisters Hospital by a passing motorist, and while the extent of her injuries had not been determined, it was said at the hospital that she was in a critical condition.

The car that struck her was driven by W. H. Landmesser, 1903 West Eleventh East, Salt Lake City, who was accompanied by his wife. They were detained here, but not arrested, by the Sheriff's office until all facts of the accident come to light.

Committee to Wrestle With Water Problem

ANAHEIM, July 6. — Making another attempt to solve the county's flood-control and water-conservation problem, a group of leaders met here last evening under direction of Lotus H. Loudon, president of the Orange County Associated Chambers of Commerce, and selected a committee to study the problem from all angles. This committee, consisting of fifteen names, will be augmented by another group to be made up of one member from each group represented in the associated chamber.

The committee is to seek a plan that will be acceptable to the voters, who recently rejected a plan devised by the county officials.

The committeemen named last evening include N. T. Edwards, chairman, Orange; Mrs. Suzanne Bixby Bryant, Los Angeles and Yorba; Ole Hansch, San Clemente; Lew Wallace, Newport; James Irvine, Jr., Irvine; A. N. Saxton, Orange; C. C. Chapman, Fullerton; William Wallop, Placentia and Anaheim; Gaston Bastanchury, Fullerton; W. T. Newland, Huntington Beach; Tom Talbert, Huntington Beach; W. W. Dungan, Garden Grove; W. B. Williams, Frank Purinton and L. A. West, Santa Ana.

New Road to be Nine Miles Long

CHATSWORTH, July 6.—The city engineering department has finished the drawing of deeds for more than nine miles of dedications that will be necessary to extend the Valley Circle Boulevard from Ventura Boulevard around the western end of Chatsworth Lake, through Lakeside Park and along the Oakwood Cemetery properties, it is announced by the district office for the valley at Van Nuys. The deeds provide for a right of way eighty feet wide which is regarded as necessary because of the ultimate importance of the highway when completed.

The new road is expected greatly to develop this distant end of San Fernando Valley and no opposition is looked for in obtaining the rights of way sought. Property owners already have asked for the improvement and the Los Angeles City Council has ordered the work done. Engineers have completed the survey for the highway and have made plans for the paving.

The road will run from Ventura Boulevard to Chatsworth, through one of the most attractive scenic sections in the valley.

Chicken Thief Loses Machine

ANAHEIM, July 6. — The driver of an automobile registered to C. H. Schach, 1742 La Salle avenue, San Francisco, can have the machine if he can explain satisfactorily to the Anaheim police his presence last night in the hen coop of J. P. J. Johnson on North East street.

Johnson reported today that he was awakened during the night by a disturbance in his coops. Taking his rifle he went to the rescue of his poultry, but the culprit escaped. Looking around, he found near the hen house the automobile registered to the San Francisco man. The police are holding the car.

CITY OFFICIALS WAGE WAR AGAINST INSECTS

GLENDALE, July 6. — Glendale shock troops today launched an offensive against the fleas that have been making life a burden for the employees of the municipal offices, when H. C. Vandewater, Building Inspector, was commissioned generalissimo of the city forces and ordered to route the invaders at any cost. Vandewater armed his squads with spray guns, loaded with deadly chemicals, and moved to the attack, after a reconnaissance had convinced him that the fleas had not come from the ivy that had been sheared from the walls of the City Hall, but from a bat roost that had been disturbed by workmen engaged in repairing some portions of the building. Leaping lightly from stenographers to billing clerks, the fleas today had even invaded the inner office of City Manager J. W. Charleville, who is held responsible for the presence of the little pests, and he had to shoo them off his desk before he could settle down to his official duties.

Girl Held for Long List of Check Charges

MONROVIA, July 6.—After successfully evading police for months, Margaret Addis, 23-year-old girl, wanted on charges of check forging and burglary in several other Southern California cites, was arrested last night by Chief of Police Scott who was notified of her apprehension in Arcadia by Chief Coberly. The girl was recognized by a Monrovia woman yesterday afternoon in Arcadia who notified police. She is being held in the City Jail here.

Although the girl knew Chief Scott she refused to recognize him at first, but later talked of her adventures during the past eighteen months. She admitted passing a large number of fictitious checks but said she could not remember the many different aliases she had used. "I couldn't begin to remember the names I have used to forge checks," she told Scott.

Examination of her effects revealed a large quantity of checks on many banks throughout Southern California. She admitted that she had written two checks for $5 each in Glendora last Wednesday.

In 1925 she was arrested here for forging checks amounting to $150. Friends of her family who had known her when a child, came to her aid at that time and made good the checks. She was placed on probation and was given employment in a local home where she remained until shortly before her employer's death about eighteen months ago.

Since then she has returned here several times and cashed checks. Among aliases used on checks here are Hilda Doyle, Ellen Bradley, Lucille Kennedy, Alice Peterson, Ruth A. Miller, Alice Walker, Vera Newton, Ruth Hoffian, Ethel Parks and Evelyn Hale. The girl declared to City Mother Mrs. Woodland last night that she had only forged checks when she was broke and had no other way of obtaining money. She had been residing at a hotel on Grand avenue, between Sixth and Seventh, and had been working recently in Los Angeles taking care of children, she said.

The girl's mother, Mrs. Marie Laddis, and a sister, Mrs. Ralph Campbell, both live at 1209 South Syracuse street, Portland, Or. The girl will be arraigned next week, Scott said.

No Surplus of Navel Oranges Next Season

SAN BERNARDINO, July 6.—The surplus in navel oranges that has depressed the market during the present season will disappear next year and there will be a shortage of navels it was predicted today by John P. Coy, County Horticultural Commissioner. The navel crop of San Bernardino county, the principal navel orange producer in the State, will be only 60 per cent of normal. A late and light bloom combined with a heavy drop of young fruit has shortened the crop. Mr. Coy puts the Valencia crop at 75 per cent of normal, grapefruit at 75 per cent and lemons at 75 per cent. He offers no solution for the shortage in navels as compared with other varieties of citrus fruits.

Priest Dies at Montebello

MONTEBELLO, July 6.—Father Luke Eichenlaub, pastor of St. Benedict's Church died yesterday at the St. Vincent Hospital.

Father Eichenlaub had been ill for many months but the prospects of building up a growing parish and a new church building had kept him active until after the church was dedicated two weeks ago. Following the church dedication he collapsed in Los Angeles and never recovered.

Father Eichenlaub was fondly called Father Luke by his parishioners. He was born at Eurora, Ind., March 2, 1886. He was professed a Benedictine monk July 2, 1905, ordained priest July 1, 1911. For the past five years he had been prior of St. Benedict's Monastery of Montebello. He was educated at St. Vincent's Arch Abbey at Latrobe, Pa. He leaves a mother brother and sister in Kentucky.

'House Divided' Cannot Stand

SANTA BARBARA, July 6.—The problem of what to do with a double house on a lot owned by two parties one of whom has leased and the other has not, has arisen in the development of the recently discovered oil field. The lessor wants to put up a derrick on the lot, in which case the house will have to be moved.

But the owner who has not leased wants the house left where it is. A civil engineer has made a survey of the house and lot for plans to divide the home by cutting it in two parts.

AIRPORT TELEPHONE SERVICE INCREASED

VAN NUYS, July 6.—Two telephone switchboards are now in use at the Metropolitan Airport, northwest of here, one at the Bach plant and the other at the main office of the airport.

Growth of business at the Bach plant necessitated the addition. The switchboard at the port office has two trunk lines and four stations. To meet the expansion of other concerns now in operation at the airport, the Pacific Telephone Company has increased its equipment to handle service to and from the rapidly growing field.

APPOINTMENT IS ALL WET

Mayor of Santa Barbara Gives Bath-house Job to Poole

SANTA BARBARA, July 6. Mayor T. R. Finley announced to the members of the City Council at their regular meeting yesterday afternoon that he had appointed Peter Poole to supplant John M. Henney as manager of the municipally owned Los Banos Del Mar bath-house. Henney was appointed when the position was created, but City Attorney Gour held that the appointment was illegal because the ordinance did not become effective for thirty days. The City Purchasing Agent, Carl Hasse, was ordered to open the bath-house and Henney was placed in charge of it temporarily, under his supervision.

College Youth Goes to Jail in Redlands

REDLANDS, July 6.—Leon Goucher, scion of a wealthy Oklahoma family, who has been in school in Redlands, will spend the next six months in jail unless his parents relent and make good on several checks that he gave local merchants. Judge Potter gave Goucher the shock of his life today when he sentenced him to six months in the County Jail. He will stay there unless he can make good on the checks.

The youth appeared in Police Court attired in the latest fashioned sport clothes. Southern California had wrought havoc with his financial status, he told the arresting officers in the courtroom. He said he had expected days of blissful recreation here until he ran out of money and his folks in Ava refused to replenish his pocketbook.

"I guess the grain industry isn't doing so well back home," he grinned. "It's funny that father didn't make good those checks, as I thought he surely would. I didn't think this was a serious offense. Back home all of us college boys write checks without funds in the bank and make them good at the end of each month when our allowances come from home. Why don't you do it that way out here? It saves fellows like me lots of embarrassment. This is my first trip to jail."

Valley Gathers Fine Fruit Crop

SAN FERNANDO, July 6.—Apricot growers in all parts of San Fernando Valley are in the midst of the harvest of their crops. This year the fruit is of fair quality despite a chill spring and recent extremely hot weather.

While there are numerous drying yards in all parts of the valley, much of the fruit this season will come to the canning plant here, and to the Sunset Canning Company plant at Pasadena. Each plant, it is said, will can about 1000 tons. It is estimated that the valley this year will produce between 12,000 and 15,000 tons of apricots, the price being $45 for No. 1 and $30 for No. 2 grades. Peaches will be canned after the apricot crop. No estimate is made of this year's peach output, though it is stated that tonnage will run better than the last two years.

While no definite price statement is made, it is believed peaches will bring around $30 a ton for first grades and $50 for seconds. The local canning plant will open Monday with a full force of workers.

PASTOR AT VAN NUYS QUITS TO GO TO YALE

VAN NUYS, July 6.—Rev. George N. Reeves, pastor of Central Christian Church here, has resigned his pastorate and will leave on August 1, next, for the East, where he will enter Yale for a continuation of his theological studies. Mr. Reeves will go by auto, and will be accompanied to New Haven, Ct., by Mrs. Reeves. It has not been determined who will succeed him in Van Nuys.

CANNERIES IN OPERATION

POMONA, July 6.—With the Pasadena Sunset Cannery already operating with crew of 250 men and women, canning of apricots will continue with renewed impetus, the Cutler Lobinger plant opening next Tuesday morning on this variety of deciduous fruit with an expected pay roll of 450 employees. Most of the fruit is coming from Hemet with a portion being brought in locally. Local canneries expect to run to capacity this year due to a short northern crop following disastrous freezes last spring.

"Expansion of the business since then has been entirely out of earnings and today the company is believed to be the largest concern of its kind in the West."

Week's Gossip Tells of New Developments

NEW YORK, July 6. (Exclusive) Some of the more salient points to this week's gossip follows:

A record-breaking year is being forecast for Liquid Carbonic. Sales are reported to have been showing gratifying increases since the advent of the warm weather. The major activity of the company consists of supplying carbonic gas to manufacturers of warm-weather beverages and, in addition to this, diversified uses are being found for the company's products. Estimates of earnings for the fiscal year ending September, run from $6.50 to $8 a share.

Semiannual statements of rubber companies are now being published, the first of these was Goodrich, which showed earnings equivalent to $4.05 a common share, against a net loss of over $1,500,000 in the same period of 1928. In view of the heavy automobile production of the past two years it seems only reasonable to assume that tire and rubber companies will do a heavy replacement business, and for this reason earnings estimates for Goodrich run as high as $10 a share for the full year.

Aside from Auburn Motors, reports are to the effect that the automobile stocks have been heavily sold short in recent months. The keen competition existing in the industry has been the basis for the circulation of bearish reports on those engaged in the automobile industry.

Activity has again cropped out in International Combustion Engineering. In connection with the strength reports are prevalent that the company is now delivering some 3,250,000 cubic feet of gas to the public service of New Jersey daily, from new low temperature coal distillation plant recently built in that State.

CURB EXCHANGE ACTIVITY GAINS

Los Angeles Stock Market Claims Fourth Rank in Nation

In the number of shares traded for the first six months of 1929, the Los Angeles Curb Exchange with a turnover of 25,098,672 shares ranks fourth among the exchanges of the United States, Philip S. Lee, secretary and manager, declared yesterday. The volume was exceeded only by the New York Stock and Curb exchanges and the Chicago Exchange.

Listing of 66,150,438 shares with a market value of $1,897,177,627 during the first half of 1929, comprising fifty-three issues of forty-seven companies, is also believed to be a record among western exchanges for a six-month period, Mr. Lee said.

NEW UTILITY DEAL SIGHTED

Cleveland Steel Magnate's Purchase of United Light and Power Control Starts Rumors

NEW YORK, July 6. (Exclusive)—Cyrus S. Eaton, the Cleveland steel magnate, has recently acquired practical control of the United Light and Power Company, it became known yesterday upon the continuance of rumors that various interests were desirous of acquiring the property.

This development, according to well-informed observers, took place as a result of the surrender of part of the holdings of the Koppers-Mellon interests in the Middle West utility, which has assets of more than $500,000,000 with gross earnings of $89,000,000 last year. Because of Mr. Eaton's commanding position in the company, any transaction of this sort would naturally be brought to his attention, but his offices had no statement to make.

Wall street has heard rumors for several days to the effect that Bonbright interests which are back of American Super Power and of Commonwealth and Southern were bidding for the property on behalf of the latter company, but these reports were not substantiated at the offices of Bonbright & Co. Further reports to the effect that an Insull-North American alliance had been formed with respect to the acquisition of United Light and Power properties also lacked confirmation.

The United Light and Power properties geographically are located in territories adjacent to those of the Middle West Utilities system controlled by Insull interests and those of the North American Power and Light group, in which North American and Insull interests share control. Reports of an alliance of the latter groups with regard to United Light and Power are directly traceable to the situation affecting North American Power and Light. Frank Dame, president of North American, however, says that his company is not now engaged in any merger transaction of any sort.

According to observers of recent utilities deals, human interest factors will play a part in any transactions involving the United Light and Power properties. Mr. Eaton has played an important part in building up United Light and Power group and, according to his friends, the utility business is in no sense subsidiary to his extensive interests in the steel industry, both Republic Iron and Steel Company and Inland Steel being under his control. He also has the principal interest in the banking firm of Otis & Co.

U. S. INVESTORS BUY HUGE TOTAL OF NEW SECURITIES

CHICAGO, July 6. (AP)—The average American investor's share of the new stock and bond offerings of the past six years is $18,000.

The investment banking firm of Stone & Webster and Blodget prepared a bird's-eye view of the nation's recent growth in prosperity, showing that almost $46,000,000,000 worth of new securities were purchased by American investors between 1923 and 1929.

Based on the generally accepted estimate of 15,000,000 stockholders in the United States, each one must have increased his holdings by an average of $3000 yearly for the past six years. More than three-fourths of the total amount was in bonds and common stocks.

The recent tendency of common stocks to rise in the social scale and become eligible for major financing does not seem to have been carried so far as most observers believed.

Styles in financing, of course, change like styles in dress, food, music and philosophy, but this survey indicates that common stocks still have a long distance to travel before they displace bonds in the industrial structure of the country.

The proportion of common and preferred stocks in new offerings showed a steady increase from 1923 onward. In that year only $751,000,000 in stocks were sold to the public out of a total volume of new offerings approaching $5,000,000,000.

In 1927 and 1928 the total offerings remained almost at the same level, just above $10,000,000,000, but the amount of common and preferred stocks increased from $1,772,000,000 to $3,547,000,000.

HIGHLIGHTS OF WEEK ON MART GIVEN

Intervention of Holiday Halts Bull Movement of First Three Days

NEW YORK, July 6. (AP)—With stock prices again hurled up to record levels, as indicated by the Associated Press indices, the stock market has entered another critical testing period. Four times previously this year, the market has reached a new high peak, only to break under the strain of credit uncertainty.

Although brokers' loans showed one of the largest gains ever recorded in the past week, the Federal Reserve total rising $227,000,000 to within $34,000,000 of its record level, Wall street was inclined to the belief that coming weeks will bring more stable money conditions than has been experienced in months. Nevertheless, speculative sentiment was in a measure sobered by the large gain in loans, and profit taking was rather heavy late in the week.

The volume of trading picked up somewhat the first three days of the week, but many traders did not return to town between the Independence Day holiday and the week-end, and activity slackened on Friday and Saturday. Call money was pushed up to 15 per cent by the midyear settlements and the exercise of rights to new stocks and bonds, but it dropped abruptly to 6 per cent on Wednesday, and held at 7 all day Friday.

Wall street finds considerable comfort in the assumption that the Federal Reserve authorities have adopted a more passive attitude toward the stock market, and no further active measures to restrict credit are looked for, now that the crop-moving season is in the near offing.

COTTON NEAR CRISIS STAGE

Plants Reported Making Good Headway and Next Two Weeks Tell Size of Second Weevil Crop

MEMPHIS, July 6. (Exclusive)—At the time that the second crop of boll weevil is emerging, the cotton crop in the central belt is showing very satisfactory growth and fruiting. General rainfall will be beneficial, but so far the cotton is not suffering severely from drouth.

The overwinter weevil have laid their eggs and about gone, and the current fortnight will tell the tale whether the second and most dangerous crop of weevil will be large or small. Cotton being late is just beginning to square good in the Memphis area and the first bloom from this country was brought into the cotton exchange this week some two weeks late.

In the interim between the first and second crop of weevil, the infestation has been retarded everywhere, aided, of course, by hot, dry weather.

The Mississippi State Plant Board found conditions as follows:

"Examinations by board inspectors on 252 farms in fifty-two counties during the past week indicate that boll weevil damage in Mississippi is about the same as for the preceding week, with prospects for very heavy injury during the next two weeks if the weather continues favorable for weevil multiplication."

Private and authentic advices from Phillips county, Arkansas, state that cotton crop prospects are better than for many years. According to A. M. Rogers, farm agent, the crop in the hill sections is better than last year, although the stand is not as good as usual, due to the wet spring. Acreage in Phillips shows an increase due to many idle fields going into cotton this year. During the past five years Rogers says, there has been a steady increase in the use of idle lands.

Today cotton is ten to twelve inches high and growing rapidly, although very slender and anemic. With good weather for the next thirty days it can produce a fair crop, but cannot withstand any sort of drouth.

Reports to the Commercial-Appeal indicate that 48,468,000 acres standing on the 1st inst., were planted to cotton this year. This is an increase of 3.3 per cent, approximately, compared with the government's revised estimate of 46,946,000 acres July 1, 1928.

Most of the net increase is accounted by increases in Louisiana and south parts of the belt east of the Mississippi River, which were driven away from cotton several years ago by boll weevil and by increases in Oklahoma and Northwest and West Texas.

Reports indicate that the crop made satisfactory progress during June in nearly all areas of the belt. The prospects are considered bright but for the presence of boll weevils.

PROFIT SELLING CHECKS UPTURN

Few Issues Close Down But Gains Predominate

Activity of Farm Implement Shares Features

Trading Volume at Session Only Moderate

NEW YORK, July 6. (AP)—The stock market held its ground in a manner highly satisfying to the bull forces today, although the huge increase of $227,000,000 in brokers' loans reported last night caused a momentary sinking spell at the opening.

Considerable week-end profit taking had to be absorbed, and a number of issues closed a few points lower, but the Associated Press price indices indicated that gains slightly more than offset the losses. So many brokers and traders were out of town for the week-end that trading was in moderate volume, the turnover for the two-hour session barely exceeding 1,500,000 shares.

There was little in the day's news to influence the trend of the market, although another reduction of one-eighth of 1 per cent in bid and asked rates on bankers' acceptances gave further evidence of the slackening of the credit strain. Yesterday's call money rate of 7 per cent carried over the week-end, and bankers expect that call loans may be firm early next week as the final mid-year settlement checks are returned for collection, and banks pay off more of their borrowings at the Federal Reserve. If matters are allowed to take their course thereafter, however, a marked improvement is expected.

The week-end trade and business reviews were generally gratifying, with the building and brick-manufacturing industries about the only soft spots reported. F. W. Dodge Corporation reported that building contracted in the States east of the Rockies in June declined 7 per cent from May, and 16 per cent from June, 1928. Several more favorable June sales reports of chain-store systems came to hand. It was stated in motor circles that the demand for new models remains insistent and that only a mild seasonal decline in manufacturing is anticipated.

Farm implement shares were a conspicuously strong group, reflecting the sharp rally in grain prices this week. Case Threshing was sent up 38 points to a record price at 380, Minneapolis Moline reached new high ground in a moderate gain, and International Harvester and Oliver farm equipment mounted about 3 points. Food shares were also well bought, Corn Products, Continental Banking A and Coca Cola rising 3 to 6 points to new peaks.

Eastman Kodak was a strong feature, shooting up nearly 12 points to 205 3-4, getting above the 200 mark for the first time. The buying was attributed to rumors of an impending four-for-one split-up and unconfirmed reports of the development of a new film which can be manufactured much more cheaply than present types. Allied Chemical, People's Gas, Cutler Hammer, International Telephone, Hoe & Co., International Business Machines, Dudium Steel, Simmons & Youngstown Sheet and Tube were other issues reaching new high prices for the year or longer.

Auburn Auto, which had a violent upward spurt yesterday, fell back 10 points, but recovered half its loss. Commercial Solvents lost nearly 9 points. Du Pont and National Biscuit lost 3 or 4 points in profit taking. United States Steel, Packard, General Motors, Radio and General Electric sagged about a point.

PORTER ON BOARD OF PAN AMERICAN

John Clinton Porter, Mayor of Los Angeles, was yesterday elected to the board of directors of the Pan American Bank of California at the regular monthly meeting of the directorate.

Mr. Porter will actively engage in the affairs and management of that institution, it was announced.

Control of the Pan American Bank was recently purchased by a group of capitalists headed by W. G. Barnhisel, Franklin Flick and C. E. Tainter. It is understood that a new holding company will be formed shortly and that additional financial institutions will be acquired from time to time.

NEW YORK CURB STOCKS

NEW YORK, July 6. (AP)—The curb exchange rallied today after a weak opening. Selling pressure exerted against the utilities most of the week was lifted after the first hour, and almost the entire list improved. A few scattered issues were shoved to record high prices, with spectacular advances made by some of the specialties.

Cosden Oil again was thrust into the spotlight with a 5-point advance to a new high at 85½. The present common represents a three-for-one split-up of the old common which was given away with preferred stock on the basis of one-half share of common with each share of preferred stock sold at 102. Cosden has just signed a contract for purchase of oil from American Maracaibo Company. The rest of the oil group was quiet.

Aluminum Company soared 30 points to close at the record price of 365, after opening at 340. Yesterday this stock established a new high at 335. This company's earnings in 1929 were more than double those of 1927. The Mellons of Pittsburgh control the company, which is the sole producer of aluminum in the United States. In January, 1928, the stock sold as low as 120. Another strong specialty was Tubize Artificial Silk with a jump of 18 points.

Central States Electric, holding company whose principal investment is North American, was the outstanding strong feature of the utilities, getting up to a new high at 151½ and closing at 151 for a net gain of 13⅝. American Light and Traction rose 3, Electric Bond and Share 3¼ and the Buffalo, Niagara and Eastern issues 1½ each. Electric Investors recovered all but a fraction of a loss of 5 points at the opening. Consolidated Gas of Baltimore closed down 4½ and Commonwealth Edison dropped 10.

In the air group Fairchild dipped 1¼ to a new low for the year at 18⅝. Sikorsky closed nearly a point higher.

The investment trusts were active, with National Investors, a newcomer to the board, soaring 23½ to a new high at 48. Since its listing last month this stock has sold as low as 11½. Goldman Sachs yielded a point and a fraction.

New highs were made U. S. Finishing, Standard Screw, A. O. Smith, while the United Stores common slumped to a new low.

Newmont Mining was strong, but Noranda lost part of its yesterday's gain.

The closing price is omitted when same as the low, and both low and close when same as the high.

NEW YORK BOND PRICES

NEW YORK, July 6. (AP)—A dull Saturday bond market was enlivened in the last half hour by a sharp rise in convertibles, which finished the short session with net gains of from 1½ to 5 points. Other issues were irregular, with the investment rails maintaining their firmness.

International Telephone 4½s made a quick recovery of 6 points from the day's minimum, closing with a net gain of 3 points at the new high figure of 163½. American Telephone 4½s moved within a range of nearly 3 points, finishing 1½ net higher at 148, while Atchison 4½ advanced 1⅛ to 137⅞. Alleghany corporation convertible 5s, 1949 issue, moved up ½.

With the exception of these four bonds, trading was virtually at a standstill. Industrials and utilities, as well as foreign bonds and United States government issues, changed hands in such small volume that no definite trends were perceptible.

The quotations represent sales of bonds (in thousands of dollars) and the high, low and closing prices in the order given. To expedite transmission, the close is omitted when the same as the low, and both low and close when same as high.

Pacific Finance Soars 5 Points to Feature Local Half-Day Session

Pacific Finance Company featured trading on the brief session yesterday of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange by following up a 5-point advance on Friday with another jump of 5 points to a high at 120. The stock closed at the top, which is just ¼ point below the peak for the year, and was in active demand from the opening. The balance of the market, while quiet, held to firm levels.

Byron Jackson was another strong spot of the session and on an unusually brisk turnover advanced 1 1-2 points to a high at 37 1-2, where it ended the day. Globe Grain gained 1-2 to 29, while Douglas Aircraft yielded 1-4 to 36 3-4. No changes were recorded among the utilities.

Trading on the oil board was unusually light and with the exception of Rio Grande Oil, which lost a full point to 30 1-4, the few changes recorded were confined to small fractions. Bank stocks held steady. Pacific National Company, in the miscellaneous group, dropped off 2 points to a new low at 28.

PROFIT SELLING CHECKS UPTURN

advanced about 2 cents more only to run into profit taking resulting from bearish weather reports from South Dakota, and a reaction at Winnipeg, closing a cent and more lower. Corn sagged more than a cent in poor cash demand. Cotton eased slightly.

Foreign Exchanges were dull and fairly steady, Sterling Cables holding at $4.84 7-8, and the Japanese yen rallying a tenth of a cent further to 44.70 cents.

Profit Taking on Wheat Mart Brings Setback

CHICAGO, July 6. (AP)—Hurry to grab profits while the grabbing was good resulted in sharp setbacks for wheat values today. Reactions, however, came only after the wheat market had outdone the season's high price record. Some moisture relief in the spring wheat drought region was noted, and big receipts of domestic winter wheat were also an incentive to sell, but crop advices from both north and south of the Canadian line continued extremely pessimistic, reported impairment in Canada reaching as high as 7½ per cent since June 15.

Closing quotations on wheat here were unsettled, 1⅛@1¼c under yesterday's finish. Corn closed 1⅛@1⅜c down, oats ⅝@¾c off and provisions varying from 5c decline to an equal advance.

A maximum break of almost 4c a bushel in wheat values took place as compared with the highest prices reached. Rallies though followed the break and there was considerable reinstating of speculative lines, especially after the Canadian weather forecast was received, indicating drought conditions in Canada would continue and that perhaps profit-taking at this stage was more or less premature, in view of sensationally radical crop damage conditions shown by reports from the Canadian wheat growers' organization and reflected by a steep upturn of 4⅛d in closing prices for wheat today at Liverpool.

Houses that of late have been leaders on the buying side of the wheat market here were among the heaviest sellers today. The principal motive ascribed for their action was unwillingness to risk chances, which at times seemed promising, that the drought in the Northwest might be practically ended before Monday, and that further crop damage would at least be minimized. A good deal of notice, too, was taken of renewed indications of a glut of domestic wheat in the harvest district Southwest, primary arrivals this week totaling 11,000,000 bushels, against 7,000,000 bushels the week previous, bringing about complaints of car shortage and of the shutting down of elevators, notably in the district around Wichita, Kan.

Corn and oats swayed in line with the action of wheat. Besides, excellent weather for corn growth tended to promote selling in the corn market.

Provisions were steadied by upturns in the value of hogs.

Committees in Italy Control All Farm Work

BRESCIA (Italy) July 6. (AP)—Farm owners in Italy must maintain a given quota of hired hands by a decision of the Court of Appeals in this city. The finding sustained the right of local "control committees" of the agricultural workers' syndicate to set these quotas.

Two years ago the committee in charge of this district decided that Giovanni Borgo, a wealthy farmer, ought to pay $37 to ten hired men whom he had discharged. He appealed to the committee for the whole province, and that body held that he should employ twenty-six hands instead of the sixteen he kept on his place. It ordered him to pay the ten discharged men $155, representing their wages from the time of discharge to the date of the hearing.

Borgo carried the case to the civil courts, which have upheld the decision of the Fascist syndicates.

Fatigue Mark on Air Propellers Highest Known

ATLANTIC CITY, July 6. (AP)—One of the highest of all known rates of mechanical fatigue—that of airplane propellers—is reported to the American Society for Testing Materials by J. B. Johnson and T. T. Oberg of the United States Air Corps, Dayton.

Propellers of modern aircraft are found subjected to 1,000,000,000 and sometimes more alternations of stress in a year. The repetition of these stresses, each one small, has an effect so similar to human fatigue that the same term is used in engineering.

Aluminum alloys used for airplane propellers formerly were considered sufficiently strong if they withstood on test 300,000,000 cycles of fatigue stresses.

The report says that since the flight stresses have passed the billion mark there has been a reduction in the allowable stresses used in design of propellers.

LAMB SALES HEAVY

California Crop for Season Held Largest on Record

Shipment of California lambs to eastern markets during the season just closed brought a total of more than $5,500,000 to producers to make this the biggest year in the history of the industry, California Wool Growers' Association announced yesterday.

A total of 575,591 lambs were shipped east via railroads, of which Southern Pacific hauled 3265 carloads valued at $4,570,000. This year's shipment exceeded that of last year by more than 130,000 head and the biggest shipment in the history of the industry.

MADISON SQUARE NET PROFITS OFF IN YEAR

NEW YORK, July 6. (Exclusive) Consolidated net income of the Madison Square Garden Corporation for the year, closed May 31, last, totaled $492,347 after all charges, equal to $1.51 a share on 324,860 capital shares, it was announced in the annual statement issued today. This compares with $995,522 or $3.06 a share for the preceding fiscal year. The decrease, it is pointed out, is directly attributable to less favorable results for the summer of last year compared with the preceding summer.

Research Shows East Once Under 4000 Feet of Ice

ITHACA (N. Y.) June 6. (AP)—Geologists are digging up some of the long-hidden records of glaciers. In a report for the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Dr. O. D. Von Englin of Cornell University, says:

"Evidence is completely convincing that glaciers, like those now present over Greenland and Antarctica, in recent geological times covered the eastern part of the United States as far south as Long Island and Northern New Jersey with continuous ice masses 3000 to 4000 feet thick.

"Further, there is much evidence along the southern border of the glacially invaded areas that these ice sheets advanced across country not only once, but at least twice, and perhaps more times, with long warm periods intervening.

"At Toronto, Can., there is a deposit of material that indefinitely proves an interglacial period there warmer than the present climate of the Toronto region. It is, consequently, a fair inference that following an advance of glaciers completely across New York State, the ice melted off all the Labradorean region of Canada and then accumulated once more to its previous extent, or nearly so."

Salinity Tests of Two Streams to Be Conducted

SACRAMENTO, July 6. (AP)—More than 10,000 samples of water in the delta and bay districts are to be chemically analyzed during the balance of this year as data on salinity conditions at the outlet of the San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers, B. B. Meek, director of the Department of Public Works, has announced.

This work is to be the continuation of investigations carried on during summer and fall months of the past nine years, Meek said. The data expected to be completed this year are to be used as groundwork for the contemplated salt-water barrier in the delta region.

Water samples are to be taken regularly at seventy points. Tidal cycles and stream cross-section salinity tests will also be made to ascertain salt content in water under varying conditions of fresh-water inflow, time in the tidal cycle and horizontal and vertical position of stream channels.

PORT PROJECT CONTRACT LET

Federal Engineer Announces Awarding of Work

West Basing Dredging Job to Cost About $200,000

Operations Due to Start in Next Ninety Days

BY WALDO DRAKE

Contract for dredging the perimeter of the port's West Basin, entailing the removal of 600,000 cubic yards of silt at an approximate cost of $200,000, was yesterday awarded the Franks Construction Company, according to announcement by Maj. C. P. Gross, United States District Engineer. The project, to be started within ninety days, includes the widening of the West Basin perimeter channel from 200 to 300 feet and its dredging to a uniform depth of thirty feet.

Work on the West Basin dredging has been postponed for several months, pending development of plans by the Los Angeles Harbor Department for construction of freight and passenger terminals along the north side of the basin. The harbor department requested the War Department to so arrange its dredging program that it would coincide with the terminal developments of the city, but, following repeated delays on the part of the harbor department decided yesterday to proceed with its original project.

Maj. Gross explained, however, that completion of the present dredging project will in no manner interfere with future development of the West Basin area by the city of Los Angeles. Ultimately, the War Department plans to dredge out the center shoal area and remove the bascule railroad bridge now blocking the West Basin entrance, thus giving the port deep-water terminal facilities measurably nearer the city than other sections of the harbor. It is expected that residue from the present West Basin project will be pumped two and a half miles to tidelands adjoining Long Beach harbor.

Maj. Gross also announced that on the 25th inst. a hearing will be held in his office here, when the Harbor Department will outline plans for several new port developments for which government aid will be asked. These include straightening of the port entrance channel by dredging out a triangular area from the south point of New Deadman's Island to the Breakwater Light and the deepening of the East Basin channel.

LINER TAKES RECORD ORANGE JUICE SHIPMENT

Three hundred thousand bottles of California orange juice, said to establish a new record for beverage shipments, went out to New York last night aboard the Panama Mail liner Venezuela. The Venezuela sailed with more than 250 passengers, including besides a first-cabin complement of 129, 100 Chinese en route to Cartagena and twenty-one immigration deports for Mazatlan.

Prominent among her cabin passengers embarking here was Mrs. Bertha Silva De Balyeat, Nicaraguan diplomat, who has long been a resident of Southern California. Mrs. Balyeat is returning to Nicaragua to make tentative plans for filming of a talkie production in the Central American republic. Others sailing included Dr. Francisco Machon, Salvadoran Minister to Costa Rica, who has been visiting in California, accompanied by his family; Carlos Bustamente, Inspector-General of Railroads of Salvador, and Mrs. L. B. Metzger, prominent in San Francisco society.

W. F. Ohlson, district manager of the International Mercantile Marine Company, with offices here, announced yesterday that all Arizona offices of the I.M.M. have been added to this district.

"The steady increase in both passenger and freight traffic out of Arizona in both the intercoastal and trans-Atlantic fields has necessitated placing that area in closer touch with our port headquarters," said Mr. Ohlson. "Imperial Valley, leading the way in the shipment of fruits, melons and vegetables to the east coast via refrigerator ships, has had such complete success with our Panama-Pacific Line that Arizona is fast following suit."

Naval Reserve units of Southern California departed the port yesterday on their annual summer fortnight's cruise aboard the destroyers Sumner, Corry and Farenholt. They will return here on the 20th inst. after visiting San Francisco, Portland and Puget Sound ports.

The U.S.S. Procyon, flagship of the United States Fleet base force, sailed yesterday for the Mare Island navy yard for annual overhaul.

One hundred and eighty-six merchant vessels entered the port during the week just closed, which established a new record for the port, according to announcement by the Marine Exchange. The previous high mark was set during the week closing June 22, last, when there were 178 arrivals.

By trades, there were fifty-seven ships each in passenger and general cargo traffic, forty-nine tankers and twenty-three lumber vessels. Of the total of 186 ships, 158 were of American registry and there were thirteen British, five Japanese, six Norwegian, and one each under the flags of Sweden, Germany, Holland and Denmark.

Petroleum shipments last week totaled 3,056,281 barrels and a gain of 911,000 barrels over the previous seven days. Lumber receipts totaled 21,654,000 board feet, a slight decrease.

Arthur Pegg, district manager for C. G. Clinch & Co., marine paint manufacturers, left yesterday for a month's automobile trip to British Columbia. Mr. Pegg will make a leisurely trip north, fishing en route through the High Sierras.

A sundries department, dealing chiefly in the import of Japanese silk and Belgian pipe and steel, will be opened here as an adjunct to the offices of Dodwell & Co., Ltd., it was announced yesterday by Perry S. Newcomb, district manager. The new department will be in charge of B. L. Collins, who comes here from Dodwell's San Francisco offices.

The Navy Hydrographic Office announced yesterday that the new light on Santa Barbara Island, established on June 17, last, is now functioning. The beacon is exhibited 225 feet above the water on a small white structure and flashes white every six seconds. It is obscured from 356 deg. to 69 deg.

SUSPECT IN STOCK DEAL ARRESTED

Officers Report Finding Huge Supply of Questioned Shares in His Possession

When Detective Lieutenants High and Armstrong arrested Frank B. Smith, 37 years of age, of 1343 West Sixth street, yesterday on suspicion of having swindled Bernard McKone by means of a worthless stock deal, they found more than 17,000 shares of the stock in his possession, they reported.

Smith's arrest followed a complaint filed by McKone and investigation revealed, the detectives said, that at least two other persons had purchased similar stock from him. Smith confessed, according to the officers, that he had sold the stock and further that he was not authorized to dispose of it under the California Securities Act.

When he was questioned at Central Station, the detectives said, he inadvertently dropped remarks indicating that he also had conducted extensive operations in oil stocks.

The shares purchased by McKone were in the Rico Copper Company, of which Smith professes to be president. The officers declare he had no interest in the property of that company, if such a company actually exists, and they believe his operations may have netted him thousands of dollars.

He was booked on suspicion of grand theft bunko and will be held pending an investigation of his activities.

So quickly is sugar assimilated by the body and so rapidly digested that its bracing effect can be felt within a few minutes after it is eaten.

Affairs of the Week
By Juana Neal Levy

[illegible] great out-of-doors, which is one of Southern California's most [illegible] assets, is proving the lure for many lovely affairs these days, [illegible] as well as mountain resorts and country clubs attracting [illegible] to their haunts, while many of our prominent leaders in social [illegible] are planning long motor trips as far north as Lake Louise and [illegible], while others are taking ocean cruises to Honolulu and Alaska, [illegible] are summering on the continents of Europe and the Orient.

[illegible] we have always with us, [illegible] all the world loves a [illegible] almost all of the world loves a wedding, whether it be in the [illegible] or home, in the gardens or [illegible] room.

[illegible] Mrs. Ned Harrison Leavitt ([illegible] Herron) are planning [illegible] the summer (after [illegible] from the wedding trip) [illegible], and have taken a cottage [illegible] as has also Mrs. Virginia [illegible]-McGarry and her young son, [illegible] Bishop McGarry, Mrs. McGarry having assisted as matron of honor at the wedding, June 25, which took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. Irwin Herron (Julia Mercereau,) in West Adams street, with Dr. Hugh Kelso Walker, who had also officiated at the marriage of the bride's parents some years ago.

Miss Elizabeth Herron was her sister's maid of honor, other attendants including Mrs. Nicholas McCarthy Harrison (Virginia Seeley,) Miss Martha Marsh, Miss Louise Innes, Miss Evelyn McGarry and Miss Marie Leavitt, sister of the bridegroom, whose wedding with Edwin Johnson of Sioux Fall, S. D., is to be an event later in the season and Mr. and Mrs. Leavitt are planning to go on for the ceremony.

Mr. Johnson came West to serve his future brother-in-law, as best man and Harold Von Rolph, Peter Brennan, William Brophy and Robert Cavanaugh ushered.

Mrs. Herron received her guests in a gown of blue moire and corsage of orchids while Mrs. Louis L. Leavitt, mother of the bridegroom, wore a gown of black Chantilly lace over eggshell satin, a corsage of orchids completing the costume.

The attendants all wore gowns of pale pink lace, the maid of honor carrying pink hyrangeas while the others carried blue hydrangeas.

The picturesque little Church of the Lighted Window at Flintridge was the setting for the wedding of Miss Martha Marie Hughes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Galbraith Hughes, and Edward Marion Browder, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Browder, Thursday evening, June 27. Dr. John C. Fry, fraternity brother of the bride's brother, officiating.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in a gown of ivory satin, with a satin and tulle veil, embroidered in seed pearls, in court train style. A shower bouquet of butterfly roses was carried.

Mrs. William C. Hughes (Beulah Mae Whitley,) matron of honor, in a frock of green organdy, carried pink sweet peas and rosebuds.

Miss Mary Isabel Fry, daughter of the officiating minister, maid of honor, in yellow and green organdy and net, carried sweet peas in contrasting colors.

The bridesmaids, Misses Anne Sumner and Irene Jones, in organdie gowns in shades of yellow, trimmed with net carried bouquets of sweet peas.

William O. Hughes served as best man and the ushers were Junior Palmer, Everett Gillette and Harry Banta.

An informal reception at the church followed the ceremony, after which Mr. and Mrs. Browder left for a a [illegible] weeks' wedding trip to Alaska, and on their return will make their home in Hollywood.

The bride was graduated from the University of California at Los Angeles and is a member of Delta Phi Epsilon Sorority. Mr. Browder was graduated from the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

Miss Dorothy Louise Klinge, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Klinge, became the bride of Russell Edwin Post, in All Saints' Episcopal Church, Beverly Hills, Saturday afternoon, June 22. Given in marriage by her father, she wore a gown of white satin, Chantilly lace and seed pearls. The veil, with a tight-fitting cap of lace was held in place by clusters of orange blossoms, and a bouquet of lilies of the valley, gardenias and maiden-hair fern was carried.

The bride's sister-in-law, Mrs. R. A. Klinge, matron of honor, wore a gown of beige lace over chartreuse green and carried a bouquet of sweet peas.

Four bridesmaids, all Alpha Gamma Delta Sorority sisters, Misses Frances Smith, Katharyn Smith, Marcella Kennedy and Carolyn Colmery, wore gowns of orchid and pink organdy, combined with tulle, and carried bouquets of orchid and pink sweet peas.

Virginia O'Donnell, was flower girl, and Master Buddy Watts, ring bearer.

Robert Fuller served as best man, and the ushers were Ray Klinge, a brother of the bride, Roy Mason, Alfred Thomas and Grant Juhns, while Berwyn Riske sang several selections.

Sarah-Bishop

One of June's lovely weddings was that in the Vermont Square Methodist Episcopal Church of Miss Florine Sarah, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sarah, and Kenneth H. Bishop, with Dr. Irwin Engle and Rev. C. O. Kimball officiating. The church was decorated with masses of gladioli and ferns entwined upon white lattice screens, while large baskets of gladioli and tall candelabra terminated each pew.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was an attractive picture in her wedding gown of white satin trimmed with pearls, with which she wore a veil of tulle sprinkled with orange blossoms, attached to a coronet of pearls and orange blossoms. Her bouquet was of bride's roses and lilies of the valley.

A "Bo-Peep" motif was used for the wedding, the maid and matron of honor, Miss Dorothy Sarah and Mrs. C. G. Lane, wearing Bo-Peep dresses of taffeta and carrying roses, while the attendants, the Misses Lorraine Dennis, Myrtle Larson, Darline Nelson, Lola Tierney and the Mmes. Lillian McGachan, Lena Stevenson, Pearl Graham and Muriel Hilliard, wore Bo-Peep frocks of tulle and carried silver Bo-Peep crooks, which formed an arch through which the bride approached the altar.

Harold G. Bishop served his brother as best man, while the ushers were Glen Lane, Roy Daniel, Jack McGachan, Clifford Hilliard, Jack Tobiason, Sheldon Graham, Newton Hammond, Charles Suppe and Herman Suppe. One hundred and fifty guests attended the reception following at the home of the bride's parents, decorated with roses, gladioli and fern, and Mr. and Mrs. Bishop left immediately afterward for the north. They are now at home to their friends in West Forty-seventh street.

Mrs. Henry Martin Munger II of 329 South Rodeo Drive, Beverly Hills, was a charming hostess of yesterday afternoon, entertaining a coterie of friends at tea in compliment to her sister-in-law, Mrs. Fred W. Abernathy of Dallas, Tex., who is her house guest.

The honoree, a recent bride, has just returned with Mr. Abernathy from a honeymoon trip to Vancouver, B. C.

Miss Florence Bruce, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bruce of La Crescenta, chose the Little Church of the Flowers as the setting for her marriage to D. J. Howe of the La Crescenta Presbyterian Church, then read the marriage service in the presence of more than 100 guests.

The bride wore, a gown of ivory satin with an overdress of ruffled tulle, silver edged, her veil ruched high at the back and held with a band of orange blossoms. She carried bride roses and white sweet peas with a shower of lilies of the valley. Miss Faith Kennedy of Glendale was maid of honor in pink ruffled taffeta with which she carried white and pink sweetpeas. Ruth Raverin of Alhambra, as flower girl, wore a ruffled organdy frock of white and carried rose petals in a gilt basket.

Freckles, Sunburn Easily Discarded

When skin becomes discolored from wind or sun, and your face and arms freckled, sunburned or rough, it is pleasant to know that by using pure mercolized wax you can remove such defects. The wax gently absorbs the thin outer cuticle, removing liver spots, freckles, sunburn and other blemishes. The under skin soon appears soft and smooth, with the natural beauty of a young girl. Mercolized wax brings out the hidden beauty. To reduce wrinkles and restore facial contour, use as an astringent 1 ounce powdered saxolite and 1 half pint witch hazel. a W & J Sloane ENGLISH Suite

THERE are just two kinds of furnishings: Nondescript, "inexpensive" pieces, and those which are authentic and show in every line the aristocracy of excellence. Persons of wisdom and culture bring only authentic furnishings into their homes, for a "cheap" piece must be replaced so often that it actually becomes more costly than the original purchase price of really good designs.

IT is an important phase of the SLOANE credo, this matter of authenticity. The W & J SLOANE mastercraftsmen at Flushing, Long Island, are famed the world over for their knowledge of period styles and for their skill at reproducing them. Carving details on the English Dining Suite illustrated have ranked among the best for many generations. Nine pieces, $2,150.00. To complete the ensemble of this grouping we would like to show you some of our very fine Oriental Rugs and Eighteenth Century drapery fabrics. Perhaps you will desire suggestions from our decorators. Their services are entirely without charge.

NEW "SWEETHEART" FOUND

Warner Baxter's Liking for "Miss Talkie" Spur to Fresh Achievements in Films

BY ALMA WHITAKER

The best tonic in the world is a new love affair. Viola, meet Mr. Warner Baxter, new ardent swain of Miss Talkie, for whom the kiss of Miss Silent had grown insipid. For a couple of years now, Miss Silent had outgrown the gentleman's liking.

"It was quite mutual," grins Warner, who, after his dazzling success in "In Old Arizona" now appears in "Behind That Curtain" at Loew's State this week.

"I was losing interest in the silent pictures rapidly....it was just a matter of how many weeks for how much to me. I used to wonder why anyone hired me, and thanked my luck.....

"You know, I have always been a lucky begger. I never had any of the sacrificial uphill struggle most actors claim to have. Of course, there were temporary hard spells—but they were fun. So it was luck that put me on the stage for twelve years and kept me there; luck that got me in the movies in the first place, and still more luck that hoisted me into "In Old Arizona," when the talkies came in.....

TECHNIQUE STUDIED

"I am more and more impressed with the fact that technique will now be a potent factor in pictures as it always has been on the stage. I go to see every one of them and study, study. I have never taken my work so seriously in my life before. Milton Sills was glorious in 'The Barker.' Ruth Chatterton is an example of perfect technique in 'Madame X,' and so is Lewis Stone. I consider Stone one of the past masters of technique. Joe Schildkraut gave a superb performance in "Show Boat." Yes, and in this 'Behind That Curtain' of mine, I think Gilbert Emery really steals the show....his performance is well nigh perfect as the detective....

"I don't think it is necessary for an actor to 'feel' his roles. A good actor should be able to wring laughter, tears, emotions, suspense with variety....and then turn and say 'How was that? Pretty good, eh?'

"Yes, I like character roles. I'd even like to do Lon Chaney stuff, ...except that I would wish that the audience might feel that the girl really could fall in love with me.... a dash of romance, you know. I am certainly glad to have edged away from drawing-room parts...I never did think they were my line. All the same, I hope I shall not now have to be Mexican all my life. I begged 'em to kill off 'The Cisco Kid'...a sequel to 'In Old Arizona,' but in the one we're making now, I am Mexican-American. I'd like a good Italian role, being pretty good at dialects... always was, even as a kid....

"I think some of the sound pictures are punk...I've walked out on several. I'm tired of the ensemble stuff, too....but I go to every new show and if there is just one good performer, he holds me there.

NEVER SO ZESTFUL

"You know, I really had some technique myself when I was on the stage. Not much use for it in silent pictures and I lost interest, I guess. But believe me, I'm in love with my profession all over again now, haven't felt so zestful for years. I am both a good fan and an eager actor....."

I came to the conclusion that one of the secrets of Warner Baxter's success is his abiding faith in his "Good Luck." When Warner says "Just my luck!" it's a twinkle of triumph...with never a hint of the persecution complex somewhat associated with that phrase on the lips of so many actors. Oh, there's a good deal in holding the right thought. For there was a dim period, just before "In Old Arizona," when some actors in Warner's state of mind would have been dreadfully sorry for themselves. Warner just waited for his lucky star to ascend again, and stood expectant to hurrh.

MIDGET APPEARS IN FILM TAKIE

Paramount Finds Woman to Play Part in Sound Picture Titled "Illusion"

After three weeks' diligent scouring of Hollywood the Paramount casting office has discovered a midget with a microphnic voice.

Harriett Spiker, 3 feet 11 inches tall and weighing 45 pounds, has been found to play the part of the Lilliputian freak in the all-talking production, "Illusion."

Miss Spiker responded when an advertisement was placed in Los Angeles papers by the Paramount casting office. She has never before capitalized on her stature. Only the lure of the microphone and of appearing with Charles (Buddy) Rogers and Nancy Carroll enticed her to exhibit herself as a freak.

Despite her size the midget miss is described as perfectly formed. She was born in New York of normal parents.

Christie Will Produce Group for Paramount

The Christie organization has started production on the new group of all-talking plays, which are to be released by Paramount beginning in August. Starting in February, Paramount has thirteen of the Christie pictures released down through the present quarter, and beginning early in August the new season will start.

Among the pictures which will start off the new releasing season are "The Sleeping Porch," with Raymond Griffith, supported by Barbara Leonard, John Litel and David Callis; "Faro Nell," featuring Louise Fazenda, and another of the popular Octavus Roy Cohen stories, "The Lady Fare," and Charlie Grapewin and Anna Chance in "Ladies' Choice."

With three directors and complete staff available, as well as the special staff of twenty-four men in the Christie recording crews, production of these Christie talking plays will continue on, at regular intervals through the coming season, when twenty-four more pictures are to be made for Paramount distribution.

Selection of new story and short-play material is now being made by Al Christie and Alfred A. Cohn, editorial supervisor for the series.

What is the simplest means of character reading?

"By observing a person's walk," unexpectedly observes Catherine Dale Owen, who is playing the lead opposite John Gilbert in "Olympia."

"So much is expressed in a walk," continues this actress.

"Every mood may be noted in the kind of steps taken," she continues.

"I have seen a woman at the end of a long, weary day, dragging one foot after another. It was not necessary to question her or to even look in her face. Instinctively that walk told me of her weariness.

"I have seen sub-debs, exuberating with youth. Their light steps expressed more than any words they could have uttered.

"I have seen the society dowager, assured of her position in the world, all denoted in the firmness of her footsteps.

"Contempt is easily seen in the sert of step taken—remember Dickens describing such a person. At any rate, you will notice tight-fisted people have a corresponding walk.

"A jovial person will walk along in good-natured fashion, while the ill-tempered variety may be endowed with a sprightly walk of unpleasant rhythm or a pokey walk of mean fashion.

"Just watch the steps of your acquaintances if you want to fathom deep into their characters. Breeding and refinement are as evident as the recognized swing of a Bowery tough.

"You may catalogue your friends as to walk more easily than by their words, for education may put a clever coating of veneer over the surface of their language, but the walk can never be disguised," Miss Owen concludes.

Title Writer Holds Record

Joseph L. Mankiewicz, having set a record of titling silent versions of six Paramount talking pictures in eight weeks, has been signed to a long-term contract, it is announced.

Mankiewicz, brother of Herman J. Mankiewicz, Paramount staff scenarist, thus becomes, at the age of 21, the youngest member of Paramount's writing staff. The pictures he has titled (silent versions) are "The Dummy," "Close Harmony," "The Studio Murder Mystery," "Thunderbolt," "The Man I Love" and "The Mysterious Dr. Fu Manchu." He has finished titling Clara Bow's new vehicle, "Dangerous Curves."

Screen Ability Helps Little

Juveniles of the screen can no longer hope for success through screening ability alone, but must pay more attention to acting, declares Arthur Lake, who has been featured in "Harold Teen," "The Air Circus" and "On With the Show" as the juvenile lead.

"Screening ability has ceased to be the prime requisite of success since talkies have become so popular," says Lake. "We youngsters must learn to act. Fortunately, there are many stage and screen veterans among character actors who will help us perfect this necessary attribute. Of course, we must be more or less original, but there are points to be gained by watching their performances which only years of experience could teach us."

NAME FITS PART; GIRL GETS JOB

"Cupid" Ainsworth Lands Part in Picture Play Giving Aid to Lovelorn Swains

Despite the prognostications of one William Shakespeare no one can tell Cupid Ainsworth that there is nothing in a name.

When the young comedienne of vaudeville first embarked on a professional career she adopted as her professional given name the appellation which school friends had applied, because of her generous build, happy disposition and always smiling countenance.

A short time ago Cupid came to Hollywood to visit friends. One night at a dinner party she met Gregory La Cava, who was about to begin work on the direction of "Big News" for Pathe.

"I think you'd be an ideal type for a part in my new picture," he told her. "It's a newspaper story and I want some one to play the conductor of an 'Advice to the Lovelorn' column."

"Well," the plump Miss Ainsworth joked, "I'm sure I ought to be a good person for that part. You see, my first name is Cupid."

Director Held Developer of Comedy Stars

A developer of comedy stars is the unique reputation built up by Leo McCarey, director who has just been assigned to direct "Dancing Rhythm," from an original story by Earl Baldwin and Joseph Franklin Poland, as the second picture in his Pathe contract.

McCarey, who recently completed direction of "Joe College," an all-dialogue picture of scholastic life starring Eddie Quillan, made comedies for the Hal Roach studios for several years, and was instrumental in developing such stellar luminaries as Charley Chase and the celebrated team of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy.

During the past two years of his association with Roach, McCarey held the post of director-general of that studio. In this capacity he supervised all comedies emanating from this lot, besides directing on occasion.

Barrie Heroine Gets Role Here

Fay Compton, playing the leading feminine role in support of Adolphe Menjou in his new picture, "The Concert," is known as "the Barrie heroine" in England, her native land. Miss Compton is one of the upper few of the London stage, a star in her own right and one with a following throughout Britain. "The Concert" is her first all-talking picture, and Menjou's first as well.

The English actress has played in several British-made films, several of them with Clive Brook, who also is now under contract to Paramount in Hollywood.

"The Concert" will be directed by Victor Schertzinger, whose knowledge of music is as profound as his knowledge of the camera.

Mae Murray Returns Here

Mae Murray, Tiffany-Stahl star, returned to California recently, after an absence of twelve weeks, during which time she has been making personal appearances in the principal theaters throughout the United States.

Present indications are that the new sound stage the company is building, said to be one of the largest in the world, will be completed by the time Miss Murray is ready to go into production on "Peacock Alley."

During the sale of the effects of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City, famous pieces of furniture that adorned the hotel's Peacock Alley were purchased by the Tiffany-Stahl Company, and will be used in one of the scenes of the picture, filming of which will begin the latter part of June.

Musical Hits Feature Film

Three brand new musical numbers will supplement the score that made "Rio Rita" an international hit, when Radio Pictures makes an all-musical, all-talking film of the Ziegfeld extravaganza.

Harry Tierney, who wrote the original score, is to contribute the new tunes to his own show. Tierney is now on his way West. In addition to composing the new music for "Rio Rita," he will write the score for an original operetta, the book and lyrics of which are to be done by William Le Baron, vice-president in charge of production for Radio Pictures.

Bebe Daniels and John Boles are to have the leads in the RKO version of the musical comedy. Rehearsals are scheduled to start the 17th inst.

BENNY WORKS FOR NUGENT

Jack Benny, former vaudeville monologist and now talking-picture actor, is playing under the direction of the man whose crown he fell heir to on the stage. When J. C. Nugent, premier vaudeville monologist, forsook this to stage and star his own plays, Benny stepped into his place. Benny is now playing the title role in "The Rounder," Nugent's stage opus, which the actor-author is directing as his first talking picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Cowboy Songs May Finish Jazz Tunes

Collegians and flappers the world over will soon be dancing to the tunes of cowboy songs, while jazz will be relegated to the heap of old-fashioned and passe things.

This belief is expressed by Ken Maynard, western star, who has been popularizing songs of the range in Universal pictures. "The Wagon Master," his first picture under a five-year contract, is synchronized and contains several songs that have hitherto been known only to the boys who ride the prairies. "The Dark Horse Entry" also featured a number of western songs, and several others will be incorporated in "Kettle Creek," the new Maynard film now in production.

"There is more real music in these cowboy songs than in the jazz pieces being played by dance orchestras these days," said Maynard. "The songs have a swing to them. People dancing to such accompaniment are naturally more graceful than they are following the contortions of jazz music."

Maynard was born in Texas and has lived most of his life on the range, among cowboys and in circuses. Many of the old songs which he is using in his pictures have never before been recorded on paper. He has a collection of them, having jotted them down—words and music—while a crowd of cowboys gathered in a shanty door of an evening to sing.

Pie Throwing Comedy Nears Total Eclipse

Modern screen comedy has grown away from the early slapstick pie-throwing period and commenced to copy very closely the humorous side of everyday life, according to Leo McCarey, comedy director who was recently signed to a new Pathe contract following his completion of "Joe College," an all-dialogue production.

The early comedies, explains McCarey, might all be thrown together and labeled the "mishap" group. This is the period when nearly every laugh was derived by causing the buffoon of the comedy to undergo some discomfort. Either he slipped on a banana peel, caught a pie in the face, tripped over a rope, got smacked by the villain, or had something equally disastrous happen to him.

Today, states this director, the comedy is more plausible, more real and consequently more genuinely funny. In large part it deals with the mishaps that occur to those incompetents on the highways of the life, but rather its victims. world, who are not the masters of

Linguist Held in Demand for Foreign Films

Hedwiga Reicher believes that the talking picture is opening a great future for actors who speak two or more languages.

"It is certain," says this well-known player, "that the producers will do everything in their power to keep their foreign trade. News from the European theaters already says that their audiences want the sound picture. They also want the American picture. Thus arises the situation."

Talking picture must be made for foreign countries. They must be made in the language of the country. It would be very expensive to "shoot" an entire picture twice, with one cast for America and another for the export trade films. So a future is opened for linguists—one with more interest than the silent drama has ever offered.

Miss Reicher, who has played on the stage in the languages of both in her native tongue.

A New England farm woman, the mother of Janet Gaynor, in "Lucky Star," is Miss Reicher's latest role.

Travel Held to Be Author's Aid

Time spent during youth traveling in the various countries of the world is not wasted, but lends a solid background of experience for almost any profession, according to Wallace Smith, author, artist, and world traveler who was recently signed by R.-K.-O. to a long-term writing contract.

Taking the profession of authorship as his example, Smith points out that the writer who knows the Orient, Central America or the European continent is much better fitted to surround his stories of these locales with an authentic atmosphere which will go far to insure their success. It is not possible to do this from a theoretical or book knowledge of these places, he declares.

Particularly gratifying, comments Smith, is the trend of the producers toward greater accuracy and authenticity in their pictures, and their employment of experts and authorities to insure correctness of costume, background and period in their productions. This movement is bound to aid the screen in building up a more solid and respectable standing in the eyes of worldly people, the writer concludes.

Brains Needed to Look Dumb

Were screen comedians really as "nutty" as they appear upon the screen, "Dumb Dora" would have to look to her laurels, says Harry Gribbon, the detective who finds everything "just too bad" in "On With the Show."

"It takes a real actor to appear 'dumb,'" declares Gribbon, "although every comedian has his own method of displaying the quality. Charlie Chaplin prefers to be pathetically simple. Harold Lloyd uses his surplus energy for the same purpose. Joe Brown's versatile mouth promotes laughs, and Wallace Beery can look dumber than any actor I know of, when he wants to."

FILM STAR SAYS SHE'S HOMELY

Louise Fazenda Makes Strange Claim Asserting Good Looks a Hindrance

Louise Fazenda is afraid that her public is beginning to think of her as pretty.

And this, she says, will never do. The comedienne has drawn the public to the box office for years because of her freakish costumes and inimitable humor.

Louise blames it all on color pictures. "I don't think the public ever looked at me twice except to laugh until Technicolor began photographing me in red hair and colored dresses. I hope my next role is that of an old woman without teeth or hair. Perhaps I am the only girl in the world who does not want to be called pretty, but it means serious trouble for me."

WAR FILMS TOO SAD

Enacting the part of a heroine in a war picture like "The Good-by Kiss" isn't half the fun of being a chorus girl in "Broadway Babies," according to Sally Eilers, who had a prominent role in both pictures. "All you get is tears and sympathy in a war picture," says Sally. "Laughs come with comedy, and I would much rather cause laughter than tears. And talkies are much more interesting than silent productions. I have learned dance steps, singing and how to speak over a microphone since I started to work in 'Broadway Babies.'"

At a beautifully appointed tea at the home of her parents Mr. and Mrs. McFarlane, Miss Doro- thy McFarlane announced her engagement to Rene Lanaert Bak- er, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Baker of Huntington Park, the news be- ing told by tiny cards hidden in cor- sages. Miss McFarlane was gradu- ated from St. Ann's Convent, New Westminster, D. C., while Mr. Baker was graduated this year from Univer- sity of Southern California, and is a member of Eta Kappa Nu Fra- ternity. The wedding will take place August 17 at the Church of the Angels, Pasadena.

Shower

The Misses Lea M. Wickersham and Ethel Wickersham of Holly- wood entertained Saturday, June in honor of Miss Lela May Heil, daughter of Mrs. Emma Heil of Huntington Park. Miss Heil is the fiancée of Robert E. Wilson, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Wilson of Lindsay, Cal. At the close of the delightful afternoon the hon- oree was showered with many beau- tiful gifts.

Field

Bridge Hall of Music at Pomona College, Claremont, was filled to ca- pacity Wednesday evening of last week for the wedding ceremony of Rebecca Hamilton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Newton Ham- ilton of this city, and Archie Llew- ellyn Field, son of Mr. and Mrs. Field of Glendale.

The ceremony was read by Rev. Battelcher of the Claremont Church and Alfred Ewington, teach- er in Claremont High School and friend of the bride for many years, played the organ for the service. The bride, gowned in satin with a closely fitting lace bodice, entered on the arm of her father, to the wedding march from "Lohengrin." Her veil of tulle and lace in cap effect on her head was caught with clusters of orange blossoms.

The bride was assisted by Miss Helen Hanson, as maid of honor, in pink chiffon crepe, with slip- pers to match, and the bridesmaids, gowned in lightening shades of for- get-me-nots and wood violets, were Miss Margaret Shirk, Miss Marjorie Jones, Miss Lucille Van Loan Snelling, Miss Evelyn Berg of Lynwood, Miss Miriam Morris of Pas- adena and Miss Eleanor Hiller of Phoenix. Tiny Miss Helen Carolyn Hamilton, niece of the bride, was flower girl and Master Leroy Townsend was ring bearer.

Edward Field served his brother as best man; E. D. Field, also a brother of the bridegroom; William Robert Ferrell, Sayler Young, Dyer and George Newman, fraternity brothers of the bride- groom in Sigma Alpha Epsilon, were ushers.

Preceding the ceremony Miss Er- ma Hanson, contralto, of Clare- mont, sang "All For You" by Mar- tin and "O, Perfect Love," wedding song.

Miss Miriam Bruce, violinist, played obbligatos for these solos and with her sister, Miss Lois Bruce, accompanist, played a group of solos arranged for violin. Mrs. Dorothy Hamilton Kent, cou- sin of the bride, of National City, sang "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls" from the "Bohemian Girl." At the close of the ceremony Mr. Ewington played the Wedding March from "Midsummer Night's Dream" by Mendelssohn.

A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed the wed- ding ceremony and the bridal cou- ple were assisted in receiving their guests by their parents and members of the bridal party. The bride attended the Oregon State College at Corvallis and is a mem- ber of Gamma Phi Beta Sorority. Mr. Field also attended that insti- tution. They will live in Glendale.

For Recent Bride

Mrs. Frank Johnson (Frances Jamison,) who but recently re- turned from her honeymoon, has been the incentive for many post- nupital gayeties. One of the recent affairs honoring her was a lunch- eon and bridge given by Miss Gladys Vorhes at her home.

Luncheon was served in the drawing room on small tables and the decorations were beautifully carried out in the shades of green, yellow and purple, each guest find- ing a lovely corsage of pansies marking her place. The drawing room was lighted by tall green tap- ers placed in large candlabras around the room. Several baskets of spring flowers were placed about the rooms.

The guest list included: Mrs. Frank Johnson, Mrs. James M. Rounds, Mrs. Daniel Ferguson, Mrs. Frank Henry, Miss Eva Haight, Miss Carol Latimer, Miss Katherine Jean, Miss Frances Jean, Miss Marie Marlow, Mrs. Will Miles, Mrs. Glendon Tremaine, Mrs. Raymond Tremaine and Miss Gladys Vorhes.

Miss Vorhes is one of the charming daughters of the Frank Albert Vorhes of West Twentieth street, and entertains frequently when in town. An interesting trip is being planned for the near future which will keep the Vorhes family away during the greater part of the summer. They will motor to Seattle to visit Mr. and Mrs. Frank Albert Vorhes, Jr., whose wedding will be remembered as one of the events of last year. Going on from there they are planning on visiting British Columbia, arriving home just in time for the Misses Dorothy and Ruth to enter college here.

Felicitations

Mr. and Mrs. Danforth White (Charlotte Darling,) are receiving congratulations over the arrival, Saturday, June 22, at the Good Samaritan Hospital of a son, who is to be named Danforth White, Jr. The little lad is the first grandchild in the family, his grandparents being Mrs. Herman Darling and Mr. and Mrs. William Moore White.

Entertaining House Guest

Miss Marian Irene Doan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Doan, Yuma, Ariz., is passing the holiday week-end in Beverly Hills as the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. Homer Joseph Specht. Upon her return home Miss Doan will be busily engaged in final preparations for her marriage to Lieut. Herbert Enderton of West Point, the ceremony to take place the last of the month.

Exotic East Looms Large in Picture

The exotic lure of the Orient, which has much to do with the popularity of "The Shanghai Gesture," "The Letter" and other recent plays of that locale, is said to have been caught exceptionally in "Where East is East," current feature film at Grauman's Egyptian Theater.

Lon Chaney is starred in the picture, and in prominent roles opposite him are Lupe Velez and Estelle Taylor. Practically all of the action takes place in the Orient. Tod Browning, associated with Chaney in many of the star's past successes, directed.

In addition to the feature, the program at the Egyptian likewise includes the first "Our Gang" all-talking comedy, and Fanchon and Marco's "Contrasts" idea, the latter the only stage sevue in Hollywood.

Home, Club and Civic Interests of Women

RUSSIANS WILL OFFER PROGRAM

Former Members of Nobility Make Appearance

Affair Will Provide Aid to Needy Folk

Talkies Blamed for Poverty of Many Artists

BY MYRA NYE

In vacation period even as in the busy months of the year women are active in their civic interests, some even in their club circles and many in special endeavor. The most interesting work of a woman that is demonstrated today in Argus Bowl, Eagle Rock, is that of Dr. Sonia Poushkareff, who is presenting her Russian friends in a Russian program of great merit and worth.

Sonia herself is a protege of the Philanthropy and Civics Club, who gave her a scholarship that she might study to take the examination in her own profession so that she might practice in Los Angeles. To answer questions about dental work was not hard for Sonia, but to answer them in English when she first came here from Russia soon after the war was not so easy. Sonia passed with high honors. Now she wishes to do something equally helpful for others of her countrymen and women.

STAGE FOLK PENNILESS

It was easy enough when everyone was interested in the romantic and dramatic tales of escaped Russians. But when that wore away the real talent of these continental folk made a place for itself and maintained positions already won. Then came the talkies. A boon for many but bad for the Russians and now many of them are literally penniless, some of the most talented stage folk in the world.

"If you want some one to wash your windows I can get you a general," says Sonia. "Or if you want some one to scrub your floors I can get you a princess."

But, really, it is too bad to have the general wash windows and a princess scrub floors when they might sing a duet with beauty of voice and charm of expression. So Sonia resolved to put their talent to use if possible. She put on a program at the Friday Morning Club and it was the consensus of opinion that it was the best program of the year. Augmented, the same program is being given today in Argus Gardens. It must be Sunday, for on week days these high-born Russians are busy as waiters, scrubbers and window-washers. The program begins at 6:30 p.m. A Russian dinner will be served in the gardens and at 4 p.m. Russian tea will be served. Before that time a picnic will be enjoyed.

CHARACTERS LISTED

Participating in the program is the well-known Russian basso, Vassili, directing a chorus of twenty-five voices; Serge Oukrainsky, world-renowned dancer; Olga Baclanova, actress; Lillian Powell, Olga Mark, Nadia Efron, Tamara Laub, Lydia Anchutina; dancer; also Claudia Jacubenko, Lewis Meehan, V. Bajanoff, A. Znamensky, A. Kulaeva and N. Warton.

Dr. Sonia will be announcer a la balieff. And Dr. Sonia is the wittiest Russian I know.

She says of her venture to help "her Russians:"

"To many people the call of movies has been like the cry of 'Gold!' to the '49ers, and they have come to Hollywood to offer whatever talent they may have, and so it is with the Russian colony. We have congregated from many corners of the earth, bringing the fruits of many years' effort in the shape of worthy talent in many lines. we probably came to enter the picture game and on the chances of success in that realm have placed high stakes—have severed established connections in New York, or in Europe; some have forfeited actual material possessions in order to exist in the lean days—to reach the goal of success in pictures. And then the avalanche! Talkies, and all that they imply to the foreigner—they are gifted, they are educated, but their English is not the King's English—facing failure, do they despair, these Russian artists? Emphatically no! Not that we shrug our shoulders at defeat, we do face the grim possibilities entailed, but we keep up our courage.

HAUNTED HOUSE

"We stick together in the pride of race, and also in real enjoyment of each other—we have established a nucleus for an art center—and in what an odd place! Imagine a house deserted for eight years, on Hollywood Boulevard—incredible in this progressive town; but there is a reason for this condition—the house is haunted. Years ago a man killed his wife under its roof and it is her ghost that has scared off prospective dwellers, but not these Russians. We have vanquished the spook, with music, and life, and joy. A rough patch leads to the house, a frame structure, rather crude on the outside, but the murals by V. Ulianoff throughout the interior do away with any thought of crudity.

"For those to whom fortune is not kind we have established a system of immediate aid, and have also formed the beginnings of a library of English and Russian books, so that people who come to the club may relax a bit in their enjoyment. Added to these varied offerings we have, as a regular feature, programs that draw their talent from the club members. These are presented on Thursday and Saturday nights. They are delightfully informal and very pleasing; both programs may be followed by refreshments.

"Above, in brief, is the haunted house (so christened by Miss Baclanova) or Russian Artcrafters Club of Hollywood, and it is a group of these people who have planned to give a program that the public may enjoy. It will be in the form of a picnic to be given in the Argus Gardens in Eagle Rock. Tea will be served in Russian style at 4 o'clock, and in the latter part of the day, at 6:30 the program will commence.

Lavender and Old Lace of Grandmother's Day Seen in Jewish Women's Pageant

Some Costumes Date Back to the Fifties

In a pageant of yesterday given in the Sala de Oro of the Biltmore by the Los Angeles section, Council of Jewish Women, descendants of Los Angeles pioneers appeared in authentic costumes worn by many of those who helped to make Los Angeles the city it is today. Mrs. Jane W. Hellman appeared in a costume made by herself for her mother thirty years ago. Mrs. Jules Kauffman, who directed the pageant, appeared in her grandmother's gown of 1829; Miss Caroline Meyberg wore the wedding dress of Mrs. Maurice Hellman in 1880. Miss Lealia Kauffman wore a gown from her grandmother's trousseau in 1855 and Mrs. Lelia Cohen appeared in a calling gown of 1875, a gown which was seen at many a function in Los Angeles in that year. Miss Aimee Nordlinger wore her grandmother's wedding gown unchanged for sixty years; Mrs. Joseph K. Ferguson, a handsome gown of brocaded yellow satin trimmed with lace made in Brussels and worn here in 1860. Mrs. Myrtle Blum wore a gown of Mrs. Louis Cole when the latter as Miss Hellman was married with elaborate ceremony and wedding party in 1904. The gown touches the floor and is of all-over hand-made lace of rare beauty. Mrs. Joseph Goldstein is in an afternoon dress of 1900. Mrs. Wolf Kalisher wore her mother's shawl nearly a century old; Miss Frances Newmark appeared in a wedding gown of 1881 and Mrs. Florein H. Wolfstein in a gown of the early '90's. Mrs. Lillian Burkhart Goldsmith, as the retiring president, presided at the luncheon and introduced the participants in the pageant.

SCHOOL OF ACTING PUTS ON 'CAMILLE'

Marta Oatman Students Stage Masterpiece of Famous French Writer

Four "Camilles" in a week. And graduation.

This is the record for the closing term of the Marta Oatman School of the Theater when a week ago the closing performance of the old romantic Dumas play was given. In this closing week Celeste Grunn, Dolly Green, Maurine Gray and Mildred Girne played four successive nights in the name role and each came off with flying colors, the colors being augmented in the many large baskets of flowers that surrounded them at the close of the third act.

It was an amazing and interesting bit of psychology displayed by girls not yet out of their teens depicting the fate of a coquette of the early nineteenth century. Long skirts, hair piled high, a new way of walking, of speaking, new ways of love-making and the receiving of adulation. And every one of these girls made good in the theater on Figueroa street before crowded houses of admiring friends.

I was so fortunate as to see two of the girls in the performance. They were Dolly Green and Mildred Girne. Both manifested excellent training, and while their performance differed as their personalities varied, Dolly Green was charmingly supple both in mind and body. Mildred Girne, taller and of a more stately beauty, was not what we have been led to believe the type of the lady of the Camelias. She nevertheless, read her lines with skill and played with histrionic art.

Edward Dwight Satterlee, only 19 years of age, was Armand, the four performances of "Camille." He also was the designer of the stage settings and personally constructed them.

Others who appeared in the cast Wednesday and Thursday nights were: William Robertson, Billy Van Every, Arminta Fuqua, Lois Gray, Jean Mathews, Bob White, Gerald Herdon, Ralph Nye, Charles A. Carroll, Bert Heintz and Louise Nowell.

About 250 persons, including the seventy-five Dominant Club members and many of Southern California's most prominent musicians, will be in attendance.

'Swim' Camera Films' Latest

"Swimming cameras" were devised by John Robertson, directing "The Single Standard," to obtain close-up shots of Greta Garbo and Nils Asther racing in the water for the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer feature.

Robertson mounted a camera head upon an improvised catamaran which was hauled through the water just ahead of the swimmers. The camera lens was held just a few inches above the surfact of the water and focused to keep both Garbo and Asther together in the film frame.

FEDERATION CONDUCTS SUMMER PROGRAM

The first of the summer program conferences for the Los Angeles District Federation of Women's Clubs was conducted at district headquarters June 26. Mrs. F. F. Towle is chairman this year. This first program maintained the excellent standard already set by Mrs. Harry Stroh, former chairman, who established the regular conferences. The artists appearing were Sol Cohen, concert violinist; Otto Platz, dramatic tenor; Virginia Stivers Bartlett, reader, a trio, and Earl Rowland, lecturer on art appreciation.

Rawson; custodian, Miss Adelaide Fielding; directors, Mrs. M. A. Conklin and Mrs. J. F. Whitledge. A treasurer will be elected at a special board meeting during the summer.

TWO CLUBS INSTALL RECENTLY ELECTED OFFICERS

Now that the club season is definitely at an end two of the last week of the season stand out in memory as beautiful and significant occasions. They were the installation of the Soroptimists at the Biltmore Tuesday and the Philanthropy and Civics Club in their spacious and homelike clubhouse in Wilton Place Thursday.

In the lovely Music Room at the Biltmore in front of an illuminated fountain at two tables sat the newly elected officers of the Soroptimist headed by Dr. Lillian Grandmason, and the retiring members of the executive board headed by Amelia F. Johnson, junior past president, who installed the officers.

Perhaps in no other club circle were the flowers more gorgeous, the gifts more handsome of the harmony more complete. As Mrs. Johnson handed the gavel to Dr. Grandmason, she mentioned the blue of the flag for loyalty, the white for purity of intent and thought, the red for zeal and integrity. As she mentioned the virtues with which she wished to endue the incoming chief officer, the lights appeared in the chandeliers in the colors as she named them.

It is interesting to note that club women make exception to the rule that the incoming president shall receive the greater honor. On this occasion, Mrs. Johnson, in addition to so many flowers that they hid her from view, received a wrist watch on a diamond bracelet and a pin of many jewels to designate her past presidency.

The program of the day was given by Manuel Gales, tenor; Mary Russell, reader; Sylvia Harding, violinist, and Aileen Beler, accompanist.

At one of the speakers' tables covers were laid with handsome appointments and individual corsages for the following: Past officers Mrs. Johnson, Frances R. Knox, G. Laurine Broadwell, Mattie N. Wallace, Louise Helen Kramer, Adelaide Brewer-Douglas, Annie L. Colburn and Ada S. Watson. New officers—Dr. Grandmason, Margaret D. Reordan, Elizabeth Bowman-Tomlison, Izora M. Scott, Madge B. Burnham, Lulu E. Eckles, Marjorie Quigley, Clella Collins, Enid Beck and Anna T. Schiebusch.

Tender intimacy of women's friendships engendered by working together for the poor was characteristic of no less beautiful installation of the Philanthropy and Civics Club. Here again it was Berta Bonhaus who received greater adulation than Nellie Dean Graham, the incoming chief executive, although both are equally beloved. Mrs. Bonhaus was given a set of Vienese china, hand decorated in gold, blue, green and silver.

Two outstanding features of this luncheon program were the novel table decorations arranged by the chairman of decorations for the year, Mrs. E. E. Bartlett, and the program of ensemble singing by the club chorus under the direction of Hugo Kirchoffer.

Mrs. Bartlett's decorations were of such value and beauty they are worthy of repetition in detail. Down the center of each table there were 200 seated in the dining-room and the library. On the veranda were broad stripes of royal blue satin and a smaller silver ribbon in the center. At each place was a lovely ship and in the center of the speakers' table where Mrs. Bonhaus presided with Mrs. Graham as chief guest of honor, was a sailboat of blue, the sails of silver. It was the good ship "Encouragement," the word in silver letters on the blue of the ship. At one end of the table was a miniature clubhouse with tiny dolls dressed as club women ascending the steps. At the other end was a miniature garden made out of geranium leaves with vanity mirrors half hidden as pools. Here was the celebrated House of Friendship, the place where the women who sew first made the many garments for the poor. One member this year has made 202 garments for layettes.

Mrs. Graham named her chairman appointments and outlined the work for the coming year after her installation and inspiring address.

Children Seek Film Careers Like Father's

The prejudice which many fathers seem to have against their children following in their footsteps affects William Beaudine, the First National director, not a whit. Not only is he thoroughly agreeable that his children shall become members of the industry, but also offers actual encouragement whenever he can.

One of the youngest directors in the screen colony and the adored father of three charming daughters and a son, Beaudine says: "I see no more promising field than that of motion pictures on which to start my youngsters."

Beaudine already has given his two daughters, "Mickey" and "Jimmie," substantial experience in several of his pictures. Twelve-year-old "Mickey," in addition to appearing with her lovely 15-year-old sister, "Jimmie," in a Vitaphone singing and dancing act in "Two Weeks Off," directed by their father, also has played sister to Dorothy Mackall in "Hard to Get," recently filmed by Beaudine. No actress was ever more proud of a role than "Mickey" is of this.

The most recent member of Beaudine's family to "go movie" is "Mumps," his young son, who has just made the announcement that he intends to inherit the paternal megaphone.

French Actor Held Success in Film Plays

Maurice Chevalier, star of many Parisian stage revues, is appearing in his first American talking picture, "Innocents of Paris," a tLazarus's Million Dollar Theater.

Chevalier is inimitable; nearly every adjective pertaining to the ability of an actor has been used in criticisms of his stage presentation in New York City, while under contract to Ziegfeld.

Paramount has taken a story of the streets of Paris and woven a drama around it, which permits this player to employ his talents as actor, singer and entertainer.

Chevalier plays a happy-go-lucky push cart singer of the Flea Market district of Paris. He wins a chance to go on the stage, where he makes a smashing success.

The supporting cast includes Sylvia Beecher, George Fawcett, Margaret Livingston and others.

RESORT AND HOTEL NOTES

THE direct air line to Bishop of the Nevada Air Lines is said to be a decided boon to fishermen in saving time in reaching the high Sierra country. With a schedule of an hour and a half to Bishop, that it is meeting with high favor in the eyes of many is shown by the full bookings of the planes practically since the beginning of the service. The terminus of the line is at Reno, made in three hours by the Lockheed monoplanes.

Following a large increase in business the Hotel Olympic at San Francisco recently expended $10,000 for the installation of a new rapid passenger elevator to replace one of the automatic elevators now in operation. "From every indication, it appears that this summer's business will be the heaviest in years," said C. E. Balin, manager, recently. "A boom is on for vacation travel and as a result all of California will feel the effects."

Reports from Archie C. Dean, who operates the high Sierra pack trains out of Independence, are to the effect that the trail over Sawmill Pass leading into Woods Lake, Bench Lake, Twin Lakes and the headwaters of the South Fork of the Kings River, where excellent trout fishing is to be found, has recently been cleared and is in good shape. The other three passes leading out of Independence, namely, Kearsarg, Shepherd and Oak Creek passes, have been opened for some time and some fine limits are reported to have been brought out of that district this season.

One of the attractions at Big Bear this year is a nine-hole golf course, 2800 yards long, under the personal direction of Neil Russell, professional. The course is situated at an altitude of 7200 feet.

A regular daily airplane service from Los Angeles to Big Bear Lake was inaugurated last Wednesday by the Standard Air Lines, of which Jack Frye is the president.

Fokker cabin planes are being used on a schedule of two round trips each day between the Big Bear City Airport and the Los Angeles field of the Standard Company.

With all indications pointing to an unusually large volume of traffic to mountain resorts this season, the Motor Transit Stages have just put into service a fleet of new de luxe motor coaches designed and built especially for handling the company's passengers to Lake Arrowhead, Big Bear Lake, the San Jacinto Mountains and "Rim of the World" resorts, according to Max H. Green, traffic manager for the stages.

"These new parlor coaches represent the last word in motor travel, comfort and convenience, each one costing more than $12,000 to build in the company's own shops," said Green. And, "each car is equipped with a 125-horsepower six-cylinder motor, which provides an abundance of power for any grade and smooth, flexible operation."

Barney Sears, guide and packer of Olancha, reports that of the twenty-one lakes comprising the Cottonwood Lakes, seven are well stocked and only one is closed for breeding purposes. Golden trout abound in these lakes, the season for which opened the 1st inst.

The following is a list of recent arrivals at the Mt. Wilson Hotel: C. I. Starrett, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Leikan, Jacob Windling, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Niles, Miss Fern Hassett, Miss Clara V. Treston, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Arnold, Robert Stauffer, Dr. and Mrs. C. A. Jackson, the Misses Hoffmeister, Miss A. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Skinner, Fred and Herbert Carqueville, M. D. Anderson, Mrs. Hanah E. Wetz, Lawrence Wetz, David Luboff, B. Kenman and Mr. and Mrs. S. Carleton, all of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Moore, Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Hutash, Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Bryan, Mrs. Alice L. Abbott, Miss Elizabeth and Master Richard Abbott, Mrs. E. G. Gridley, and Grant and Richard Gridley, all of Pasadena.

Established in 1888, the Lehman Steamship Agency of this city is enjoying an enviable business each year as planners of tours and in helping vacationists decide where to go.

Among alluring trips of note, which they are agents for, are those of an ocean voyage to the Hawaiian Islands, to Alaska, to Northern Canada, and to New York via the Panama Canal.

A most enjoyable ocean trip is that offered by the North Pacific Coast Line (joint service of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company and Holland-American Line) to England and the continent via the Panama Canal, for which Lehman's Steamship Agency is also the agent. There are frequent sailings directly from Los Angeles Harbor, making this an ideal trip for the summer months.

Guests at Tamarack Lodge at Mammoth Lakes in the high Sierras, enjoyed a very pleasing program of readings, music and light comedy last Sunday evening. Phyllis Hansen Ferguson of Los Angeles entertained with humorous readings. Among other features of the evening's entertainment were vocal selections by Miss Eleanor Elliott, humorous stories by W. P. Beard and Wesley Cunningham and college songs by J. Marvin Dean and Remington Olmsted, Jr.

Trout fishing on the Twin Lakes at Tamarack Lodge has been especially good the past two weeks, according to Lloyd B. Austin, manager of the Lodge. Large catches have been reported by Dr. H. D. Van Fleet and Wesley Cunningham of Los Angeles and Mrs. F. A. Giguette and H. F. Markolf of Pasadena. The opening of the golden trout season, the 1st inst., took numbers of the Tamarack Lodge guests to the near-by Duck Lake, well known as a golden trout center.

The following were among the guests from Los Angeles sojourning at the Hotel Virginia, Long Beach, last week: T. M. Towne, Mrs. A. J. Graves, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Abrahams, Mrs. Beatrice Chapman, E. E. Herboot, A. C. Haff, Mr. and Mrs. Radcliffe, J. A. Hartman and son and Mr. and Mrs. William Vickers.

During the road-building operations on Foothill Boulevard the best way to Glenn ranch resort is via Valley Boulevard to Ontario, north to Upland or Highland avenue, thence east to Eliwanda and vit the Auto Club signs. The Lytle Creek Canyon Road has been recently graded and oiled. Horseback riding is now the favorite sport at this resort and the new bridle paths are well patronized every day. A dive into the big swimming pool afterward is an added attraction.

PLAYWRITING HOBBY OF HENRY DUFFY PLAYERS

Playwriting appears to go with a Henry Duffy contract, for every few weeks some actor or actress under Henry Duffy's management turns out a drama.

Frank M. Thomas, who is Hugh Westcourt in "Dancing Mothers," with Belle Bennett and the Henry Duffy Players at El Capitan, is putting the finishing touches on an effort called "Prizefight." Incidentally, he is weaving in it a good part for himself.

Lucile Nikolas, who is Barbara Billings in "The Big Pond" at the Hollywood Playhouse, has just completed a piece called "Kiss and Make Up," which Stuart Walker has obtained to present at his Civic Theater in Cincinnati.

Emerson Treacy, recently seen here in "Skidding," has finished a comedy of youth, "Down With Wimmen," which an eastern producer may produce early in the autumn.

Bessie Bacon, who was seen in "Lightnin'," has completed the play which her father, Frank Bacon, started for May Robson.

Edward McWade, of the cast of "The Hindu," author of "Winchester" and other plays, has finished a comedy with a part in it for his brother, Robert, now appearing in "The Big Pond."

Walker Whiteside, star of "The Hindu," has written several of his own starring vehicles under the pen name of Gordon Kean, and is now at work on a new play in which he may appear next season.

Song Writer Hails Talkie as Sales Aid

New songs, new tunes, lyrics and tempo. Practicing, conferences, rehearsing and telephone calls go to make up the best part of Lynn Cowan's present life. Cowan says that at last the musician is coming into his own, and bewails the fact that talking pictures weren't popular when he wrote his song, "Dream House." He's sure the sales would have been twice, thrice or maybe five times as big.

That one song, however, built him a "dream house" of his own in Beverly Hills, and since then he has written and had some thirty tunes published.

Cowan has returned to the Boulevard Theater after seven weeks in San Francisco at the Warfield, to assume his old role of ceremonial maestro. The Boulevard is home to Lynn, for here he started working for Fanchon and Marco three years ago. Since then he has been transferred to about a dozen other places, but somehow always manages to get back to the Washington and Vermont house.

Between shows he works on songs with Paul Titsworth at a little piano in his dressing-room backstage. Both he and Paul are writing theme songs for James Cruze productions, and have contracts with two other studios for the future.

Speaking of the future, there is talk of Lynn and his Boulevard band becoming recorders. They already play twice a week for a radio broadcast station.

Evelyn Myers to Be Featured

Evelyn Myers, soubrette; Max Coleman and Bumps Mack, comedians, are featured members of "Miss Tabasco," the new burlesque production that will entertain patrons of the Follies Theater for the week beginning today. Miss Myers has won her way to popularity in burlesque by talent and attractiveness; Coleman and Mack have been featured comedians for a decade.

The new show will offer an enlivening program of song, dance and comedy scenes, will delegate to a bevy of chorus girls the presentation of various musical numbers and will further give opportunity for the display of the individual abilities of Louise Kellar and Mary Walton, soubrettes; Walter Van Horn and Syd Ray, straight men, and Melene Chorka and Marion Douglas, prima donnas.

Dolores New Film at Tower

Dolores Costello in "Madonna of Avenue A," a Vitaphone talking picture, will be shown for the first time in Los Angeles at the Tower Theater commencing tomorrow.

"Madonna of Avenue A" tells a story of the strange lives of mother and daughter, of deception, intrigue and the force of heredity. The lovely Dolores appears as the daughter, Louise Dresser as the mother, Grant Withers is leading man.

Miss Costello, in this picture, sings the theme song, "My Madonna," composed by Irving Berlin.

Vaudeville acts on the Vitaphone will also be shown.

Actress Holds Odd Distinction

Not having been a bathing beauty while under contract to Mack Sennett, Sally Eilers enjoys a distinction from other stars who began careers in this manner.

Miss Eilers was under contract to Sennett for several months. Her initial vehicle for them was "The Goodby Kiss." After that she acted in two short pictures, but in neither did she wear a bathing suit or appear in abbreviated costume.

She has signed for three pictures with Pathe. The first, "A Sailor's Sweetheart," with Alan Hale as star, is now in production.

Burlesque for Elks Planned

The Burbank "Burlesquers" will stage a special bill dedicated to visiting Elks entitled "Hello Bill" in the new show beginning today. There will be hilarious comedy, special stage settings to conform with convention week and an array of electrical effects.

The cast includes Fay Norman, June Rhoads, Curis Mason and Jane Hazleton. Charlie Pritcher and Harry Le Van will handle the comedy end of the bill, which they have specially written for the enjoyment of the B.P.O.E.

Actress Glad of Return to Picture Fold

They always come back, a truism ofttimes employed to advantage by detectives, is used in a somewhat different manner by Irene Rich, film star, who has returned to her early love, the picture profession, after a highly successful vaudeville tour—during which she made triumphant personal appearances in the key cities throughout the country.

Miss Rich, who is now appearing opposite Will Rogers in the Fox picture, "They Had to See Paris," said that while she was anxious for diversion after several years of continuous picture making, at the time of her departure from Hollywood, still nothing ever looked quite so good to her as her adopted "home town" when she returned.

Although one of the best-known feminine stars in Hollywood, Miss Rich is back in the films for an undecided period. It appears that her vaudeville appearances brought to light so decidedly gifted a stage personality that producers for the stage are especially anxious to have her appear in plays on Broadway.

As a matter of fact, it is understood that Miss Rich was compelled to decline the starring role for A. H. Woods, eastern producer, in a play called "Scarlet Pages." This production is now in rehearsal with Elsie Ferguson.

Specialization Advocated by Film Director

Directors should always stick to their own forte, whether this be comedy, tragedy or domestic satire, according to Mel Brown, director, who has just embarked upon the production of "The Love Doctor," formerly called "The Boomerang," Richard Dix's last starring vehicle for Paramount.

"It is all right to say that one should not narrow his field too closely," comments Brown. "However, the time-worn and oft-repeated adage regarding the jack-of-all-trades who is master of none is sadly true even today. Only the outstanding and unusually versatile genius among directors can do equally well in all moods of the drama. The ordinarily gifted director does best to confine himself to the field where he is most at ease.

"Indeed, each part of the field, including comedy, tragedy, domestic drama, satire and so forth, is highly specialized and requires infinite study and pains to be thoroughly understood."

Writer Finds Relaxation in Plane Flights

John Farrow, writer, finds his greatest means of relaxation is "flying."

Farrow is a licensed pilot and has been flying for several years.

He is now busily engaged writing the dialogue and making the adaptation on "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals," Barrie's play which is to be brought to the screen as a talkie. But as frequently as possible he "takes the air."

Farrow says it is necessary for a writer to go in enthusiastically for some form of activity quite removed from his work.

Various Types Require Study

When Travis Banton, creator of Paramount wardrobe, read the cast sheet of "Illusion," a Paramount all-dialogue production, he discovered that he had an interesting task before him—that of designing costumes for three distinct feminine types. They are Nancy Carroll, June Collyer and Kay Francis.

Miss Carroll, according to Banton, represents vivacious youth, and her costumes for this production are of the simple sport and tailored type, without sophistication or artifice. Miss Collyer enacts the role of an ultra-modern society debutante and her costumes run the gamut of smart, but youthful sophistication. Miss Francis is the epitome of feminine allure, and her dark beauty calls for fashions that are extreme and chicly daring.

Music Scores in Preparation

One of the busiest men in the motion-picture industry is Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, who is now completing the musical scores for "Taming of the Shrew," the Douglas Fairbanks-Mary Pickford vehicle, and Norma Talmadge's next production, "Tin Pan Alley."

It is said that Dr. Riesenfeld has done the musical scores on more than fifty productions since his debut at the United Artists studio. He just finished work on "This is Heaven," with Vilma Banky. The latter production is soon to be released here.

DIRECTORS MAY CHANGE WORK STYLE

Lionel Barrymore Visions Necessity for Constant Action in Talkies

A two-director system, with films produced by both an "ear" and an "eye" director working simultaneously—and many old plays in new dresses—these are among the things the screen may shortly see as the result of the changing technique due to the talking pictures.

This is on no less authority than that of Lionel Barrymore, stage star, screen actor, and now director.

He paved the way for these unusual new developments in his first feature-length picture, "Madame X," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's all-talking version of that old tragedy of the stage with Ruth Chatterton, Lewis Stone, and Raymond Hackett. In the new picture, now playing at the Fox Criterion Theater, Barrymore tried both plans—the double directing and the new dress for old drama.

After rehearsing scenes with his players, Barrymore moved into the sound-proof monitor room, sitting at the electrical switchboard that regulated the voice of his players, while his assistant, Harry Bucquet, watched from the camera to see that the action was as rehearsed.

"I think," says Barrymore, "that in talking pictures the director's most important work, after rehearsals, is at the switchboard, for every inflection should be carefully checked. The mechanics, the business and movements of the players, can be rehearsed before the actual recording begins, and then a second man should watch it and signal starts and stops."

The new picture, according to Barrymore, is an ideal example of how old plays are to be given new dresses in the talking films.

"You can't let action drag for an instant in films," he says, "and long speeches positively won't work. Just because we make pictures talk doesn't mean that we are playing them to $3 audiences, and the popular demand is for action all the time—motion pictures built on the theory that motion-pictures should move.

"We took the old play, and Willard Mack wrote his own adaptation. No characters talk in the same scene longer that six minutes.

"The heroine is hurried from locale to locale in quick episodes, each with a bit of direct action and a few pertinent words of dialogue advancing the story."

Writer Visits University in Spanish Town

Dorothy Farnum, one of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's scenarists, visited the University of Santiago de Comportella in Galicia, Spain, at the special request of Harry Rapf, seeking atmosphere and material for a forthcoming Ramon Novarro picture.

The school is maintained by the Spanish government for peasants. Fortunate students may live there on 3 pesetas a day (about 60 cents.) Less fortunate ones walk from their homes in the surrounding mountains with their mattresses strapped to their backs. They carry their winter's supply of wine, cheese and sausage. They pay almost nothing.

"These youngsters, on whom Spain's future progress depends," says Dorothy, "give up family and friends for from four to six years of unmitigated toil and study in almost complete isolation. One finds dramatic, poignant and romantic stories among them."

Pershing 'Twin' Signs Long-Term Contract

E. H. Calvert, stage actor of many years' standing and portrayer of screen character roles, has signed a long-term contract with Paramount Famous Lasky to appear in talking pictures.

Calvert, who is known as Gen. John J. Pershing's "twin," has acted on the dramatic, musical comedy and vaudeville stage. He was director-general for the Essanay Company at one time, and under his tutelage such players as Gloria Swanson, Wallace Beery, Helen Ferguson, Agnes Ayres, Rod La Roque and Ralph Graves made their screen debuts. In recent years he has devoted most of his time to pictures.

His resemblance to Pershing has caused many to mistake him for the American war leader. In addition to resembling each other physically, Calvert and Pershing are reputed personal friends. When Pershing was a captain in the Seventh Cavalry Calvert was a captain in the Third Cavalry.

Film Story Has Aviation Angle

Elinor Glyn is given credit for the authorship of the story for Billie Dove's latest talking picture, "The Man and the Moment," with Rod La Rocque, now showing at the Hillstreet Theater. Miss Glyn has woven an aviation angle into the romance of an orphan girl who marries a man to escape limitations put upon her by her guardian.

The supporting cast includes Gwen Lee, Robert Schable, Charles Sellon and George Bunny. The picture was directed by George Fitzmaurice.

Anatole Friedland, song composer and producer of musical shows, headlines the R.-K.-O. stage show with the "Night Club Revue," in which are seen Le Blanc and Du Charm, Lucille Hayes and Al Jockers. Other features of the program include the blackface team of Glenn and Jenkins, the Mangean Troupe and others.

STAR STUDIED VOICE

Betty Blythe, who recently returned from an extended tour over the RKO circuit in her own singing act, studied voice culture in Europe. She played leads in "So Long Letty," and other light operas, before starting on a screen career.

BOOKS FOR VACATION READING

Francis Hackett's "Henry VIII," W. J. Ghent's "The Road to Oregon" and Walter Lippmann's "Preface to Morals" Are Among the Best Being Offered

BY LILLIAN C. FORD

Vacation brings the demand for a list of books for leisurely reading. With the paradox that runs through life, like the orange stripes in a zebra, many of the highbrows who have been reading psychological biography and philosophical history seek in the summer western thrillers and international sleuths, while those who have found relaxation during the year's grind in light fiction and the product of the Crime Club, now turn to what they consider really worth-while books. Therefore, in my selection I have included both heavy and light-weights. All have been previously reviewed on this page.

The outstanding biography of the season is Hackett's "Henry VIII," that remarkable re-creation of the cunning, shrewd, ambitious, head-strong and ardent duffer who wrote his name indelibly on the pages of world history.

Hackett is said to have spent six years on this work. It has repaid him. His historical accuracy and his understanding of the man and the period are everywhere revealed. But it is his brilliant power of re-creating the past, his vivid sense of drama, his ability to see his characters as a part of the dazzling pageant of the age which he so magically places before us that all combine to make the volume one that is a delight to read.

Ghent's "The Road to Oregon"

Not less distinguished in its own line is William J. Ghent's "The Road to Oregon," which is a chronicle of the great emigrant trail that ran from Independence, Mo., to the mouth of the Walla Walla. Beginning with the early pathfinders Mr. Ghent follows the movement along that trail upon which scouts, hunters, missionaries, emigrants, highwaymen and footloose adventurers all passed from pioneer days to the late seventies.

Mr. Ghent writes as one who has explored the trail from end to end. Had he been a boon companion of such old-timers as James Bridger, Marcus Whitman, John Bidwell, John Colter and the rest he could not give a more vivid and realistic account. But he has the inestimable advantage over a contemporary writer of the age, such as Parkman, in that he has perspective and breadth of view. He sees the great westward movement not only in all its details, but also as a vital part of the development of America.

Of "The Road to Oregon" one reviewer has aptly said: "In every library, on the shelf beside the 'Oregon Trail,' should be placed a copy of Ghent's more detailed and inclusive report of the lives of those who carved out the road to the Northwest."

William J. Ghent is a well-known writer on economics and history who for years made an intensive study of pioneer history. His book is one of the "eventually, why not now?" volumes that is bound to find its place in every reading home.

Lippmann's "A Preface to Morals"

Walter Lippmann's "A Preface to Morals," is the outstanding book of the season in the realm of practical philosohy. Mr. Lippmann has pondered over the world we live in, over the failure of traditional religion to satisfy the needs of modern man, over the perplexities and confusion born of disillusion, and has attempted to work out a morality adapted to the need of the intelligent man of the period.

Irwin Edman, reviewing "Preface to Morals," says: "It may be said at once that Mr. Lippmann's credo is a statement profound, eloquent and sustained of a philosophy for the adult modern. His thought has become mellowed and his language has stayed fresh. He has gone to the core of contemporary confusions. He has perceived its origins and its characteristic agonies. With candor and comprehension he has indicated the possibility of a way of life for those who will no longer take one on authority, a religion for the faithless, a morality for the free intelligence can recognize as the native expression of his life and his world. Mr. Lippmann has written a brilliant preface to contemporary morals. In that field no one can ever write a conclusion."

What's New in Poetry

In poetry we have at least two outstanding volumes. The first is "Cavender's House," Edwin Arlington Robinson's tragic and beautiful narrative in blank verse which tells the story of Cavender, who had in a jealous fury thrown his wife over a convenient cliff. When the poem opens he has returned after twelve years to his deserted house, where he finds the spirit of his wife, as serene, as baffling, as disturbing as in life. His tormented effort to draw from the ghost answers to the questions that are always in his mind reveal him fully.

Babette Deutsch says: "His poem exhibits not only Robinson the poet, with his shrewd drawing of men and women, his power to evoke atmosphere, his gift of music, but also Robinson, the man, with his dry humor, his essential seriousness, his philosophy of resigned if sorrowful agnosticism."

The discovery of some hundred poems of Emily Dickinson which her sister Lavinia withheld from publication is one of the literary events of the year. There has been such discussion as to the value of these poems in our final estimate of Emily's place. Of this Lewis Untermeyer says: "These hitherto unprinted treasurers compose Emily Dickinson's most beautiful and, from every standpoint, most important book . . . . Had she been unknown until the publication of "Further Poems," and had she written nothing but this one book, she would have to be reckoned among the indisputably greater major poets. Frail in build, fine in texture, hers is the colossal substance of immortality."

A new anthology that merits attention is "Chief Modern Poets of England and America" just published by Macmillan. It is the ideal book for the lover of poetry to take for vacation reading.

Here's Outstanding Fiction

For the sophisticated reader of fiction Maurice Bedel's "Molinoff, or The Count in the Kitchen," is, as one reviewer is quoted as saying, "hilarious, rude, impudent and smart." "Wolf Solent" by John Cowper Powys, reviewed today by Paul Jordan Smith, needs no further comment here. Another outstanding two-volume novel is "The Seven Vices," by Guglielmo Ferrero, which presents a wonderful picture of Italian society and politics in the '90's. It will be reviewed at length next week. One more great novel must be mentioned. That is "Kristin Lavransdatter," Sigrid Undset's trilogy that won the Nobel Prize.

Now for lighter reading. In detective stories "The Black Camel," by Earl Derr Biggers takes the lead, with Charlie Chan ferreting out a baffling crime. In graphic, swift-moving, up-to-the-minute fiction, Arthur Train's "Illusion," is accorded the palm. It is a book that men like. Booth Tarkington's "Young Mrs. Greeley," is winning the popularity it merits. Maud Diver's "A Wild Bird," is moving steadily forward toward the best seller goal. So is Lorna Rea's "Six Mrs. Greenes," a quiet, clever character novel that makes pleasant summer reading. Lorna Moon's "Dark Star," stands out as the most original and moving first novel of the year; in fact, it has become one of the novels that every one has read or is about to read. Sabatini's "Romantic Prince" is one of the best of his historical romances. In the same class is Totheroh's "Men Call Me Fool." "The Ladder of Folly" by Muriel Hine is a love story with a quality of its own.

Gossip of the Book World

Robert E. Sherwood, author of "The Road to Rome" and "The Queen's Husband," contributes the leading article to the July Scribner's. It is called "Beyond the Talkies—Television." In it Mr. Sherwood predicts "a theater in every home" and the death of the commercial stage. He then departed for Europe to work on a novel.

Florence Ryerson, who recently completed the screen play "Dangerous Curves" for Clara Bow, is working, in collaboration with Colin Clements, on a new three-act comedy, "Mild Oats."

Lincoln Colcord believes that the "Cradle of the Deep" hoax which still reverberates in literary circles is but one manifestation of a decay in ethical standards which is affecting all American life.

"It is an indication of the dangerous trend of altogether too much thought and opinion in America since the war," he writes in The Bookman. "Old standards are going by the board; nothing can be believed with conviction any longer; nothing is false and nothing is true; only the thing that pays is worth pursuing. If a fellow has launched a successful fraud, why, good for him. Ideals? Only the chaps who choose to stand in their own light bother with such unprofitable notions."

"From Trackway to Turnpike, an Illustration from East Devon," by Gilbert Sheldon, will be published at an early date by the Oxford University Press, New York. The author takes an area of East Devon and with the help of maps traces what one may call its "road history." He shows the courses of the prehistoric trackways, the designs of the Roman system of military routes, down to the final threading of the country by permanent turnpikes. The book is an entertaining history of road traveling and should be of interest to the general reader as well as to the historian and economist.

Ruth Blodgett, whose novel "Birds Got to Fly" will be published by Harcourt, Brace in the fall, has a story, "Saturday-Night Beans," in the July Scribner's. Miss Blodgett is a native of Massachusetts, as one

WESSEX ANIMISM FICTIONIZED

BY PAUL JORDAN SMITH

WOLF SOLENT. By John Cowper Powys, Simon & Schuster, New York.

To the intense satisfaction of all who have been initiated to the enjoyment of John Cowper Powys's melancholy novels, epigrammatic essays, and mystic poetry for the past fifteen years, he is at last receiving a well-merited if tardy recognition.

In the mad welter of war-books, apologies and explanations that began to be poured out in the autumn of 1914, but few achieved more than an ephemeral life. Bernard Shaw's Pamphlet of Common Sense still is remembered, and he has no reason for hanging his head in shame (as most of the great "intellectuals" have, or should;) and John Cowper Powys did a little book which, if not so full of hard sense, was distinctly one of the most readable, most civilised, and, possibly, the best piece of writing done in the English-speaking world during those tumultuous and terrible days. He has no reason for being ashamed of his "War and Culture."

As a novelist, his "Wood and Stone," the first to be published, was what may be called a solid achievement. Indeed, it was one of those comfortable, roomy volumes, rare nowadays, in which one got a sense of vastness and leisure in which to form an intimate acquaintance with those puppets of imagination that may well grow into more than flesh and blood. And yet it must be said that the puppets of "Wood and Stone," were not comfortable, normal human beings: on the one hand they were hard, harsh, cruel, even as Mr. Romer; and sensitive, quivering, suffering, shrinking souls, even as Lacryma and Mr. Quincunx. But, even so, the hasty critics of that day insisted on muttering phrases about "Thomas Hardy's Wessex," as though it were impossible to write a novel of Dorsetshire without imitating Hardy!

The fact, is that in none of Mr. Powys's novels, not in "Rodmoor," nor in "Ducdame," does one find the touch, the spirit of Hardy. Jude Frawley, Michael Henchard, Gabriel Oak, Clym Yeobright are normal, almost universal characters: that is to say, they partake of universality. Even Sue Bridehead, the most neurotic of Hardy creations, is "normal" compared to the bruised and broken children of the later novelist.

Author's Own Touch

"Wolf Solent" is the natural, the legitimate, successor of "Wood and Stone." All the literary children of the Powys family have the family face: and the Johncowperpowysean touch is ever unmistakable. One finds the same point of outlook, the same "mythologising," the same tendency to personification, the familiar mystic animism, the same meticulous attention to the fleeting moods of the spirit, and to those particular aspects of nature that made "Ducdame" at once a handbook of pantheism, and a guide to the botany of Dorset.

Wolf Solent's father had been a teacher of history at Ramsgard, Dorset, years before this story opens, and his amours and ultimate disgrace have driven his not too virtuous widow and her son to London, where, after university, he, too, became a teacher of history and literature until, driven to a "malice-dance" against the fatality of a machine-age, he also lost his position.

The story proper begins with Wolf's boarding the train at Waterloo Station, bound for Ramsgard, where he is to collaborate with Squire John Urquart in writing a somewhat scandalous history of Dorset. At the very moment when he is elated by his new opportunity he chances to see the haggard, miserable face of one of those London starvelings, looking its rebuke to every form of affluence and success; and the "face at Waterloo" become the symbol of outraged suffering, recurring again and again throughout the pages of the book.

Once in Ramsgard (Possible Yeovil,) the living son and the dead father meet again. In company with Miss Selena Gault, a former mistress to the elder Solent, he visits the grave of that voluptuary, whose last words, "Christ! I've enjoyed my life!" revealed a robust soul so utterly antithetic to that of his bewildered son.

"Wolf Solent," is a novel of inner strife, a chronicle of the unending malice and trickery of women; of the irresponsible and lecherous philandering of sex-driven men. The woman-sweet, malignant bitterness of Wolf's mother: Selena Gault's hoarded jealousy, that survives the grave: John Urquart's furious lust after entombed salacity: the haunting specter of Mr. Redfern, Wolf's predecessor, concerning whose death so many consciences are troubled: Mr. Malakite, the incestuous bibliopole; T. E. Valley, the drunken rector: Jason Otter, the fear-ridden poet, and his brother, Darnley, who has drunk waters from "The Well of Loneliness;" Smith, the hatter, whose daughter Mattie proved to be an illegitimate half-sister to Wolf Solent; Christie Malakite, the wraith-like, unattainable, spiritual-mate to Wolf's highest moods, and Gerda Thorp, the stone-cutter's daughter, a wild, pagan, whistling-blackbird of a girl, who becomes Solent's wife and mistress to the parish—all these move against a somber background of muttering hills, over which hangs a brooding sky. These poor victims of inner compulsion sacrifice and are sacrificed, now on the rude stones of pagan Celts, and now before the high altar of the Lord Christ.

Somber Beauty Predominates

Nature, hereditary forces, passions dominate: Thought rises in thin, vaporous spirals, like some filmy incense, only to be blown away by the winds of primitive Mood.

But, for all that note of somberness, it is nature that provides the beauty of this wayward novel. Out on the downs the poet masters the psychoanalyst: within four walls Krafft-Ebing runs amuck. Within their houses and along their little streets men sneak and spy upon one another, anxious to uncover some unutterable depravity of brutal lust: women, with tongues venom-laden, seek to probe the ulcers of the soul.

Throughout all this riot of madness, Solent discovers not one universe, but many. "One universe in-

A Group of Mystery Yarns

SUPERINTENDENT WILSON'S HOLIDAY. By G. D. H. and M. Cole. Payson & Clarke, New York.

Retired from Scotland Yard, Superintendent Wilson on his holiday finds one mystery after another awaiting his solution. Each he penetrates in record time, to the satisfaction of readers of detective stories. The authors are ingenious in their working out of plots and in the eight stories they offer a surprising variety.

THE STOKE SILVER CASE. By Lynn Brock. Harper & Bros., New York.

Rupert Challice was killed. That's how the story gets its start. But who killed him was the question that puzzled the authorities. Six persons are under suspicion, each had a motive sufficiently strong to have prompted the act.

This is a good yarn, if deep and tangled plotting makes for interest, and it must, else why are thousands avidly reading detective and mystery yarns by the million? It took months to unravel the tangled skein the author wove, but if you like this sort of thing, here's a book that is chock full of nothing else but.

THE BRADMOOR MURDER. By Melville Davisson Post. J. H. Sears & Co., New York.

The subtitle of this story is revealing only in that we learn that it was through the remarkable deductions of Sir Henry Marquis of Scotland Yard that this puzzling mystery is finally cleared up. He is working in conjunction with Sir Godfrey Simon, alienist.

It would be a shame to even hint at the methods employed by these two remarkable criminal experts. But this may be said: if you are one of those fans who loves to speculate on the validity of theories advanced by men concerned with logic, you will enjoy every word of this expertly written story.

How the criminals involved in this murder were finally brought to book, the mazes of intrigue that are uncovered, the cleverness of the master hand in the mystery, are all presented here by a writer who knows his stuff and who violates none of the rules of the game in the telling.

THE SECRET TRAIL. By Anthony Armstrong. Macrae Smith Company, Philadelphia.

This book is for those only who love the type of mystery story that has to do with international gangs engaged in the purloining of state secrets. In this case it is a machine for the dropping of bombs from an airplane. This machine or a model of it is stolen and the British Secret Service is at its wit's end. Then Jimme Rezaire, a criminal, just out of prison, takes a hand and it is through his courage, cleverness and intimate knowledge of the ways of crooks that the machine is finally recovered and the criminals solidly enmeshed in the law's relentless web.

THE DOUBLECROSS. By Armstrong Livingston. Rae D. Henkle Company, New York.

The scene of this tale is laid in New York and the exclusive Long Island North Shore district. It has to do with the smuggling of jewels and the killing of persons entangled in the machinations of the gang that is carrying on the illegal operations.

There is enough excitement in it to last the average reader of mystery stories for a week. There are wild chases in the night, with the hero getting into all sorts of tight places. Just when all hope of escape seems gone the unexpected happens and providence, under the manipulation of the author, performs another miracle.

But, of course, everything works out in the right way, and law and order, honest toil and high motives, win their rewards and the poor wretches with black guilt on their souls are either consigned to the silence of the tomb or go up the river for the proper spell.

PRIZE READING CONTEST

Fifty book prizes are offered this summer by the library department of Frederick A. Stokes Company for the fifty best card catalogs of home or personal libraries made by boys or girls under 16 and submitted through the librarian of any school or public library.

This is the fourth summer reading contest sponsored by Stokes and is designed to stimulate the interest of young people not only in reading but in collecting a personal library. Entry in the contest will make boys and girls familiar with the books in their homes, or conscious of the lack of them. It will train children in using the library card catalog and show them how it is made. All card catalogs submitted, whether prize winners or not, will be returned so that each child will have a useful, permanent catalog of his personal or home library. The fifty prize winners will be given their choice of a large list of Stokes books.

Librarians throughout the country are lending their enthusiastic support to this contest and many booksellers, also, are interested. One enterprising bookshop, in Otsego, Mich., has announced that it will match each Stokes company prize with one of its own—an individual prize to the local children having the best five catalogs.

A touching letter from a 13-year-old boy to the library department of Frederick A. Stokes Company stated that as his home possessed no library and he had never owned a book, his librarian had suggested he write for permission to catalog the borrowed books he had read in the last five years. "So I am hoping you will let me do this. Please do." He has been advised by Stokes that he may catalog a list of books he would like to have in his personal library.

Erich Maria Remarque Distills for Us With Simplicity the Horrors of the World War Experienced by a Private in the German Ranks

BY THOMAS F. FORD

ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT. By Erich Maria Remarque. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

Damn war. Double damn the stupidity of the elder statesmen, be they Emperors, Kings, Kaisers, Presidents or Parliaments, who because of some fancied affront to their assumed dignity permit the youth of their nations to engage in such a nightmare activity as war—with its shells, gas clouds, tanks, suffering, starvation and death: with its dysentry, influenza, typhus, its murder, burning and hate and terror, on the land, on the sea, beneath the seas and in the air above land and sea.

"All Quiet on the Western Front" is a fearful and a wonderful tale presenting for the first time the feelings of a common soldier on the German side of the great war. It is, in fact, a tale told to a world of idiots by one of them. Its thesis is the damnation of war, because war takes not the old and the feeble—though it sears them with the flame of its horror and suffering and fear—but the very flower of the youth of all the nations involved.

Herr Remarque does not write with the fire and force that marked the work of Henri Barbusse, but there is in the blasting simplicity of his prose a searing quality that burns to the very bone of the awful subject. I am not, however, ready to give this work the final palm as the greatest of stories. I still recall the horror that convulsed when I read "Three Soldiers," John Dos Passos in 192 1923 came "Through the Wheat," Thomas Boyd, in which he war from the standpoint rine and finally, "Plumes," rence Stallings, in which ber of a family of fighters Jabez Plumes back in 18 Richard Plumes, who World War in 1918, came out all its stupidity and futility there is "The Case of Sergt cha," a Russian soldier's which has had a wide

Some writers see in the tendencies of our scientific and machine-ruled age no menace to real religion, but merely a need of readjustments.

Others affirm that our traditional beliefs are crumbling and will soon disappear under the relentless march of progress.

We emphasize the importance of getting perspectives in the long-range point of view. If we fix our gaze exclusively upon our particular space-time viewpoint, seeing the passing of the old and the inescapable intrusions of the new in the world of thought and action, pessimism will very likely result.

If we scan past periods and note the constant need of readjustment in ideas and social institutions we shall feel less bewildered, less discouraged in the present crisis.

It is so difficult for the soul to shape to a different mold, plastic as it is.

John Herman Randall, Jr., of the department of philosophy, Columbia University, acknowledges the difficulty of this readjustment when he says:

"Our bodies live in a world where machines are triumphant and where science is their servant. But men do not yet feel emotionally at home in the bare halls of the factory or the laboratory. They are still attached by a thousand ties of loyalty to the thoughts and aspirations that moved their forebears in the long past. They inhabit the new civilization but they are not yet really living its life."

If perpetual disintegration is the concomitant of life and its processes—if constant change marks civilization, there is a certain pathos in progress.

While religion, as commonly understood, seems to have suffered most in this era of cultural changes and traditional upheavals there are signs and portents that the light still glows upon countless altars of the hearts of men.

Only when that is extinguished and the last worshiper turns aside into the uncharted and unlighted regions of speculative and agnostic thought can religion be said to have perished.

After all, do we not take ourselves and our personal reactions too seriously?

Our modern intellectuals of the atheist cults must be entirely lacking in a sense of humor. To flippantly set aside the Omnipotent, or explain Him away and boast of their superior intelligence is absurd.

Truly we need to make some adjustments to the changing civilization, but not in the direction the intelligentsia point out.

When we leave the Infinite out of the plan of life we might as well revert to barbarism, or chaos.

Yes, truly, the printing presses are running day and night to the despair of the book reviewer and the ambitious reader.

A Renaissance is taking place in several of our colleges regarding educational methods. It might be summed up in these words of Robert Kelly: "Student initiative, self-dependence and expression, participation, co-operation."

The new methods being tried out are in line with the progressive spirit of the age. Of course, this applies only to the higher learning which the majority is deprived of. It is a beginning, however, in educational revision and a hopeful feature of our changing age.

HA! HA!
"OH, WHAT A PRECIOUS POLITICAL ASSET A GOOD SMILE IS."
"MRS. EVAN MOSHER, KNOWN TO US AFFECTIONATELY AS LEILA HOLTERHOFF AND JUST RETURNED FROM VIENNA WITH NEW HONORS IS A TRULY REMARKABLE GIRL.

WHEN it was announced that Mabel Walker Willebrandt would appear in a news reel talking sequence at a recent grand premiere, a sarcastic snicker twittered through the audience.

But when Mabel, with her laughing eyes and humorous little smile, began to talk, that snicker died away. The clever girl had anticipated her reputation with motion-picture audiences and beat them to it. She has probably handled the most difficult and unpopular job that could possibly have been handed to any national officer, with as much grace and efficiency as was attainable under the circumstances. She has done her sex more credit than most men could have achieved under those conflicting conditions. And oh, what a precious political asset a good smile is!

Another interesting old darling celebrated her 99th birthday this week, on July 3 . . . Mrs. Sheetz, who lives on West Thirty-first street. Except for a little deafness, Mrs. Sheetz suffers from few disabilities. She is interested in everything and still loves visiting around. Her annual birthday is a great occasion for her friends, who all insist that she is the very nicest ninety-niner extant.

That clever Genevieve Lipsett-Skinner of the Montreal Star, who was with us recently, sends me a pamphlet issued by the Canadian government on the correct way to serve wines. She was quite aghast at the outre methods of some of her Hollywood hosts. Sherry, for instance, should never, never be taken after the cafe noir. Nay, not even that alarmingly popular cooking sherry we buy so legitimately.

Mrs. Evan Mosher, known to us affectionately as Leila Holterhoff, and just returned from Vienna with new honors, is a truly remarkable girl. You see, she has been blind since babyhood . . . yet somehow she has managed to have a fuller and more gracious life than most of us. Besides being a brilliant scholar and musician, and having a sweet singing voice, she has not missed romance either. Mr. Mosher is her second husband.

So arresting is her mind and personality that one quickly forgets that those kindly eyes are sightless, especially as she is so gay. Mrs. Godfrey Holterhoff, her mother, must be rather a superior personage, too, when one realizes what has been achieved for this might-have-been sorrowful little girl of hers.

Meet Helen Hitchcock, a piquant young girl, who looks a bit like Colleen Moore. Helen has created a new career. Once a kindergarten teacher, she has now established a bureau for conducting childrens' parties for busy parents. She plans everything, from sending the invitations in a cute way to the menus, decorations—and games. Children adore her. She prefers them under 12 years of age, because after that they are apt to be independent youngsters with ideas of their own.

Oh, the adorable games this girl-child can invent . . . and lead. So many of us are too grown up to remember what little children enjoy, but Helen is a competent little girl Peter Pan. And her business thrives apace.

I only meet her once a year or so, usually at someone's party, and then only snatch a few minutes' conversation, but Mrs. Isidore Dockweiler enchants me. She is at once so essentially modern . . . and old-fashioned. Think of it, she celebrates her thirty-eighth wedding anniversary with Mr. Dockweiler next week, she has eleven living children (half a dozen highly eligible young sons,) she is youthful, gay, dresses well and has kept a figure to set off her clothes, is well-informed, well-read, an interesting conversationalist. I'm always proud that she is English. I was fascinated anew at Mrs. Shepherd's party at the Uplifters Club.

That event proved delightful, lunch in a sheltered, Arcadian grove. Four guests of honor . . . Mrs. Sloan-Orcutt, dashing in a scarlet outfit; Mrs. Ladd Gifford, in a black picture hat, proud that her devoted spouse was substituting for an absentee chauffeur; Mrs. Eli P. Clark, and Mrs. George Bishop. Mrs. Shepherd herself in a gay Japanese kimono, presiding over tables spread with saucy colored oil-cloth and a radiant show of flowers arranged in huge straw garden hats. Chops grilled out-of-doors and served sizzling hot . . . Mrs. Durant of Pasadena taking colored motion-pictures of the summery throng . . . White enameled tin plates and cups, paper napkins, picnic cutlery . . . a marvelous combination of fashion and al fresco.

Mr. and Mrs. Gifford's new speed boat will be ready this week and they evidently plan a swift sea-going summer.

Mrs. Durant has lots of fun with that color motion-picture camera of hers. It is her pet hobby, with which she is most successful. Likewise her special interest at gay parties is in those ladies who blossom out into the more daring colored costumes — hence Mrs. Sloan-Orcutt's scarlet radiance was required to be prominent in all those taken at the Shepherd party. Genteel dove grays lack glamour.

The courageous production of "Hamlet" by Dr. Cecil Reynolds at the Windsor Square Theater for the benefit of the hospital nurses' recreation fund, proved both interesting and unusual. Quite evidently Hamlet must have been a most difficult young man to live with, if the doctor's portrayal is correct.

The doctor had a good deal to stimulate his art because the musician's union sprung all sorts of unreasonable demands upon him on the day of the opening. Although the affair was for charity, a demand was made that seven extra union hands be employed on the stage, quite unnecessary to the performance. However, they managed to come to terms e'er the curtain went up.

Charlie Chaplin was present with Constance Collier and Georgia Hale. So were Irving Willatt and Billy Dove, the Gleasons, and numerous physicians interested in the new clinical Hamlet.

Halldane Douglas, the artist, was recently joined by his attractive young wife, who paused in the East, on their return from Paris, to visit relatives. They have a cosy little studio cottage near the lake in Echo Park. Mrs. Douglas was once a stage actress but modestly says she "never amounted to much" . . . so Halldane is spared the embarrassment of a wife who has "sacrificed her career for him." Instead she regards her spouse as easily the best artist in town.

Ours is a street-car friendship. I was reading "The New Yorker," and we mutually agreed it to be the most "clever" of all the periodicals of the sophisticate class . . . especially the pictures. Presently we exchanged names . . . I find I have found many charming friends thus casually in my very informal life.

Jack Dempsey Tells Whether He Will Fight

Jack Dempsey is at Pantages Theater.

His appearance is both on the screen and on the stage in a Willard Mack comedy playlet entitled "The Roadside Razz."

The skit opens with short screenings of the Firpo and Chicago Tunney fights. Then, on the stage, the former champion is discovered with his cast. The playlet gives an insight into the Dempsey character, and, as it proceeds, the boxer is asked and answers the question, "Will you ever fight again?"

Accompanying this personal appearance of Dempsey is a typical Pantages vaudeville bill which includes Alma and Duvall and company, dancers; Ketch and Wilma, Hollywood starlets; "Be Prepared to Be Surprised," and Rox LaRocca. The feature picture and Pathe Talking News complete the bill.

COLD'S BARRED IN TALKIES

Bodil Rosing declares it is a risky business to have a cold these days—with the talkies in full swing. The microphone catches the change in pitch so noticeably that is impossible to continue working in the picture. Miss Rosing recently made her talkie debut in "Broadway Babies" for First National.

ACTOR FREE OF WORRY IN NEW ROLES

Walker Whiteside Laughs With No Responsibility of Management

"My troubles are over," says Walker Whiteside. "The other fellow can do the worrying. I haven't been as happy in years."

For the first time in many seasons Whiteside, now appearing as guest star with the Henry Duffy Players at the President in "The Hindu," is aligned with a management other than his own. Whiteside has been one of the few actor-managers of the country for years, the others being Walter Hampden, George M. Cohan and Henry Duffy.

He was concluding his tour in "The Royal Box" and was preparing for a few days' rest at his home on Hastings-on-the-Hudson before sailing for Europe, when Henry Duffy's wire, offering him an engagement as guest star on the circuit, reached him. He canceled all his plans and departed westward.

"This is the greatest freedom from responsibility I have known," says Whiteside. "I do not have to worry over bookings, transportation, weekly statements. My time outside the theater is my own for the long daily walks I enjoy. I do my work, get my salary and am not bothered with the thousand and one details which an actor-manager encounters."

Mrs. Whiteside has just arrived from the East to spend the summer here with her husband. Their daughter, Rosamund, who has won success in light opera and who now lives in Paris, is expected here this month for a brief visit with her parents.

Contrast Will Mark Dramas Offered Here

Lee Shubert has arranged a brief season for Ethel Barrymore in the Mason Operahouse beginning the 15th inst., during which the actress will present two dramas of such contrasting nature that Los Angeles playgoers will have the opportunity of noting phases of Miss Barrymore's art hitherto unsuspected.

"The Kingdom of God," translated from the Spanish of G. Martinez Sierra by Helen and H. Granville Barker, will open the Barrymore visit and will be given for two weeks only. This is the play which the actress chose to dedicate the Ethel Barrymore Theater which Mr. Shubert built for her in New York City. It is not a religious drama in the ordinary meaning of the term nor is Sister Garcia, the character acted by Miss Barrymore, a nun. (Sierra wrote "The Cradle Song," played here a season ago.)

While "The Kingdom of God" still was selling out the Ethel Barrymore Theater in New York the actress withdrew it to produce Lili Hatvany's "The Love Duel." It had been her announced purpose to present more than one play during her New York season and in order to do this it was necessary to bring the run of the Spanish play to a premature ending. Zoe Akins adapted "The Love Duel" for Miss Barrymore's use from the original Hungarian play. The contrast between this sophisticated, continental drama of love and intrigue and the Spanish play is declared great. "The Love Duel" will be presented the 29th inst.

ACTOR FROM PENN YAN

John Roche, who plays an important role with Ina Claire in Pathe's all-taking screen version of "The Awful Truth," is one of the leading citizens of Penn Yan, N. Y. Although he has been in motion pictures five years and in the army two years, besides appearing for several years prior to that in stage productions of David Belasco, Charles Frohman, William A. Brady and the Theater Guild, he has carried the banner of Penn Yan with him the world over, because it was in that little obscure New York town that he was born.

BARD'S POPULARITY SEEN

Shakespearean Plays to Have Revival on Screen, According to Student and Producer

Renewed popularity of the plays of Shakespeare, a popularity that will extend to all classes of people, through the medium of the taking picture is prophesied by John Craig, himself a Shakespearean producer and actor, who is at present consulting director for the Douglas Fairbanks-Mary Pickford production of "The Taming of the Shrew."

Mr. Craig's view is not based entirely on the fact that he is connected with the production of a screen version of a Shakespearean comedy. It is an opinion that he has held for a long time, ever since talking pictures were first dreamed of. He believes—and millions share his belief—that Shakespeare was the greatest dramatist of all time, and he feels keen regret that the playwright's works have, of late years, fallen into desuetude.

SCREEN PLAY BETTER

"Shakespeare's plays, intelligently handled for the talking screen," he declares, "can be made both popular and illuminating to all classes. Few people of the present generation have any idea of the dramatic values, the spirit of humor, the subtlety of Shakespeare's works. All these qualities can be brought out far better on the screen than on the stage because, even in the shortened version that is made necessary, the camera can give to the audience so much more than the stage can.

"I believe that the production of Shakespeare for the screen will attract thousands of new people to the pictures, people who seldom, if ever, have gone before. The silent picture has appealed mainly to the eye, with the ear used more or less subconsciously to hear the incidental music. But the talking picture will appeal not only to the eye and ear, but also to the brain, to the intelligence.

"Of course, the adaptation must be made very carefully. That is essential so that, in the necessarily shorter version of the play, the beauties of the language may be retained. To do that it is necessary at times to eliminate many speeches for, while a stage production of a Shakespearean work may take two and one-half to three hours, the talking screen version may not run more than an hour and a half at most. Besides that, a screen version will play slower than on the stage. I should say that, in most of Shakespeare's works, it would be necessary to cut out at least 60 per cent of the dialogue, but this is atoned for by the photographic beauties that the camera can give.

"It will be found, in making these adaptations, that lines may be transposed, may be taken from one character and given to another, without in the least marring the work. At times it is necessary to eliminate characters; Shakespeare had so many. Shakespeare lovers of past generations, those of the times of Booth and Barrett, would have considered it desecration to cut the lines in a stage presentation, but when visualizing a scene for the camera much more liberty is permissible.

"The parenthetical lines, of which there are so many, and much of the philosophy may be taken out without danger. Great soliloquies should, of course, be spoken by the character to whom the playwright gave them, but lines which serve to carry on the story of the play can all be used and may be transposed with discretion.

"Take 'Julius Caesar,' for example. Of course, the orations of Antony and Brutus must be retained, but only enough of the conspiracy need be used to develop the story. It is the same with all the other works.

"Shakespeare's comedies are filled with situations and comic aspects which, with a very simple adaptation of the beautiful lines, with very slight transposition, carry the story along perfectly. There is hardly one of the comedies that will not make an entertaining talkie.

"In taking advantage of this greater freedom in the use of the text that the talking screen permits, the adapter need fear no exception by any commentator, for, if the work is properly done, all the charm of the play remains and only the extraneous and sometimes tiresome elements are eliminated. The talking picture has brought Shakespeare to the place where it can no longer be said that he is for the closet or the library.

"I do not believe, however, that the task of adapting, cutting and transposing any Shakespearean work should be entrusted to inexperienced hands. I think such work can be done properly only by those who have had long experience with the plays, and who will perform the work with reverence and discretion. The same applies to possible elimination of characters. The inexperienced person is hardly in a position to know what characters may be left out without injury to the story.

VOICES IMPORTANT

"Furthermore, I hope that, when Shakespearean screen productions are made, the producer, whoever he may be, will pay careful attention to the voices of his cast. The voices of those who play Shakespearean roles should be carefully trained. They should be pitched lower than ordinary voices, and they should contain the feeling that will bring out all the beauties of the incomparable dialogue. If these things can be done—and they can—the plays of Shakespeare will fit into the talking pictures like a hand into a glove."

It cannot be denied that, when he speaks of Shakespeare, John Craig knows what he is talking about. He has produced and played the works for years, his productions numbering at least twelve. He and Mrs. Craig (Mary Young) were the directors of the Craig Players, which they founded in 1908, and he was the lessee for twelve years of the Castle Square Theater in Boston.

It was John Craig who instigated the Harvard Prize Plays. Three of the six produced by the Craig Players were later bought by metropolitan producers. Henry Miller produced and played in "The End of the Bridge;" Miss Young was co-featured with John Barrymore in "Believe Me, Xantippe," and "Common Clay," the best-known of all the prize plays, was played in Boston by Mr. Craig and Miss Young for a year before John Mason and Jane Cowl played it another year on Broadway.

In addition to his work as a producer and actor, Mr. Craig has been instrumental in bringing to the screen many young players who have achieved success. Among those whom he trained are Alfred Lunt, Henry Hull, George Hassell, Juliette Day, Kenneth Hill and Florence Shirley.

This season, its first on a subscription basis, it carries 8000 names on the rolls and the indications are excellent for numerous additions.

The present position of the Yiddish Art Theater in the field of the theater international has been won by patient and self-sacrificing work on the part of its director who refused countless offers of larger remuneration if he would surrender his ideals. The theater's international reputation was confirmed five years ago when Mr. Schwartz took his company to triumphs in London and other capitals of Western Europe.

APPEARS AT MASON

Operating on the true repertory principle, the Yiddish Art Theater has made almost 100 productions in its eleven years, a large portion of which are kept in the active schedule each season. Many years of working together on the part of the permanent company have brought about a high standard of individual and ensemble acting which has led such a connoisseur of the arts as Otto H. Kahn and many of the leading dramatic critics in New York to compare its work with that of the world-famous Moscow Art Theater.

Schwartz brings to the Mason Theater eleven new plays in Yiddish, never given here before. Tonight, which marks the opening of the company's repertory, "Tevya, the Dairyman," a tragic-comedy by Sholom Aleichem, who has been called the Yiddish Mark Twain, will be presented.

Written and Mis-directed by ARTHUR MILLIER

As the last crash of the jazz orchestra blends perceptibly into the nasal twanging of our famous Hoovre-Tone synchronized canned music a modest slide is slid onto the sumptuous yellow curtains. It says:

THE "ART AND ARTISTS" PAGE OF THE LOS ANGELES TIMES BRINGS TO YOUR HOME THE BEST IN CURRENT ART CRITICISM. IT SCOURS THE WORLD FOR THE LATEST ART NEWS AND REPRODUCES NOTHING BUT MASTERPIECES. YOU NOT ONLY SEE THE GREAT MASTERPIECES OF THE WORLD, BUT ACTUALLY HEAR THEM!

Pause in which the yellow curtains quietly part, revealing green curtains. Then a second slide:

THE "ART AND ARTISTS" PAGE OF THE LOS ANGELES TIMES TAKES GREAT PLEASURE AT THIS TIME IN PRESENTING TO YOU THE ART WORLD REVUE OF 1929 WITH AN ASSEMBLAGE OF STELLAR ARTISTS, ART DEALERS, ART LOVERS, ART GOUGERS AND—LAST, BUT NOT LEAST—THE THREE HUNDRED MOST BEAUTIFUL ARTISTS' MODELS IN THE UNIVERSE.

Pause, in which the green curtains softly part, revealing silver curtains trimmed with old rose:

AND NOW, ASSURING YOU THAT WE HAVE SPARED NO EXPENSE TO MAKE THIS THE GREATEST PRODUCTION OF THE CENTURY, AND HOPING YOU WILL PAY YOUR SUBSCRIPTION PROMPTLY TO THE DEAR LITTLE BOY WHO SUPPORTS HIS AGED MOTHER BY DELIVERING THE TIMES TO YOUR DOOR, WE OFFER YOU THAT HALF-HOUR OF DAZZLING BEAUTY AND HILARIOUS COMEDY, THE ART WORLD REVUE OF 1929.

The Hoovre-Tone swells to a caterwaul, the silver and rose curtains melt away and on the screen is discovered the studio interior of a struggling artist. It is 100 feet high by 700 feet long and done in the style movie directors crisply call "modernistic." That is to say, the windows are cockeyed and there are seventeen wiggly staircases to the balcony. The artist is discovered dead center sweeping up the soundtracks of last night's party. He sings:

Despite my last night's stewing
A masterpiece is brewing
In my brain, brain, brain.
(Unseen chorus:)
In his brain, brain, brain.

If I had a lovely model,
Shape all curves and walk all waddle,
I could gain, gain, gain.
(U. C.:) He could gain, gain, gain.

But my temperament undoes me,
My model no longer loves me,
For I'm broke, broke, broke.
(U. C.:) For he's broke, broke, broke.

Though my pictures all are ringers,
Fame eludes mly faltering fingers,
So I'll croak, croak, croak.
(U. C.:) Yes, he'll croak, croak, croak.

Swallows a tube of white lead and collapeses on Kem Weber chaise-longue.

Enter chorus of 300 models wreathed in smiles:

Artists' models are we, are we,
Our figures are our fortunes;
But we lead a life of puritee
And in-cred-i-ble contortions.

We play our part in the cause of art,
Nothing upsets our apple cart,
We're impervious to Cupid's dart,
As we earn our meager portions.

Oh, artists' models are we, etc.

Close-up of two beautiful models posed as "The Wrestlers," with background of La Brea and Hollywood boulevards. The 300 smile-clad beauties parade past the pallid artist, kissing him lightly on the cheek in passing. He smiles faintly. Fade-out to—

ART DEALERS' ROW

This is an early-morning scene. A garbage wagon creaks by as perfume is wafted into the audience. Seventeen art dealers, each with a little round paunch and a broom, come out of seventeen art-gallery doors and commence sweeping off their sidewalks, singing:

Merry little art dealers, we, we, we,
Happy as a bunch of bugs,
Genuwine oil paintings by the yard
To match your chairs and rugs.

A spot of blue, ma'am, a dash of pink,
Buy this picture before you think,
Paintings for parlor, bed and sink,
Or to match your family tree . . .

Merry little art dealers, etc.

Enter seventeen customers with husbands and look at paintings in windows:

PICTURE FIGURES DISCLOSE MEN PLAYERS IN MAJORITY

The movies are a man's game. By a goodly margin. Figures assembled yesterday prove this. There are 260-odd players under contract at leading studios, and of these 150 are men. In exact ratio there are 58 per cent men and 42 per cent women working under regular engagements. A year ago the ratio was but little different. There were 55 per cent men and 45 per cent women.

Similarly there are just a few more than 2000 players listed for calls for bits and parts in the movies, who appear fairly regularly. Of these 1150 are men. The ratio in this instance is 57 per cent men, 43 per cent women.

Only on the bright star list—first magnitude players—do the women have any advantage. Here this rating is more nearly even, but even in that list the men have slightly the better of it.

It has often been said that scenario-writing was a woman's forte. Yet there are no indications to prove it. Four large studios today employ men exclusively in this department and in eight of the leading studios 128 men are engaged as writers and only twenty-nine women. The studio with greatest women representation is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Talkies have brought many more men than heretofore into the field of scenario writing, because playwrights are predominantly men.

There are virtually no women directors.

Evelyn Scott Describes Evolution of "The Wave," Literary Guild Choice for July

BY EVELYN SCOTT

I have a friend who, before putting pen to paper, or the two fingers employed in such labors upon the keys of the typewriter, has passed hours, weeks, even months in which all his spare time has been absorbed in preliminary meditation on the selected theme. My husband, too, writing slowly and evaluating each word set down, polishes as he goes, bringing each successive paragraph very nearly to perfection before commencing another.

My own methods may seem more extravagant of energy and good white paper, but they are, of course, the easiest for me. I cannot sit down and, without any preconceptions whatever, conjure "inspiration" from the ether; neither can I write books in my "head," without visible mark or signpost to show me my own contemplated direction. That special matter of direction has, for me, to be pretty well established before I begin. Once such a signal to follow has been chosen, however, the details by which I progress toward the end are as much my adventure in strange territory as they can be the reader's when he peruses the finished volume.

PLOT STRUGGLES

I began to write novels when I was 14. At that time, in several as yet unpublished works, I struggled with the then obligation to a plot—a structure defining the contemplated actions of the characters in the arbitrary fashion of a scaffolding for brick, concrete or stones. But there is an unexpectedness (to the author) in the development of personalities in fiction, and this naturalness of the creative impulse is often the destruction of those lines of action preconceived with the choice of a theme. Then comes the critical need for a selection. Organization is demanded if a work of art is to have more shapeliness than a pulpy mass. The stiff subedifice known as formal plot imposes something coffinlike on the living matter of emotion and intuition.

I believe that every work of art must have a clearly conceived intention of some sort, however; or the characters will surely run away with the supposed "story" and lead the poor man and his readers into some blind alley or other.

As I long ago rebelled against "plot," yet fought off yielding to the fragmentary style of writing which is the symptom of the same rebellion in some of my contemporaries, I was obliged to examine as closely as I might my own attitude in writing, discovering just what, for me, might be considered the goal of my efforts. I discovered that, though I abhor most of the aesthetic horrors embraced by the literature of pure propaganda, I could restrain my too omnivorous imagination and keep my manuscripts to a size something less than the Bible, only if, with each work, I enjoined myself to rigorous selection of subject matter by setting up before the work a kind of "text."

"THE NARROW-HOUSE"

With "The Narrow House," I kept myself to that aspect of life showing the family group persisting through fear—with its counterpart in ill-suppressed hatreds, hatreds that were involuntary, and almost conscience-covered by sentimentality. In "Escapade" I tried to draw my own portrait in my early twenties, excluding any special pleading in the light of my own later education to tolerance. I began the manuscript from which "The Wave" evolved without having selected any "text" whatever to specify my intention.

But the literal sense of spaces, and the sense of looking at another time as at a literal panorama persisted. I wanted to write an epic that had the advantages in presentation which are in a photoplay and something else which is not. Above all, besides the spacious scenery of a continent which was to be my "set," I wanted a crowd that was no abstract, but full of literal numbers in all their variety of individualization. Obviously, this was no story with a plot. Also, as obviously, with a text like: What is the essence of the epic? Or: View the history of America; I was in for at least a dozen volumes. I compromised by engaging my naturally visual mind in the description of a number of persons, from every walk of life, "caught," as it were, in the act of a response to that romantic urge which drives us toward promised lands where each shall find himself not a new country only, but a new being. That was "Migrations."

Then came the more catholic plan of "The Wave." Rationalize as you will about the disaster to the family in the next block, the glow of excitement which answers the signal of a holocaust is pleasurable. There is a kind of idiocy of the emotional nature which, though reason deny, will stake all on the grand gesture, even when by it disaster is foreordained. Warfare appears, to that primitive being but half asleep in the most civilized, the call to action in a cosmic drama where the actors are exalted for the time to the shape of beings free-willed and fit to move on such a stage. That which has been made too horribly real for one age is unimpressive theory for the next. The announcement of war has something of the air initiating the grande fete; if only because its atmosphere is strange, if only because it promises to turn our every-dayness topsy-turvy. And the mass of victims to this occasionally consoling but oftener life-wrecking fallacy is not to be represented by an abstract as mere "crowd," but as the original sum of individuals each with his unduplicatable response to the demand of his time.

The Civil War was not the theory of an event, but the aggregate of suffering, of happiness, of collapse before adversity in thousands of lives. It seemed to me as if, with the declaration of war a tide of circumstance, a great wave had flowed over the country, with compulsions to action so irresistible that even the most dominating spirits were borne in it or on it like drift.

With the crystallization, through actual writing, of that stimulus I had from the movies, my original tome of "notes" to the number of 1500 pages became three books, two of them now published, the third, to be finished when the spirit moves me, dealing with the "reconstruction period."

PICTURE MUSIC TREND VIEWED

New Significance Seen in Films Accompaniment

Studios Focus Attention on Permanent Choruses

Better Quality Predicted as Outcome of Movement

BY MURIEL BABCOCK

Music in the movies. These words are taking on an entirely new significance. "Music in the movies" now may mean anything from a mere orchestral accompaniment of a picture, the repeated singing of a theme song, to the interpolation of something akin to an excellent concert hall program.

One of the fine and interesting achievements of the future, it is predicted, will be the encompassing within films of entertainment, music of a quality which in the past has been heard only in the grand operahouse or in the symphony hall.

DEVELOPMENT INDICATED

A specific development in this connection is the sudden focusing of attention by several studios on the development of permanent singing choruses, similar in a small way to those attached to organizations such as the Chicago Opera Company or the Philadelphia Philharmonic Orchestra.

Fox studio, through Edward Royce, stage director, was one of the first to organize a singing group. Royce, seeking an ensemble for choral work in an Oscar Straus operetta, determined to get a group of trained voices, both women and men, and to give them such additional training and rehearsal work that when the picture in hand was completed the group would form a permanent nucleus for use in succeeding films.

Three weeks ago Warner Brothers, following completion of "Song of the West," placed under contract as a permanent studio chorus twenty men and twenty women who had been working under the direction of Ernest Gruney, a stage and musical director.

The chorus of forty mixed voices which Paramount used in "The Love Parade" was trained by Nathaniel Fineston. While the singers are not under contract, Fineston has placed them on what he calls his "first call" list and hopes eventually to develop them into a permanent singing group.

R-K-O. studio has recently engaged the Cimini grand opera chorus of eighty mixed and selected voices for three pictures. The group was organized by Pietro Cimini, operatic and symphonic conductor, who has been identified in the past with the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association and the Hollywood Bowl. It is now singing in "Rio Rita."

Speaking of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association, Merle Armitage hopes this fall to "sell" the association's chorus to the movies, after the annual season of opera is completed. This group has been known in the past as one of the finest operatic ensembles in the country, and from its ranks are selected singers for minor roles in opera productions.

PREFERRED SINGER LIST

The local Philharmonic Orchestra is contemplating the organization of a chorus to sing the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. It will be interesting to see if eventually this group goes into motion pictures.

Those studios which have not or-

PILGRIMAGE PLAY RESUMES

Production Portraying Life of Christ Will Begin Tenth Season Opening 22nd Inst.

The Pilgrimage Play will start on its tenth season the 22nd inst., portraying the life of Christ in twelve episodes. There have been 414 performances of the pageant given in the Pilgrimage Theater in Hollywood, a natural setting fashioned out in the hills.

Seven men, ranging from noted interpreters of tragic roles to comedians, have attempted the part of the Christ in the nine years of the play. Henry Herbert first portrayed the character for eight weeks in 1920, and again for six weeks in 1921. Reginald Pole, who was later to return several times for the role, finished the remaining time that year.

Herbert Grimwood essayed the part in 1922 and remained four weeks. Pole again stepped into the breach for the rest of the engagement.

COMEDIAN IN ROLE

A note of humor and yet at the same time tragedy crept into the production in 1923 when Ernest Lawford, long a popular comedian in New York, made his way west to take the part. Without knowledge of just what the interpretation required, Lawford nevertheless stepped into the character, and with the help of his loyal cast, gave a performance for the entire season that will be remembered as one of the finest, the most glowing and forceful ever to be seen.

Reginald Pole once again was brought back to take the role in 1924, and remained for the full eight weeks. William Faversham was seen for two weeks of 1925, and two men, Pole and William Raymond, brought the production to a close.

Ian Maclaren has portrayed the part of the Christ for the last three years, and will once again during the coming season.

A resume of the women who have presented the character of Mary Magdalene reveals the following:

Florence Stone originated the role in 1920 and returned twice for the part, once in 1924 and again in 1925. Gwendolyn Logan was cast for three weeks in 1921, and was followed by Bertha Fiske, who finished out the season.

Helen Freeman submitted her interpretation in 1922 and 1923. Jessie Arnold followed for the seventh season in 1926. Hedwiga Reicher was Mary Magdalene in 1927, and Mary Forbes, noted stage and screen actress, had the part in 1928. The role has not been filled as yet for the coming season.

A great demand for work in the Pilgrimage Play is made by bit players each year, statistics show. More than 500 calls have already been received by persons who desire to portray even the smallest part in the renowned pageant. Many actors, in fact, about 60 per cent, return year after year to take up the roles in which they originally started. There are about 125 persons in the cast, including about eighty-four speaking parts.

SECTIONAL REHEARSALS

A novel method of practice has been worked out for the production, in that group or sectional rehearsals are held. About two weeks are given each year to perfect participants in their lines. Phil Whiting, for eight years an assistant director to the late Garnet Holmes, will supervise the production this year.

Costumes for the event were brought by the late Christine Wetherill Stevenson from Jerusalem in 1921, and the originals are used now as models and will be placed in a special museum in the near future. Christine Wetherill Stevenson originally transcribed and produced the Pilgrimage Play.

An interesting note on the production is the fact that seventy-two floodlights are used to throw a powerful and piercing aurora of light on the hills surrounding the theater.

The Pilgrimage Play is an event of the Southland, in fact, of the entire country. It draws patronage from the nation and is a nonprofit organization. It is devoted solely to the presentation of the life of Christ.

MUSIC ENTHUSIASTS AWAIT BOWL OPENING

Most Successful Season Looked For; Many Artists Already Reach Los Angeles

Thousands of music lovers of the Southwest will fill the great terraces of seats at the Hollywood Bowl Tuesday night. Raymond Brite, the youngest manager in point of years to win his spurs, anticipating every emergency, clinching every arrangement in ample time, has had the Bowl season virtually ready to open, by a wholesale shifting ahead of dates and contracts, a whole month in advance.

MANY ALREADY HERE

Even a number of the principals are in the Southland, ready to go on, although in some cases their Bowl dates are weeks off, while Goossens reached the other rim of the continent Friday and Bruno Walter sailed from Boulogne yesterday for America and the Bowl.

Among the early arrivals is Bernardino Molinari, first of the triumvirate of renowned leaders to conduct here this summer. He arrived in a holiday mood on the Fourth.

This great Roman maestro is expected immediately to win the interest of that considerable proportion of music lovers who had no opportunity to make his acquaintance last year because of his brief engagement—and to win it not only by dint of superb musicianship, but because of the originality of his programs.

His very first offerings will impress that fact on his audience. He will bring to a hearing on Tuesday night a distinct novelty in bracketed excerpts from Mule's "Songs of Sicily," one of the numbers including a vocal passage which will be sung by Mme. Molinari. And, of course, he will repeat, as the filip of the initial program, the sensationally beautiful Respighi composition, "Pines of Rome," the direction of which last season won him an ovation.

PANAMANIAN ARRIVES

Alfred San-Malo, too, is here, first of two soloists who will make the initial week of the season doubly rich. Already this first musician of the tiny republic of Panama has stormed the city socially. A fervid reception by the local Latins on the night following his arrival last Monday direct from his native country, has been the signal for great social activity, with the youthful virtuoso of the violin as center and circumference of these amenities.

RUSSIAN FAVORITE

A surprise for music lovers is involved in making announcement of the second soloist of the initial week's double-value bargain in added attractions. Max Panteleieff, Russian baritone, who has been a coast favorite since his original appearances in America with Ina Bourskaia and the barnstorming Russian troup which landed at Portland in December of 1921 from a tour of the Orient and created a sensation, appears Friday night, inaugurating the special Friday night series of attractions, in place of Barre Hill. The serious indisposition of the latter has necessitated the cancellation of his entire summer schedule of recitals, General Manager Brite was informed by telegraph early in the week.

Panteleieff will sing the Prince Igor aria from the opera of that name and also the Prince Galitsky aria from the same score. It is likely that he will give his popular encore number, Moussorgsky's "Song of the Flea," and the beautiful "Vision Fugitive" from Massenet's "Herodiade."

Local Artists Score Success in Production

Maxine Carlo, coloratura soprano, protegee of Rosa St. Ember, who has been in Milano since last September where she is studying with Luisa Villani, has just returned to Milano from Pallanza, where she went to witness a performance of the "Barber of Seville," in which Georgia Starke of Los Angeles played the leading role.

"The principals in the entire performance were Californians and you cannot imagine how my heart swelled with pride when I heard them doing such fine work," declares the singer in a communication to friends here. "I am not exaggerating when I tell you that this performance would have done credit to any of our bigger opera companies of America. Ted Novice, tenor, Victor Vogel, bass, and Georgia Starke are all from Los Angeles and Mr. Jackson, baritone, is from San Francisco. They received excellent press notices in the newspapers and I am sure it should be a source of joy to you all at home to know that the California students here in Italy are really 'doing things.' Georgia Starke is doing some exceptionally fine work and has had six operatic engagements since May. This together with her concert appearances makes her very busy."

SOPRANO RESUMES ACTIVITY

Maybell Swartz, lyric soprano, is attracting attention by her singing to her own accompaniment. A recent program of hers drew favorable comment at a large musicale.

PANAMA SENDS VIOLIN VIRTUOSO

Alfredo San Malo is First Artist to Achieve Fame From the Small Republic

BY I. M. J.

Alfredo San Malo, the first Panamanian virtuoso to make an impression in Europe or America, will play in the Hollywood Bowl Thursday night. One is immediately aware of his patriotism upon meeting him. His youth is another surprising thing about him and he has the usual Latin good looks.

Senor San Malo and Senora, his young Panamanian wife, are at the Hollywood Plaza, having arrived a few days ahead of his performance with the orchestra in order to inspect the vast American amphitheater. Playing out-of-doors will be a distinct novelty for San Malo, he confesses, and he also remarked that the Bowl looked enormous to him.

The dark Central American violinist is shy but when he speaks it is in good English and charming with the Latin graciousness. He lets his wife, whose grandfather was American, speak for him and she is not so shy. Her animated face lights with enthusiasm when she discusses her native country. Senora San Malo is a singer but she carefully explains that she is not a public singer.

Busy Season Expected by Dance School

After a spring semester of unprecedented activity the Ernest Belcher School of Dancing is preparing for a summer of teachers' normal courses and special children's courses, according to an announcement by Mr. Belcher. One of the factors to which the increased attendance is attributed is the demand for finished dancers in the series of talkies dealing with theatrical life now under production at various film studios.

A demonstration recital took place on Friday evening in the Municipal Auditorium at Santa Monica, and was staged by the Santa Monica branch of Belcher's school. The program demonstrated the Belcher technique from the first steps of the primary grades to the dances of the finished prima ballerina.

PHILIP FRANK WINS FEDERATION PRIZE

News has recently been received by Mr. Lacy Coe of the Lacy Coe Violin School, 128 North Rampart Boulevard, the only former assistant of Prof. Leopold Auer now teaching in California, that his pupil, Philip Frank, won the National Federation of Music Clubs open contest for young artists last month in Boston, Mass., with a cash prize of $500 and numerous concert engagements under various federated clubs.

This contest was open to young artists from 20 to 32 years of age throughout the United States, and while Philip has not yet reached the age of 20, he was permitted to enter and contested against violinists all of whom were older than himself. It will be recalled that Philip Frank came with his teacher, Mr. Lacy Coe, to Los Angeles two years ago, when the latter transferred his teaching activities from New York to Los Angeles, and the favorable impression made here by young Frank in his appearances in the prologue to the "King of Kings" and elsewhere, at that time, are still remembered. Philip has also won a scholarship with Efrem Zimbalist in the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia for next season and he is hoping to spend the summer in Los Angeles under Mr. Coe's guidance, in preparation for his coming activities.

LISZT TRADITIONS CARRIED ON IN WEST

The summer class of the Los Angeles College of Music and Arts of the University of the West, under the direction of Arthur Friedheim, Liszt exponent, opens Monday, in the university studios, 808 South Broadway.

During the classes Dr. Friedheim will play many compositions from Bach to Liszt.

SCHOOLS ENGAGE GOULD DANCERS

There is a teacher of the Norma Gould dance method in almost every leading private school in this city.

Professional dancers will find rich material in the summer course designed for them and an opportunity to appear with Miss Gould in the Hollywood Bowl on August 30 when she will present the "Unfinished Symphony" by Schubert and Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker Suite" with the Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Redlands Bowl has re-engaged these popular dancers for August 2 when they will be assisted by the Mischa Gegna Trio.

The regular six-week summer course for children and the special women's classes will open tomorrow, while private work will continue throughout the summer.

CASELOTTI ON TRIP TO HIGH SIERRAS

Having concluded his fourth consecutive season of vocal work and opera coaching in Los Angeles, Guido Caselotti, Los Angeles vocal instructor, is now on a motor trip to Lake Tahoe and the high Sierras. He will reopen his studio in the Beaux Arts Building on the 8th inst., which begins his fifth consecutive teaching year in California.

His song costume recital, which will be given at the Municipal Auditorium in Long Beach, the 15th inst., will be one of the first attractions to be given by his pupils for this new teaching year, which marks Caselotti's twenty-fifth year of teaching.

SINGING STAR ARRIVES

The latest singing star to arrive on the Coast, who is a former student of Nettie Snyder, Hollywood vocal teacher, is Ann Greenway, who is now appearing with Harry Carroll in a song act over the Orpheum circuit, and who also has been signed by R.-K.-O. studios for work in the talkies.

Bowl Concerts Reviewed at Barker Bros.

In order that followers of the Hollywood Bowl concerts may have more enjoyment from the programs this season, Barker Brothers present a series of "Apreciation Programs" every Tuesday at 2:30 starting July 9 in Barker Brothers' auditorium. Miss Sarah Ellen Barnes, pianist and lecturer, will give a brief resume of the music that will be played at the bowl during the following week.

The points will be made by musical illustrations from he scores. Visiting and resident musicians will appear at these Tuesday afternoon programs to assist Miss Barnes. There will be eight programs, Tuesdays at 2:30, the 9th, 16th, 23rd, 30th inst., August 6, 13, 20, 27.

MUSIC TEACHING BEING REFORMED

Evelyn Fletcher-Copp

For the last thirty years the problem of music teaching has undergone a reformation which has resulted not only in an entirely new plan of attack, or presentation, but which has little by little changed the orthodox or general motive for studying music.

The one who has done much in that direction, especially in teaching children, is Mrs. Evelyn Fletcher-Copp, who has originated a method of teaching children which has been universally accepted both here and abroad. To give this method a wider field in California a public lecture will be given by Mrs. Copp at the Zoellner Conservatory on Tuesday evening. The Fletcher-Copp method is used at the Zoellner Conservatory under the direction of Mrs. Johanna Furman, who at one time was an assistant to Mrs. Copp in Boston.

YOUTHFUL ARTISTS TO BE SE

Prize Winners of New York Music Contests Famous Musicians for Place in the Recordi at the Invitation of Phonograph Compa

BY ISABEL MORSE JONES

The tribute to youth which the Victor Phonograph Company makes this month, is a gracious gesture. Two of the national prize winners of the talked about Schubert Memorial contest, Sada Shuchari and Muriel Kerr, are well presented and Isabelle Yalkovsky who suggests a young prodigy, completes the trio of young unknown performers whom Victor introduces.

Sada Shuchari is a violinist of undoubted talent and showmanship, but not yet mature enough for our enthusiasm. Her Melodie Arabe arranged by Kochanski from a Glazounow, a number, has a quality of tone on the lower strings that is arresting, but the other side of the record setting forth the Sicilienne and Rigaudon of Kreisler has been badly coached. The Sicilienne is moronic in its deliberate precision and the Rigaudon is taken so fast that it becomes an unshapely tussle with the pianist.

Muriel Kerr, the young pianist, creates quite a different effect with her first record. She plays Scriabine's C minor and D flat major preludes, with delightful poise and contrast and succeeds in registering an unseen personality that is a most interesting. Scriabine records well and these preludes are a happy choice of the neo-romanticist's music.

Isabelle Yalkovsky has not been press-agented and so one may use imagination in padding out the impression she makes with her record of Chopinesque Godowsky waltz, Alt-Wien, and the Debussy prelude in A Major. This lovely dance of Godowsky is done with charming freedom and rhythmical exactitude and the Debussy has an original interpretation in more robust mood than he is usually given. Yalkovsky is obviously a New Yorker by her playing and not innocent of an intruding exploitation of her own technical facility.

Richard Crooks is another young musician chosen by Victor this month, but is by no means making a recording debut. His "Moonbeams" and "I'm Falling in Love with Someone" will be of particular interest to those at the "age of lovers" but they can also be enjoyed fully by the more critical, because of the ease and luscious tone which characterise his singing. Victor has provided a well balanced stringed orchestra accompaniment.

The First Half of the New Week Promises Variety in the Way of Arriving Talking Photoplays, Specifically at Warner's and the United Artists

At the playhouse in Hollywood devoted to Vitaphone Pictures, the Warner Brothers will proffer their version of the stage play known as "The Gamblers." In the cast are H. B. Warner and Lois Wilson, who have been sketched by Staff Artist A. L. Ewing in the row above. However, the gentleman with whom Miss Wilson is dancing is not Mr. Warner, but Mr. Jason Robards, also of the cast. They may all be seen tomorrow. "This Is Heaven," a production from the studio of the infrequently represented Samuel Goldwyn, goes into the United Artists Theater on Wednesday. The exquisite Vilma Banky, starring as an immigrant girl, is pictured in the lower row with James Hall, her leading man, and Lucien Littlefield, the character actor.

LAUGH BUSINESS SERIOUS

Jack Benny, Gentleman of Comics, Explains How Brands of Merriment Differ

BY PHILIP K. SCHEUER

Nice Nellie would refer to him as John Benjamin, but he is and always will be Jack Benny to most of us. He is in, as those who know their vaudeville will testify, the business of laughs—and a mighty serious one it is. A gentleman to his fingertips, Jack Benny must remain ever a stranger to the bawdy, the vulgar, the slapstick; he and a custard pie must never meet.

But what, interrupts the dissenter fresh from an evening at "The Hollywood Revue" in Grauman's Chinese Theater, where Jack Benny officiates as a shadow master of ceremonies—what about the so-delectable birthday cake which descends with such unerring aim on the impeccable brow of this same Mr. Benny? A custard pie by any other name is still as squidgy!

The answer is significant. Pie or cake, the basis of the situation, or "gag," lies—not in the generous and indiscriminate spread of dough and icing over the dignified features of Mr. Benny, but in the fact that the gentleman rises superior to the calamity and, with no loss of aplomb or change of expression, proceeds to announce the next act on the program! In the industry they would call it "topping a gag;" the discerning person will recognize

"As we were leaving the ring one of the large white horses used in the production stepped on Norton's foot, and to climax the whole thing, when Barry turned around after finally convincing the horse that his foot was no footstool, the fool animal kicked him clear out of the ring. Another trophy of the chase—so we were even."

VANUDEVILLE TRAINING

Charles Morton, whose real name is not Morton, but Mudge, started his career at 7 years of age in vaudeville with his parents. His only regret about his education in prep school and college is that he didn't have time to play enough football. He would seriously consider a nice part in a football story, and wouldn't consider his neck, or the preservation thereof.

He has completed a leading role in "Christina," which will be exhibited soon, and portrays a character in a street carnival. The atmosphere is somewhat similar to that of the circus picture, but with no trapezes, a fact that caused the young man quite a bit of pleasure.

With the size of a good fullback on any gridiron, Morton has the nature of a care-free schoolboy, out for plenty of mischief. His speed tags are his chief hindrance to a well-ordered career. And he is also a native son. Ask him about it—and watch him beam.

WRITING LIBRETTO

Guy Bolton, musical-comedy author, is writing the libretto for "The Love Parade," soon to go into production at the Paramount studios in Hollywood under the direction of Ernst Lubitsch. Maurice Chevalier will be starred.

COMEDY OF LOVE COMES TO MAJESTIC

Sylvia Field Featured in Cast; Horton Leaves for Vacation Trip

Amelia Rives's and Gilbert Emery's comedy "Love-In a Mist" will be the next dramatic offering at the Majestic Theater, it is announced by W. D. Horton, producer.

Tuesday night has been set for the opening of the new show, in which Sylvia Field will be featured. The playhouse will be dark today and tomorrow in preparation for the opening.

"Love-In-a-Mist" tells the story of a southern girl who is so fearful of hurting those she loves that she lies about the little realities of life which might affect their happiness. That storied region, the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia, is fittingly the setting for the whimsical enchantment of the play.

Edward Everett Horton will not play in the new production and will leave almost immediately for his annual vacation. The beginning of the holiday will mark the end of one of the most successful years in Horton's career as an actor and producer.

Director Bars Noisy Shoes in Talkie Scene

Deauvilles, hot-weather sandals, are taboo as footgear at the Pathe studio because of an incident which occurred during the filming of "Her Private Affairs," an all-dialogue picture featuring Ann Harding which Paul Stein is directing.

Several extras were required to walk through a scene in which Miss Harding was conversing with Kay Hammond, who plays an important role in this talkie.

"N. G. for sound," one of the engineers informed Director Stein at the conclusion of the first "take." "There's a certain squeak somewhere which, when picked up by the microphone, gives a very annoying undertone to the voices."

Various experiments were made but the undesirable sound continued. Every one was almost reduced to despair when Miss Harding noticed that the squeak was especially pronounced whenever a certain one of the extra players walked close to her. She looked at the girl's feet and saw that she was wearing a pair of sandals.

"Get this girl a different pair of shoes from the wardrobe, and your trouble will be over," she advised Stein. Results proved the actress was right.

CUGAT IN TALKIES

Xavier Cugat, violinist and cartoonist, attracting attention in Hollywood, heads the Spanish division of the natural-tone recording here. He will produce talkies for the Mexican and South American theaters and is also writing music for Warner Brothers' "Under a Texas Moon."

REVUE FUTURE IS PROBLEM

Novelty Aids Present Features, But What Will Come After? Ziegfeld Vista Bright, Avers Goldwyn

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT

THERE are those who say it will score. And there are those who say it won't. What's the answer . . . for the film revue?

My own idea is that the real revue hasn't been made yet for the screen. There is too much of a stage slant to all those which have been produced. There is a possibility that just around the corner lies the real girl-music-mirth show a la cinema.

The only revue that is a revue at all is the one that emblazons the name of "Hollywood," currently showing. But even that hasn't broken sufficiently with stage conventions. It is a hit, gauged by box-office receipts, but novelty counts a lot in that. I don't believe another revue of the same sort would thrive unless it were decidedly more motion picturesque. The comedy especially in this sort of show needs building up. Pictorial fluency, though, is the supreme thing. It has only been partly attained.

THIS leads, if not very directly, to what may be done by Flo Ziegfeld, in collaboration with Samuel Goldwyn on the screen. Ziegfeld, by the way, is coming out here a couple of weeks hence to look things over, according to Goldwyn. It will be chiefly a vacation trip. The real operations are to start early next year.

Ziegfeld's entrance into the movie revue puts a sort of authentication on it. That ought to silence the sceptics. Ziegfeld is not the sort to leave a good thing like the Follies to enter an entirely new game unless he feels that it has a chance for an especially brilliant success.

MR. GOLDWYN informs me that the initial plunge is to be taken in color. "That is absolutely necessary, but it will have to be color used in an entirely different way than heretofore," he said. "I gained my inspiration when I saw Mr. Ziegfeld's show 'Whoopee' in the East. It was the Grand Canyon stage setting in this production that most impressed me, with the marvelous costumes worn by the chorus.

The blending of color was so amazing that I called Ziegfeld on the phone that evening to compliment him on the production. The next day we met at lunch and we were together from then until 4 a.m. That was when the partnership between us was settled. It grew out of the spectacular possibilities that Ziegfeld's 'Whoopee' presented, and the fact that I found him personally interested in sound films."

"WHEN we enter on this production it will be on an entirely new plan," Goldwyn continued. "We will have the best musical and comedy talent to assist in making the feature, and it will be fashioned as a motion picture throughout. It will demand a huge outlay, needless to say for in personnel and scenically it will represent the very finest.

Mr. Ziegeld has nevery previously done anything in pictures, and he is enormously interested now. He will be an active spirit in this undertaking, spending all of his time here during the making of the revue. What has caught his fancy especially, are the possibilities for bringing to the public in America generally, such shows

BROADWAY MAY GREET H. B. WARNER IN PLAY

H. B. Warner is toying with the idea of appearing in a new play on the New York stage this fall.

He had a telegram recently from George Tyler, producer with whose productions he has been identified in the past, asking if his services would be available along about September.

Warner replied that they would and that he would like to do something on the stage again.

"Of course," he remarks, "an engagement depends upon how soon I can fulfill a present contract with Warner Brothers. I have two more pictures to appear in, but when those are completed I think I will be free. If the play is suitable material—I don't even know its name at this moment or by whom it is written—I think it would be an excellent thing to do. If it is a success it would be good talking-picture material and would bring me right back to California where I like to be most of all."

It was a play, "Silence," that brought Warner to Hollywood. Now it seems as if it will be a play that will take him back to his familiar haunts in New York.

One of the early screen favorites, Warner left pictures for quite a period. Some three years ago, the actor was engaged by Cecil B. De Mille to portray on the screen a drama in which he had been appearing in the East—"Silence." When it was finished Warner remained to portray the Christ in "The Kings of Kings," spectacular biblical production. He has been in the movies ever since.

With the advent of talking pictures, he has become one of the busiest actors on the Coast.

"I don't know exactly how many talkies I have been in," he comments, "eight or nine, I think. Some of them are so much alike that it is hard to distinguish them in my mind.

"They are getting more individuality now as the microphone is becoming easier to handle. For example, at first one couldn't whisper into the 'mike' and have the sound reproduced with any degree of reality. And at first, directors insisted that one talk, not naturally and easily as in life, but meticulously, syllable by syllable. Of course, the scenes were terrible. They dragged. There was no attempt at tempo.

"An excellent example of improvement in this line is a scene in 'The Trial of Mary Dugan,' played by Norma Shearer and myself. This moved rapidly and continuously for eight minutes and fifteen seconds through 1000 feet of film. That's the longest continuous piece of film that has been 'shot' in the talkies."

Warner is seen in "The Gamblers," beginning tomorrow at Warner Brothers Theater. He goes on location this week to Huntington Lake as a member of the cast of "Tiger Rose," Willard Mack's play in which Lenore Ulric appeared for David Belasco in the East. Another of his recent pictures for Warner's was "The Argyle Case" with Thomas Meighan.

FIRST NIGHTS GAIN GLAMOUR

Local Play Openings as Exciting as in East—So Many Celebrities, Helen Hayes Finds

BY ALMA WHITAKER

For all that she has been impersonating "Coquette" for eighty-five weeks without a vacation, Helen Hayes says that the opening night in Los Angeles at the Belasco Theater made her as excited and nervous as a veritable tyro.

You see, it was that house, full of famous picture celebrities and stage nabobs which only Los Angeles can muster these days, which caused the tumultuous emotions, so that it was a very tired little lady whom I interviewed next day when the reaction had set in.

"Of course, I couldn't very well 'live' the part," smiles Helen, "but I do feel it intensely. I love the role . . . you see, I really created her. Wasn't it sweet and gracious of Mary Pickford to send me these charming flowers and a dear little note for the opening? I feel a sort of affinity with Mary, for I have played so many of the roles on the stage which she has later played in pictures . . . Lord Fauntleroy, Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, Pollyanna, as well as Coquette . . .

"Then, too, she is now to be Katherine in 'The Taming of the Shrew,' the only one of Shakespeare's characters I have always wanted to play. I envy her that."

"How do you feel about talking

CELEBRITIES TO WITNESS MAYAN PLAY

Premier Offering of Drama Expected to Draw Brilliant First-Night Audience

Tomorrow a brilliant first-night audience, composed mainly of those in the stage and cinema professions, will turn out to greet the premier performance of "Top o' the Hill" at the Mayan Theater, Los Angeles' entrant for Broadway laurels in the fall, co-starring two popular Manhattan stars—Helen Menken and William Boyd.

"Top o' the Hill" has been in process of staging for six weeks under the guidance of Felix Young, who has chosen it as his second west coast theatrical venture. To give his property a better than average advantage, the Los Angeles producer "imported" Miss Menken and Boyd as the principals and surrounded them with a bright group of Broadway talent. Hilda Vaughn and Anderson Lawler, featured players in their own right, share the main supporting parts, and other players include Kate Campbell, John Webb Dillion, Ida Darling, Jean Temple and Russell Morrison.

"Top o' the Hill" is the creation of Charles A. Kenyon, author of "Kindling," a brilliant success several seasons ago, and is described as a powerful drama of a girl's unrequited love with San Francisco's "red light" district as its locale. In frankness of theme and tensity of action, Young declares "Top o' the Hill" contains a depth of dramatic effectiveness greater than "Rain," "An American Tragedy" or "Madame X." Miss Menken's characterization is a slight departure from her role in "Congai," last season's vehicle, but comes closer to "Seventh Heaven," her triumph. The character portrayed by Boyd approaches his original creation of the sergeant in "What Price Glory."

"Top o' the Hill" will be transferred to a New York theater after a limited engagement here. Last year Young took "The Marriage Bed," his first Los Angeles introduction, east for a successful run.

Grand Opera Soon May Be Street Songs

Will they start "plugging" grand opera arias

"Why not?" says Renaud Hoffman.

Hoffman directed "The Climax," the most recent of the important Universal musical-dialogue productions. In it the heroine is an opera singer, and the principal characters are musicians of the highest type.

In "The Climax" several melodies of grand opera are sung by Kathryn Crawford. Hoffman believes that because she sings them so well, and because their rhythms and tunes are so "catching" the general public will be singing grand opera as unconsciously and as easily as it does the so-called popular songs.

REVUE SKIES RED WITH WAR

Ziegfeld and Carroll Tilt Over Eddie Cantor

Comic Acts in "Whoopee" for One Gentleman

And Proceeds to Whoop it Up for Other

BY PERCY HAMMOND

NEW YORK, July 6.—Broadway's revue skies are reddened with the angry tints of a civil war between Mr. Ziegfeld and Mr. Earl Carroll. The cause of the shindy is Mr. Eddie Cantor, who, while working for Mr. Ziegfeld in "Whoopee," composed a libretto for Mr. Carroll's "Sketch Book" and is now appearing in it via the Photophone. Reluctant to share Mr. Cantor's genius with a brother showman, Mr. Ziegfeld leaps gently at Mr. Carroll's throat and scolds him for that most heinous of the seven deadly crimes, an infraction of Broadway ethics.

Meantime, the impish Mr. Cantor enjoys himself as he surveys the ruction. A philanthropist rather than a comedian, he delights in extending his beneficent offices as far as possible. It pleases him to be able to do good in two theaters instead of one, and he grins at Mr. Ziegfeld's discomfiture, knowing that it is necessary to the Broadway weal.

I suspect that his heart beats more rapidly for Mr. Carroll than for Mr. Ziegfeld. The "Sketch Book" is Mr. Cantor's own, and in it he can "express himself," as they say in the art schools, both as author and actor. It gives his talents fuller play, besides tripling his income taxes with little, if any, exertion. Mr. Ziegfeld's advertisements of "Whoopee" announce that "Eddie Cantor will not appear at any other theater." But he does appear in Mr. Carroll's "Sketch Book," and you can see and hear him as he sings the play's theme song, a ballad of his own chaste composition entitled "Legs, Legs, Legs."

SHOTS AIMED

The function of a revue, it is said, is to fire at the follies as they fly. In its best manner it is as Will Rogers is—a sharp-shooter, hitting if not wounding the stuffed shirts of art and statesmanship. Mr. Cantor's "Sketch Book" is not interested in satyrising Dawes, Whalen, Jimmy Walker, such Senators as Heflin and Pat Harrison, or such Representatives as Nicholas Longworth or Mrs. Ruth Mark Hanna McCormick. The "Sketch Book" devotes its honest ironies to making fun of sex.

It must be said for Mr. Carroll that as a tailor he is excellent. He knows how to bare the female shape without making the anatomy of his subjects a clinic. He can punctuate a naked chorus girl with transparent commas, explaining her figure from glands to muscles. The Carroll women, I think, are as pretty a harem as ever swarmed over a Times Square revue. Confident of their physical charms, they show them off enthusiastically, winning thereby the Drama's blue ribbon for what is known in the doctor books as exhibitionism.

Mr. Cantor's part in the "Sketch Book" is mischievous. His fleet "black-out" sketches, illustrating the infidelities of the females to the males, almost convinces one that matrimony is but a subterfuge. Mr. Cantor once threatened me with a suit for libel because I had hinted that he was a family man, dedicated to the suburban virtues, and he was angered when I thought that some of his public jokes were not of a kind he would tell to his wife and kiddies.

BIG AND BEAUTIFUL

Mr. Cantor's "Sketch Book" libretto is smart at times in its laughing at infidelity and the social evil. It is a big and beautiful sex show, full of performances a

NAME BELIES LOOKS, ACTING

From Lucile Nikolas Comes Amusing Ingenue of "Big Pond;" Role Created in East

Lucile Nikolas! Her name looks Russian, she looks English and every night she is the typical American daughter of a typical American father. She does it for the good of "The Big Pond," which is located near the end of Vine street in the Hollywood Playhouse.

The character of Barbara Billings brought her west, for she created her in New York. The character of Barbara makes farce comedy and fits in nicely with the trend of the play. For Lucile it is more recreation than work. The humor she finds in Barbara adds a zest to her own spirit.

"She is a funny little thing, light, amusing, yet not quite real. Some of her speeches simply feed the plot and that's all. She is like that, too, a tool for the play rather than an individual. But only in spots. At all times she is a complex creature; not wholly an ingenue. Her moods constantly vary and drift at moments into the subtlest of satire."

VERSATILITY HELPFUL

Aspirations to become a director were silenced when Stuart Walker offered her a part "to fill in time." A few years, and he turned out a versatile actress. That is what Miss Nikolas is most grateful for—her versatility.

Her two favorite plays are "Liliom," in which she played Julienne, and "The Man Who Came Back," in which she seems to have done the entire cast of feminine characters and principally "the dope fiend."

"That was the only time I ever had a chance to play a 'low character.' We burlesqued it all over the place. It's one of the few things I've really enjoyed doing. Oh, not that I don't enjoy most of them, but I always have a feeling there is something I want to do and can't. Take Lily Damita in 'The Bridge of San Luis Rey,' a glorious tempest, and the superb performance Jeanne Eagels gave in 'The Letter.' Inside of me I'd like to be like that, dynamic, electric, but I'm not the type. The things I can do are so different."

Foreign characters receive a warm reception from Lucile. She loves them, dialect and all.

"It's queer, but I pass for so many nationalities from Welsh to Russian. It is so much fun to do foreign roles. They have such life, such variety. The people, too—their emotions are so wholehearted and spontaneous. To me the Sacha Guitrys are the finest examples of foreign artistry."

FOREIGNERS ADMIRED

The arrival of any eastern stage star is now synonomous with a film contract. Miss Nikolas, however, has not thought of working in pictures, though she is tremendously interested in them. Perhaps most of all because of the opportunity they hold to create the unusual. A corresponding field she finds in the community theater.

"The purest drama is in the art groups. The commercial theater avoids drastic novelty. It is too dangerous a venture, almost sure loss. Art theaters cater to that and have done wonders toward the progression of the drama and the entrance of new ideas. New York, I think, is more willing to accept the art play than you are out here. The West demands entertainment, not sophistication. There is 'Serena Blandish,' marvelous satire, yet way over the heads of an average audience."

Not temperamental, Lucile Nikolas is yet blessed with the temperament of the artist. In studying a part she cannot create mentally. Therefore, she makes herself a blank and waits for the feeling of the role to come to her. Where it comes from she doesn't know, but it has never failed her. Sometimes she is in the dark throughout all rehearsals. Opening night she goes on not knowing just what she will do. Arrives the muse at the last moment, and Lucile will act the part for virtually the first time.

Whether she will remain to do another play for Mr. Duffy or return to New York is not certain. Perhaps her dynamic inner-self will be discovered and signed up by some motion-picture magnate and she will be kept busy here expressing it.

START MADE WITH ROLE AS VAMPIRE

Kay Francis With Films as Slithery Siren on Paramount Contract

The luck of the Irish has been with Kay Francis all her life. It has put her in the way of one lucky break after another. All Kay has to do is take what comes. She never has to seek.

Her best friend is the number thirteen. Born on Friday the thirteenth in the thirteenth month of her mother's marriage, the combination, for her, has proved an ideal influence.

Miss Francis made her screen debut in "Gentlemen of the Press." She vamped the gentlemen so thoroughly that she has been vamping ever since for Paramount. How she does it may be seen in "Dangerous Curves" at the Paramount Theater. In this she competes her brunette distinctiveness against Clara Bow's flying, flaming tresses.

It is only her second picture and already she has progressed a step higher. Her vamping is done on a higher plane: thirty feet higher, indeed, for it is poised on a wire at the top of a tent that Kay does some of her most dangerous work.

Out of business hours Miss Francis is a far cry from the slithery siren. "I haven't much of a part in 'Dangerous Curves,' that is, as it stands now. I happened to be in many of the scenes which were cut. But I enjoyed doing it a lot. You see, it is a circus story and the principal set is the big tent. I have always cherished a secret yearning to fly around on a trapeze, but being a tight-rope walker was almost as good. Excitement ran high when we'd climb up the swinging ladders. In one corner the bands were outdoing themselves and an audience cheered loudly from another."

Kay's first lucky break of real importance was her advent into a stage career three years ago. She had never thought of following the profession, but with her decision came immediate opportunity. "I simply made up my mind one day to be an actress. The next, I asked a friend of mine for a job. That was fine with him; I should be an extra. That wasn't so good with me. I wanted a part. I told the manager so. He hesitated, then wondered if I could do the Queen Mother in Basil Sidney's modern version of 'Hamlet.' I couldn't let that stop me, so replied, 'The Queen Mother? Why, naturally. I played it as a child.'"

From then on Kay was an actress; played for awhile with Stuart Walker, then on to Broadway. She had just completed a six-months' run in "Elmer the Great" when she had another lucky day. Paramount's Long Island studio signed her up for "Gentlemen of the Press." Now, "the best dressed woman in New York" is a confirmed convert to the screen.

"I'd like to make a name for myself in pictures. At present, of course, they are strange to me. So much I do wrong. For instance, I can never remember the camera and before I know it I have gotten dramatic and turned the back of my head to it.

"One thing, I don't want to play vampires all my life. One should have an ambition, I suppose, and if I have any, it is to be a second Katherine Cornell. Play roles like hers, interesting women who have many sides to their characters."

Kay has never played in a silent picture. Her experience with the talkies has taught her one big need. "Some directors don't agree with me, others do, but I think we should have many more rehearsals before the actual 'take.' On the stage they are necessary, why not on the screen? No matter how often you go over your lines, whether you are letter perfect or not, it is the playing with someone else that counts. Their reactions inspire yours and in that way you can 'build' a scene."

The off-screen personality of this new Paramount feature player is athletic rather than exotic. Her secret of success—and she has one despite the lucky streak—is simple and sane, "Use your sense of humor. Work hard while you're working, but don't take your art so seriously that you think it will die out when you disappear."

LAUGHS MATTER OF BUSINESS

it as the mark of the true comic artist.

"The moviegoer," Mr. Benny comments, "is still an unguessable quantity. We who have learned to gauge our abilities to amuse by the known quantity of response in an audience, are finding it difficult to set a standard for laughter in the talkies. I have noted the reactions of a professional gathering, at the premiere of 'The Hollywood Revue,' and of the typical crowd of merrymakers that attends a midnight show. They are not alike, but still they bear more resemblance to one another than they do to what is known as an 'average audience.'

"Yet it is this average audience to which we must play. My best lines, I am frank to admit, are lost in the revue. This is not our fault or the audience's; it is just a lesson by which we must profit. The first-nighters caught more of the wisecracks because they were trained by experience to listen quickly for them—and not, as you may suppose, because they were necessarily more critical or harder to please.

"Let us go into it further: The average spectator, I am told, breaks into hearty laughter when William Haines expresses his delight at meeting me by ripping off my collar. Instead of diminishing, the laughter increases as Haines tears the buttons from my coat one by one. This is a reaction natural in the man educated to the pantomime of the films; but by giving way to it he completely misses the accompanying dialogue, which is the basis of the humor we intend to convey. To wit:

"Haines, as he attacks each button, prefaces the act with the remark, 'I saw you in Detroit,' 'I saw you in Chicago,' and so on—with a button for each city. He leaves me, you will remember, one button; and this, after a suitable pause, I jerk loose myself, with the dry comment, 'You forgot Minneapolis.'

"Timing, it is probable, would have extracted the full humor from the situation so that everyone could appreciate it; and still it might not have. That is something that only experience will teach; the moviegoer may be as unwilling to accept the formula of the theater a year from now as he is today. Who knows?"

HOUSEWIVES MISSED

The greatest loss to a "personality comedian" of Mr. Benny's caliber, on the screen, is the power to improvise speeches, or "ad lib." He relates, for example, that a matinee audience at the varieties always includes enough of that large class known as housewives to make a comment like, "I'll bet there are plenty of sinks filled with unwashed dishes this afternoon" surefire, in the parlance. In the same manner, a comical reference to a preceding act on the bill, particularly one which has "gone over big," never fails to elicit laughter.

"A reference of this kind, or the mention of any current news topic," Mr. Benny explains, "establishes an intangible bond with an audience, which senses—or believes it senses—that, the reference being impromptu, one's entire monologue must be!

"Still, in a talking film, one has the satisfaction of knowing that one's performance will be as fresh and amusing the five-thousandth time as the first. Provided," he added, with a twinkle "that it is any good the first time.

"So both mediums have their advantages."

Mr. Benny speaks of the differing methods employed by other comedians. Al Jolson, he says, possesses the gift of making his auditor believe in him utterly. Ken Murray has a glib tongue and—this failing—can resort to slapstick for a laugh. Olsen and Johnson, though unfunny themselves, use the elements of surprise and incongruity in staccato order successfully. The extremely garrulous Joe Cook and Julius Tannen pour forth unconnected nonsense in perfect seriousness. And Robert Benchley and Donald Ogden Stewart represent the average fellow in what is usually called a tough spot.

"For myself," Mr. Benny confesses, "I am definitely committed to the sort of thing I am doing now. I have been in vaudeville and revues for seven years; it was not until I first tried acting as a master of ceremonies, three years ago, that I varied my monologue at all. I didn't dare; I was too frightened!

"Curious, isn't it, that my chief stock in trade is my nonchalance, when really I am so timorous? I have never been able to overcome it; I bemoan the inadequacy of my powers of speech, and the microphones certainly do not encourage it. I shall be glad to get back on the stage again, if only for a while. I feel the need of that human response—and badly."

STAGE PLAYERS MUST "UNLEARN" MANY LINES

The stage player coming to talking pictures and reviving a role played on the stage has harder work "unlearning" lines than learning them, according to Margaret Wycherly, New York stage star. Miss Wycherly is playing the role of Rosalie La Grange, which she created on the New York stage, in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's talking production of "The Thirteenth Chair," under the direction of Tod Browning.

"Every change in lines," she said, "requires special study because, of course, the old lines of the stage version keep coming back, and one has to be constantly on guard against them."

Cyril Chadwick in the same play finds the same fact is noticeable to him, and that he has to specially study changed lines to teach himself to forget the originals, which are likely to crop out by habit.

The new picture is a mystery story of India. Conrad Nagel, Leila Hyams, Bela Lugosi, Mary Forbes, Moon Carroll, Helene Millard and others of note are among the players.

HENRY OTTO RETURNS

William J. Craft, now directing "No, No, Napoleon," his second Reginald Denny picture for Universal, is responsible for the return to the screen of one of its best-known personages. Several years ago Henry Otto was noted as a director, having made many of Fox's productions. He dropped from sight for a while, until Bill Craft, meeting him recently, persuaded him to play an important role in the new Denny picture.

TED LEWIS SCORES IN BLUES SONG

Orpheum Theater Features Entertainer and Musical Numbers This Week

"The High-Hatted Tragedian of Song, and His Band of Musical Klowns." That title means Ted Lewis and his company of sterling entertainers are appearing at the Orpheum this week.

Qualities of the high-sounding title are declared true characteristics of Lewis, himself. Not that Lewis completely dominates the act or keeps his players in the shade, but rather that his spirit creates a new element out of such ingredients as himself, associates, musical score and setting.

Lewis sings a "blues" song on a stage illuminated only by a dim blue light. He talks it in moans, pauses, sobs and broken laughs. A hush suddenly falls and is routed by a strident outcry from the whole band jazzing at its loudest and wildest.

Ted Lewis's style results, it is said, from the combination of musicianship, showmanship and extensive experience in "show business." As a lad of 15, he came out of the Middle West—Circleville, O.—to rise in ten years to a position of prominence. Recently he completed his first talkie, "Is Everybody Happy," at Warner Brothers studios.

With Lewis at the Orpheum are Herb Williams, Lottice Howell, Maurice Colleano and others.

Minstrels Play for Pasadenans

"Gentleman, be Seated," an old-fashioned minstrel show with a new range stretching from Harlem to the Mardi Gras, opens at the Pasadena Playhouse on Tuesday.

In it Patharane Edson, with the Marchon brothers, Jai and Miles, in the "Danse Calinda" offers a bit of New Orleans during the Mardi Gras. This pantomime was arranged by Ridgley Torrence.

The usual "black circle" will rattle the bones with Norval Mitchell as interlocutor, and John Duncan and Joseph Sauers as end men.

No modern minstrel show would be complete without Octavus Roy Cohen. His "Melancholy Dame" will "strut her stuff." The cast includes Earl Eby as Webster Dill, the gargantuan piano player, wearing the largest dress suit in captivity; Katharane Edson as Mrs. Sapho Dill, the woman in the case; Jeane Wood, daughter of Sam Wood, motion-picture director, playing the jealous wife, Jonquil Williams; Harold Minjir of Hollywood as her husband; Permanent Williams, the sad preprietor of the dance-jamseria.

report of which would bar this gazette from the United States mails.

In the "Sketch Book" you can suffer with Mr. Will Mahoney, for instance, as he goes through his dull and gymnasium antics as the leading comedian. He is funniest in that episode wherein Miss Patsy Kelley is naked in a bathtub—a reminiscence of Mr. Carroll's troubled past. It is altogether a naughty show for the naughty booberie, whether they come from Pittsburgh or the Bronx. Jokes are few in the "Sketch Book," but the comedians who make them are unafraid and the background provided by the dancing girls is enough to establish the "Sketch Book" as one of the wickedest of the Seventh-avenue orgies.

A PATRICIAN EFFORT

Mr. Ziegfeld's new play, which had its opening this week, is a patrician potboiler founded on a Broadway tale of J. P. McEvoy called "Show Girl." It spins a familiar yarn about the Brooklyn colleen who advances herself from Flatbush avenue to the Main Stem, becoming a Ziegfeld prima donna after several encounters with the world, a flesh and the devil. An ordinary romance in itself, it assumes under Mr. Ziegfeld's aristocratic baton the qualities of a thoroughbred comic opera. With verse and music by the Gershwins, George and Ira; paintings by Urban, chorus by a bevy of smart gentlewomen, acting by Mrs. Ruby Keeler Jolson, and burlesque by Clayton, Jackson and Durante, it made this slave glad that his annual vacation was deferred.

It is as satisfactory a musical show as I have ever seen. Its dress is brilliant, but not gaudy, its comedians are amusing though not filthy, its pictures are animated, its tunes distinguished and its general behavior is in Mr. Ziegfeld's best manner.

One of the high spots of this premiere was that priceless moment when the luxurious Mr. Jolson, unable to restrain himself, leapt from his seat and sang "Liza" to his bride, whereby detracting a little from her brilliant success. Mrs. Jolson was very bright as the sagacious Dixie Dugan who conquered Times Square without the loss of a blush, and she acted and tap-danced in a way that entitled her to be glorified by the greatest of the glorifiers. Her skillful performance made Dixie Dugan almost a character, and I advise you to see it along with other sights in "Show Girl."

pictures?" I suggested, since so many of these New York stars arrive here with those very much in mind . . .

INDIFFERENCE

"Oh, I'm indifferent. To me it would just be a question of more money, I'm afraid. I could never really forsake the stage and its intimacy. I love the opening nights of new plays and the contact with the audience. I haven't seen many of the talking pictures . . . but so far I am not irresistibly intrigued . . .

"Yes, this is the end of our long tour and we shall rest here a while and enjoy a delayed honeymoon . . ." smiled Helen a little wistfully.

You see, the bridegroom is none other than Charles MacArthur, co-author of "The Front Page," and the exactions of "Coquette" have been intervening for lo, these many months. When I asked him what his next play would be, after that stormy and blasphemous effusion, he grinned and said:

"Oh, something dainty, fluffy, whimsical, Barrie-ish," whereupon Helen laughed gayly as nice wives should at such bon mots.

All the same, Coquette is not Helen's favorite role of all . . . that was in "What Every Woman Knows," which she played for sixty weeks just prior to "Coquette." I think, too, she enjoys the comedy and flirtatious scenes in "Coquette" quite as much as the tragic emotional ones.

MOTHER, TOO

Helen's mamma is here with her, too, but mother was never on the stage. Helen started the stage tradition in the family herself, and "I have been on the stage since I was a tiny girl . . . was with a Washington stock company for a long while. Although I have only been West once before—in 'Pollyanna'—most of my New York plays have afterward taken me on the road. I am glad we could come West with this one. It will be ninety weeks when we close, and this is a lovely honeymoon spot.

"I don't know what my next New York play will be yet, but several are under consideration . . . one a new one with great original possibilities."

After which I went round front to see the play . . . and behold that tired little girl of a few minutes before skipping gayly, flirtatiously, vivaciously through that first merry scene for all the world as though fatigue had never claimed her.

his own plays prominently featured. This company, accepted by the theater-going public as one of the outstanding organizations in Spain, appeared in 1927 for a short engagement in New York City, following a year's tour of the Latin-American countries.

Sierra is best known to American playgoers by his "Cradle Song" which has been seen in New York and on tour. "The Romantic Young Lady" also found favor with New York audiences.

DRAMATIC TALE FILMED

"Woman Trap," a dramatic story of the conflict of brothers with a girl as the crux, is being filmed by Paramount with William Wellman directing. Hal Skelly, Evelyn Brent and Chester Morris head the cast.

Return Here of Fawcetts Expressed Now

From many quarters has come the expression of the hope that George Fawcett and his wife, Percy Haswell—the latter is now starring in "The Old Shoe" at the Egan Theater—would become a permanent theatrical institution in Los Angeles. When they had their stock company in Baltimore, their clientele was immense and never varying. Hollywood is filled with people who tell how they always had a certain night in the week or a matinee day when they attended the Fawcett Theater. George Fawcett has often threatened to make his appearance again behind the footlights, but his picture work has thus far interfered as he is always booked ahead.

WHEN IS AN ARISTOCRAT?

Essay Just Published Here Labels Art Aristocratic; Webster Invoked Lends Feeble Aid

BY ARTHUR MILLIER

"THE ARISTOCRACY OF ART." By Merle Armitage. Published by Jake Zeitlin. $1.50.

Typographically this slender little volume is one of the neatest things pulled to date from any Los Angeles press. The Mayers Company did the printing in bold face something-or-another that a child of 3 can read and a child of any age can enjoy—providing, we suppose, one is sufficiently aristocratic.

And, presumably, one has to be a physical or spiritual blue-blood to appreciate Grace Marion Brown's sturdy plant decoration which is so well attuned to the type.

To the gist of the quarrel: "Aristocracy!" Why drag that in? As long as Mr. Armitage is his natural self, expressing his almost unconscious, instinctive reactions to art, he writes with a rare directness. Not that he tells one much about art itself, but he emphasizes the truth that sensitiveness to art requires special inherent qualities which do not grow on every family tree. Some people are and others are not interested in art. But some very sensitive individuals are not in the least interested in the so-called fine arts. They prefer flowers or horses, or business.

The thesis that because a person is an artist or an art appreciator he is, willy nilly, a member of a human caste, is just another chunk of contemporary art nonsense. While the writer goes to some lengths to tone down the "holier than thou" implication of his theme, anyone with horse sense can see its essential weakness. His attempt to drag in Webster is childish.

But it is this very childishness that proves the final virtue of the essay, which is really worth reading, not for its silly argument, but because Mr. Armitage, unlike most art writers, is really intimate with art itself. He hunts for it, recognises it with all a child's freshness when it is meant for him, and is not happy until he has made it his own possession. And something of this native quality of the man will out here and there between the lines of his meaningless argument. This sort of stuff is contagious, so I recommend you to buy the book, laugh at the aristocracy bunk, and savor the author's very real love for art itself.

Sun-yellowed wall of old Spain are the principal subject feature of the paintings by a visiting Spanish painter, Jose Drudis-Biada, who has a one-man show at the Ainslie Galleries this month.

His villages and churches drowse in a haze of delicately warm sunlight amid trees and vines. The eye wanders above red-tiled roofs to steep mountains or outward to a blue sea like our own Pacific. The sunlight dominates almost all the pictures, though occasionally, in more romantic fashion, we are shown the "Juca River" with its white bridge, sentinel trees, and brown banks and houses, echoing the rose and turquoise of an evening sky in its tranquil water.

The painter's brilliant color, used in rather high key, does not show to advantage at the Ainslie Galleries because the lighting is not strong enough and too yellow for these works. When the color is joined with a lyrical curving line, as in "The Abbey of Valldemosa," the artist gives us some very fine painting. In fact this town produced the two finest works shown, the other being "Shrine in Valldemosa" with its glowing gold walls against green grass.

Seeing the elements of design in the objects that confront their eyes, that is what the present generation of young artists is doing with marked success. No longer does the student imagine that to paint with gusto is sufficient; he is impressed with the fact that one must give order to his sensations if they are to have any meaning when translated into an art medium.

Striking examples of this trend are the lithographs by Theodore Rozak and Jaroslav Brozik, graduate students at the Art Institute of Chicago, which are exhibited this week at A. E. Little's. Both of them wield the grease crayon with exceptional skill, note the sharp delicacy of the tiny portaits. Rozak is the more poetic of the two, Brozik having a somewhat more sensational turn. But they are fine workmen, who, having already produced excellent work on the stone, as well as on canvas, are headed straight for careers. The collector who likes to catch his artist's young will do well to see these prints.

NATIONAL SCULPTURE SHOWING EXTENDED

HUGE EXHIBITION TO REMAIN IN SAN FRANCISCO TO JANUARY FIRST

SAN FRANCISCO, July 6. (Special Dispatch)—Two announcements of the greatest importance have just been made by the board of trustees of the California Palace of the Legion of Honor, in San Francisco, in regard to the All-American Exhibition of Contemporary Sculpture, which has occupied the palace since April 27. One of these is that the exhibition, originally planned to remain on view for six months and to close on November 1, will continue until the first of the year. The policy of making no admission charge will also be continued.

The other announcement is the astonishing popularity of the show as demonstrated by attendance figures from the records of Director Cornelia B. Sage Quinton, which show that a total of over 510,000 visitors had seen the exhibition in the first two months ending June 26. Also that the attendance including the end of June had reached the tremendous total of 555,948.

These figures are the more noteworthy when compared with those of the largest eastern museums; this comparison shows that in a period of sixty days this sculpture exhibition in San Francisco was viewed by from one-third to one-half as many people as visited any one of the largest eastern institutions in the entire year 1928. When the relative populations of the cities where these museums are located are taken into consideration, these figures become still more significant.

This record-breaking attendance indicates the accomplishment of the chief purposes of the sculpture exhibition as stated in advance by the National Sculpture Society, which assembled it and is its sponsor. These purposes are "to encourage the American artist and to educate further in artistic standards the American public."

Certainly the coming into contact with the art is one of the first essentials of the second part of this announced aim. And when hundreds of thousands of people voluntarily take advantage of this opportunity it indicates a willingness to learn which is of the utmost importance toward the acquisition of information. This leaven is bound to work to the lasting artistic benefit of the nation.

In order to be sure that the things to be seen by the public should be representative, the society opened the exhibition to all living American sculptors, without exception, and then its jury picked from the works submitted, the best of every type. The result is that the visitor is assured that he sees American sculpture of today as it is, and as it is at its best.

As a further aid to this educative process the National Sculpture Society's committee on publication prepared a hand-book of the exhibition, which is in itself a work of art, and not only an adequate souvenir, but is so conscientiously compiled that it will remain always an accurate source of information as to the American sculptors of our time. Adeline Adams has also written a book, "The Spirit of American Sculpture," which is published by the society, and which gives an historical and critical account of this art in our country. These books are obtainable at the California Palace of the Legion of Honor and will prove of immeasurable value to the student of American art.

The hand-book contains the biographies of the 300 exhibitors and pictures of many of the 1336 exhibits, printed on an especially manufactured fine paper, of which eight tons were used in printing an edition of 5000.

The committee on publication consisted of Herbert Adams, chairman; James E. Fraser, Horace Moran and A. A. Weinman, the last-named being the president of the society. Their work and that of all those participating in placing this exhibition before the public has amply justified the National Fine Arts Commission's action in indorsing this event and in its prophesy that "this will be the most notable sculpture exhibition ever held in America."

FAMOUS MODEL OPENS PASADENA ART CLASS

On July 1 the California Art Club lost "Gavaza," its supercustodian. He is leaving to take up new work in Pasadena, where he will be the manager of Stickney Memorial Hall for the Pasadena Architectural Club. He will be given a free hand by that association to start any activities he wishes; the plan being to work up a co-operative artistic center of architects, artists and allied workers. There will be exhibitions, recitals, lectures and discussions, architectural classes and life classes. As Gavaza puts it, he intends "to found a life class where free expression may be encouraged and imagination stimulated—where professional originality will be emphasized rather than dull insistent drill work. In all branches work will be directed to a constructive co-operation that will be swayed by local conditions." His headquarters will be Stickney Memorial Hall, corner of Fair Oaks avenue and Lincoln avenue.

Gavaza has been with the club for about two years, during which time he has been much more than simply a custodian. He has had a clearly defined aim for the club's future, eager to see it a really active art center for the city. He has worked for that end with disinterestedness, vision and zeal.

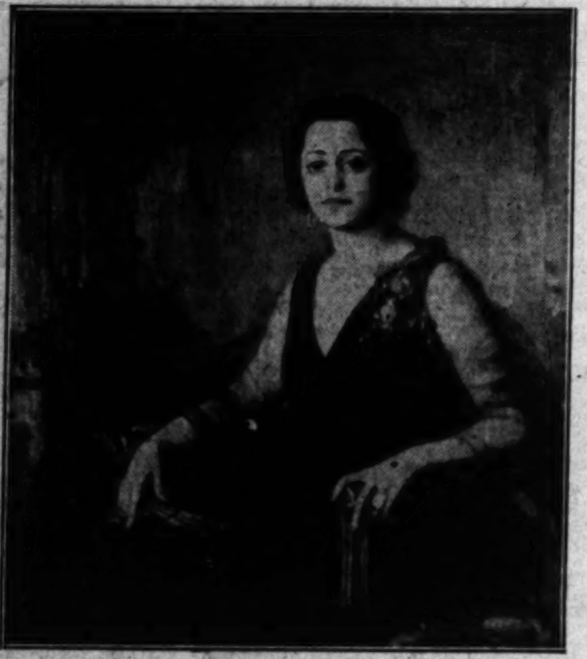
JAYNE APPOINTED DIVISION CHIEF

Horace H. F. Jayne, chief of the division of eastern art at the Pennsylvania Museum, has been appointed director of the museum of the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Jayne, who will continue his connection with the Pennsylvania Museum, succeeds the late George Byron Gordon at the University Museum. He is one of the most distinguished orientalists in America.

MYSTERY SOLVED

"A primitive is a painting that has a lot of the white of eggs and very little perspective."—[The New York Times.

"Portrait of Mrs. Marian Gould"



From the painting by Joseph Kleitsch loaned to the current exhibition at the Stendahl Galleries by the sitter.

HOPPNER'S ADVICE RELATED BY ARTIST

Progressing a little further west I was introduced to the notice of Hoppner, who received me with many marks of politeness. He took us into his painting room and entered into a familiar conversation.

He had just completed a picture of the Stadtholder, and well do I remember how fine a picture it was. The exalted original was not famed either for an intellectual expression of countenance or for the exercise of any great power of intellectual vigor. My friend suggested these facts and expressed his wonder at the painter's success.

"Well," said Hoppner, "I looked at him until I thought he had some brains, and that's the only way I can account for it." Pointing to another portrait he continued. "But look there. What do you think of that?"

"I can't say," replied my friend, "but really I don't think it's as good as you usually paint."

"No, to be sure not," was the rejoinder, "its only a potboiler."

"A what?" exclaimed my friend.

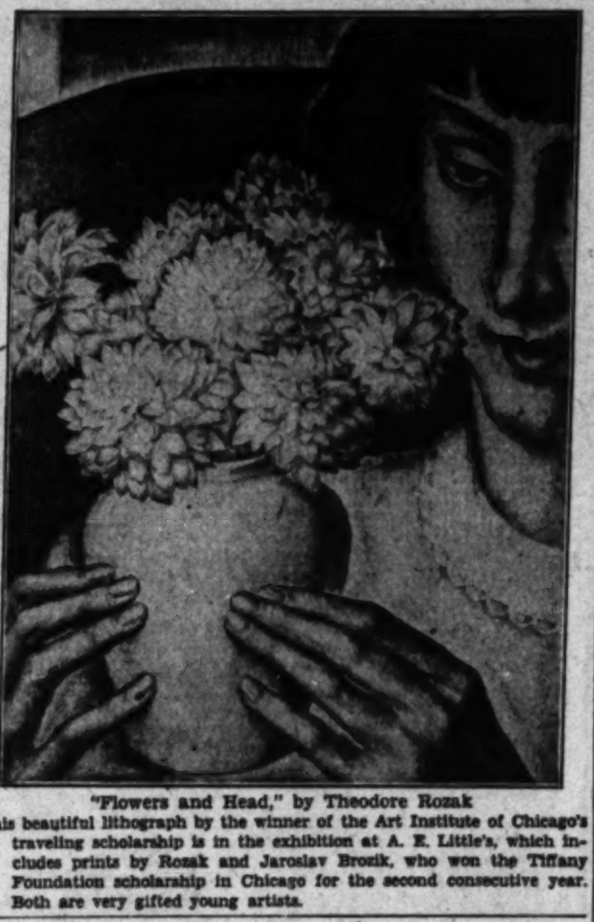
"A potboiler," said Hoppner, adding, "you don't suppose I can always afford to paint good ones? If I did how could I keep the pot boiling?"

Our interview closed with a piece of advice which I found of the greatest value to me in my career, and which I would have every portrait painter who would thrive wrap in the book and volume of his brain.

"I'll tell you what, sir," said the artist. "When you have to paint a portrait of a woman, make it handsome enough. Your sitter or her friends will find the likeness. Never you forget that." I promised him I would not and I kept my word.—[From "Art in England, 1800-1820, by William H. Whitley.

FINE DECORATION

One of the finest works seen recently at the Dana Bartlett Gallery is a decorative painting by Norman Kennedy. It shows tall trees, a pillared and arched stone seat overlooking the sea, and white clouds in a blue sky, the composition, which is exceptionally gracious, worked out in a scheme of turquoise and rose, the color and handling being very sensitive and bringing to a mural treatment a true feeling for nature.



"Flowers and Head," by Theodore Rozak

This beautiful lithograph by the winner of the Art Institute of Chicago's traveling scholarship is in the exhibition at A. E. Little's, which includes prints by Rozak and Jaroslav Brozik, who won the Tiffany Foundation scholarship in Chicago for the second consecutive year. Both are very gifted young artists.

CRITIC REVIEWS ART WORLD

But alas, they're so expensive
They fairly stagger me.

Of course, for oriental rugs,
Cometics, cars or corner drugs,
Or hats to crown our ugly mugs
We pay a price terrific.

But artists are not human,
Like carpenters or shoemen—
They live on air, and beauty rare,
A life quite hieroglyphic.

A picture over mantel, etc.

The art dealers sweep their customers into the art galleries, double-locking the doors on the inside. Now is heard the theme song, sung in unison by the art dealers (an expensive novelty, this:)

The price of art is going up,
Get aboard, get aboard, get aboard.
You're losing money while you sup,
Get aboard, get aboard, get aboard.
All artists sooner or later die,
And their prices soar up to the sky,
So grab your share of the fine-art pie
And watch the prices rocket.

(Solo:)
Rembrandt was a fine old skate,
He certainly could paint 'em;
But it took us guys to make him great,
And canonically saint 'im.
Now, Mr. B—a Rembrandt bought,
His wife saw red, said he hadn't ought,
But when he died she bought a yawcht
With her share of the profit.

(All together:)
So it's clear that art is a very fine thing,
Buy or sell, make money ding, ding,
And culture, too, will adhere to you,
While the shekels line your pocket!

Enter 7000 women and one man attired as art lovers. Close-ups reveal ear trumpets, powerful spectacles and crutches. They look very sad until they see the paintings. Then joy illuminates them. They chant:

Life has not been kind to us,
but art has compensated
For all the things that we have missed—it can't be overrated.
Our lives have not been strewn with flowers,
But art has given us happy hours;
We find it lends us magic powers—life's clouds are silver-plated.

They are instantly transformed into Grecian youths and maidens, lightly clad and perfectly formed, and commence a ballet. The art dealers look askance and drag their wealthy clients into the inner office. The galleries transform into sacred groves with waterfalls (hear them,) spring flowers, peach blossoms and blue mountains. The ballet continues until you are sick of it and then enter six undertakers, clad in black. As they commence to sing the sylvan scene fades back into the gallery set, but it is shrunken and the art lovers look more miserable than before. The art dealers peep out of their inner offices, smile ingratiatingly at the undertakers and swear to each other, sotto voce. As the undertakers look at the paintings disapprovingly it dawns upon the audience that they are really art critics. They sing in snooty voices:

If you want to get a write-up from the art crit-tick,
A dinner and a snifter ought to turn the trick.
For a dinner and a snifter he would slay his little sister—
It's a cinch to get a write-up from the art crit-tick.

[First art critic:]
These trees are doubtless all O.K.,
But the cow is plainly cock-eyed;
That fence is fairly straight, but say,
The house is clearly lop-side.

[Second art critic:]
But still this artist's not so bad.

[All:]
Not good, not bad, not bad, not good;
If only he'd this, and that, and t'other—
(This job's a bother, this job's a bother.

[Critics and augmented chorus:]
Ah, here's a masterpiece divine,
That's lived an incredible length of time.
No one dare say we're wrong!
Its color is brown as Henry's soup,
Its saints and angels have the croup,
But we crib our stuff from Berenson's book—
It's strong, we're strong, ping, pong!
If you want to get a write-up, etc.

The art galleries collapse, art lovers run here and there, wailing, and dealers knock customers over the heads with sledge hammers and steal their pocketbooks. The art critics walk right into the camera, frightening several little children to death in the audience. Fade to a scene with two eucalyptus trees, two mauve mountains and 17,000 landscape painters all painting the same subject. They remove pipes from their mouths and sing, each oblivious of his neighbors:

A landscape painter, I.
I paint the trees and sky.
The trees and sky, the sky and trees,
Ruffled by the self-same scented breeze.
I've done it so often I do it with ease—
Oh, a landscape painter, I.

Enter their wives and children, Southwest Museum exhibit, High-hungry and dressed in whatever comes their way. Shades of annoyance cross the painters' brows. The wives sing:

Our children we can scarce support,
Our clothes are given to us.
Art is so long, life is so short—
A better fate is due us.
Yet we give teas, and strive to please
And boost these lousy skies and trees;
But we wish our men worked a regular wheeze,
Where money would accrue us.

The artists relight their pipes and endeavor to paint again. The wives come down front and continue with venom:

Oh, it's all very well, this high-art stuff,
But we would look nice in an ermine muff.
An artist's wife has a life that's tough,
But we can't rearrange it.

So we'll cry up trees, and skies, and breeze,
And pretend we like this artist wheeze;
But when they come home—the big hunks of cheese—
We'll make 'em suffer or change it!

Fade Out to

A COLLECTOR'S LIBRARY

On either side of a table two art collectors are discovered drinking from tall glasses with audible ice. First collector:

I always said that X. Y. Jones
Was bound to be a comer,
And I bought his junk for thirty bones
Before it took a hummer.
Now that was —I've forgotten the year,
But it proves I'm a very great connoisseur
When I say I sold at a thousand per
What I bought from that poor bummer.

Second collector:
'Tis true my eye is very keen
And my judgment undeceivable,
The bargains I have bought and sold
Are simply unbelievable.
When Rubens Brown was on the town
I jewed him down and down and down
And secured his famous "Study in Brown"
For a pitiance inconceivable.

Both together:
Oh we are patrons of art, we are tra-la-la
And we know the painting mart we do, near and far.
All the artists come to heel
And their works we fairly steal
For we're patrons of the Fine Arts tra-la-la!

The scene changes to a sumptuously furnished real estate office. A prominent realtor sits at a massive desk smoking an expensive cigar, contemplating his $50,000 Persian rug and thinking of divots. A knock at the door. Enter a little weasened fake picture dealer wearing a loud check suit, white spats and carrying a cane. He sings aside with a comedy Hebrew accent:

I deal in fakes most cunninglee
And kid the cultivated
I sell Corots to the Babbittree
And they're always signed and dated.

To the realtor:
There's a very fine picture in a vault
Which I fear I'll forfeit by default.
If you'll take my note for almost naught
A collector you'll be rated.

Realtor gives him cash and takes note. They join hands and dance, singing:

Oh he's a faker and I'm a gull
But we must protect each other
With a dilly-cum-dilly-cum-dilly-cum dull
We'll sell it again to my brother.

A peal of thunder reverberates from the Hoovre-Tone, gloomy mountain tops appear, the first rays of daylight illuminate a substantial rainbow over which gallumps a ballet of clubwomen to the rhythm of Wagner's "Ride of the Valykries. They sing:

Who give art luncheons
Dinners and meetings
Lengthy discussions
—We little girls!
Not that we buy much
Hand-paintings and such
But we adore them
—We little girls

(Sadly)
But we can't afford them
We can't afford them
We can't afford them
We little girl—ies.

The rainbow blanches and breaks in two, precipitating the club ladies ballet into the next scene.

And now we are approaching the grand finale. The Hoovre-Tone orchestra pants and labors, the screen suddenly enlarges to fill the entire proscenium arch as the union stage hands walk out the back door. Crowds of fake art dealers, museum directors, art historians, Gov. Fuller, Andy Mellon, Preston Harrison and others swell the original cast; the original artist recovers from his rat poison and enters, carrying a pyramid of nude models on his shoulders, and the Grecian ballet ballys all over the sacred-grove set. Nightingales warble and then the entire assemblage sings to the tune of "Breakaway:"

Paint away . . . paint away,
We artists need the money now.
Sale today . . . sale today—
Who said there wa'nt no purple cow.

Old stuff, new stuff, any kind of art,
With our works reluctantly we'll part,
If you will . . . Take'm away
. . . Take'm away,
We need our money now.

Fake away . . . fake away,
Old masters crammed on every ship.
Rake away . . . rake away,
Don't let that check beyond you slip.

Wet paint, dry paint, paint that's turning black,
Swear that it improves with every crack.

But see you . . . Stake away
. . . . Stake away,
Art's going up and up and won't come back!

FRESH BREEZE FROM LAG

Former "Times" Art Critic Chatss Aemiabl Famous Beach Gallery and Its Current E

BY ANTONY ANDERSON

It appears that Laguna Beach has one of the finest ga world for the exhibition of pictures. We have held this o some modesty and some fears as to its absolute truth, but been aided, abetted and bolstered by Edgar Payne, who turned from a tour of all the important European galleries knows.

Last night at a meeting in the gallery, Anna Hills, president of the Laguna Beach Art Association, and William Griffith both admitted that the lighting, by day, was a trifle garish, but that this would be corrected by calcimine on the skylights, which would hold to the time of early rains.

Twelve new members are in the summer exhibition, which contains sixty entries, fifty-six being paintings, modern and nonmodern. Our gallery is certainly getting a reputation, not only for the attractiveness of its expanses of wall space, but also for the quality of its shows. The juries of admission are kind and considerate, but firm, and second-rate stuff is being weeded out more drastically from month to month. Which may be why new members are pouring in.

Important, though small, landscapes in the summer show are two from the brush of William Wendt, both painted from sketches made on the artist's recent trip to Germany. The greens are delightful—regular Wendt green. Another important canvas comes from Joseph Kleitsch, "The Bridge at Vernon," which was painted in France last year.

The landscapes, indeed, are very much in evidence, though John Hinchman, who exhibits a figure study, declares that the landscape of California is unpaintable. Wendt's California stuff is really European landscape, (says Hinchman.) But few of us are prepared to agree with him. Certainly, M. De Neale Morgan doesn't, in her afternoon subject from Carmel, "Afternoon, Pines and Dunes." Nor Karl Yens in his poem of spring, "Ver Sacrum," nor Clarence Hinkle, in his brilliant "Laguna Coast Line." Nor Thomas Hunt, in "Grape Arbor." It may be argued, of course, that not all tures are pure landsca But all are Californ outdoor subjects.

However, the painte traits and figures are in evidence, for where th nity grows rich the pa flock like bees round a More power and more their brushes! We need th oranda of civilization, th pous records of successful pampered women. We 2029 know how we lived i

WOODMEN OF THE WORLD

Installation of officers will occur in most of the Woodmen of the World camps this week. Tomorrow evening officers of Fremont and La Fiesta camps will be installed in [illegible] Hall, 1040 South Grand avenue. The ceremony will be in charge of La Fiesta camp with Capt. On Thursday evening David Camp, No. 643, and Los Angeles Camp, No. 402, will each install officers separately in their own lodge rooms.

A basket picnic and open-air installation will be conducted at Tournament Park, Pasadena, next Saturday afternoon and evening. Four camps will participate in the events—Pasadena, Alhambra, Glendale and Monrovia. During the afternoon there will be a program of sporting events and a basket supper from 6 to 7:30 p.m., coffee, sugar and cream being furnished by the camps. The installation ceremony will begin at 8 p.m., the Flying Wedge being in charge, assisted by Pasadena's drill team under Capt. Turner.

On Thursday the officers of Fremont Camp, No. 466, will go to San Diego to conduct the initiation ceremony for Miramar camp of that city in the evening; also they will install the new officers of Miramar camp. A large class of candidates will become members of the order. Those who will make the trip are Si Goughnour, Consul Commander; C. Nelson, Adviser Lieutenant; Earl Graham, L. S. Geer, District Manager E. O. Royal, and A. W. Armstrong.

On Sunday, July 21, there is to be a basket picnic and open-air initiation of candidates in the park at Santa Barbara. Five camps in the northern part of the twelfth district will participate in the event.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

A reception was tendered yesterday to Lee D. Mathews, Grand Chancellor, Knights of Pythias, at 230 South Spring street. Al Borak Temple, No. 73, D.O.K.K. Band, the Zouave drill team and the Nomads were in charge of the affair. Adrien Pemberton was toastmaster.

B'NAI B'RITH

The second annual picnic of the Southern California B'nai B'rith lodges will be held at Luna Park, also known as Selig Zoo, at 3800 Mission Road, on Sunday, the 28th inst.

Participating will be the members of the following lodges: Los Angeles, San Diego, San Bernardino, Santa Ana, Pasadena, San Pedro, Long Beach, Santa Monica, Huntington Park and Hollywood. Committees have been appointed by the presidents of the ten lodges.

It is anticipated from the advance sale of tickets already reported by the various secretaries that there will be an attendance of 2000 members and their families. The fun will start promptly at 10:30 a.m. with a baseball contest between two competing lodges, the names of which are to be announced later. Following that, the program committee announces there will be no cessation in the "whoopee" until 5 p.m.

At 3 p.m. Luna Park will stage a mammoth animal show lasting forty-five minutes, which promises to carry all the thrills of a wild west performance.

CADMAN WRITING

Charles Wakefield Cadman has just sent to his publisher a new American choral number for mixed voices called "Land of Mine," which he has dedicated to the American Legion.

Many Cadman numbers have come to the front recently both nationally and in Southern California, the home of this popular composer. Reinald Warrenrath, American baritone, sang Cadman's "The Builder" over the national hookup of NBC on Monday, the 11th inst. The two leading men's singing organizations of Los Angeles, the Ellis Club and the Orpheus Club, featured his numbers this month, both doing "Service," also "Homeward Bound."

BARRYMORE SPONSORS NEW FEATURE IN FILMS

"Walking talkies" have Lionel Barrymore for a sponsor.

The actor-director introduced the new talking picture wrinkle in directing the balcony scenes for John Gilbert's new starring vehicle, an adaptation of the Ferenc Molnar play, "Olympia."

Building a miniature railway track along the balcony railing for a distance of 100 feet or so, Barrymore mounted his cameras and microphone upon a rubber-tired platform perambulator, and kept Gilbert and Catherine Dale Owen in a very continuous talking close-up as they paced up and down the balcony in a dramatic scene.

"People do not stand still and talk when they are highly agitated," Barrymore explained, "that is why I wanted to have the continuous action throughout the sequence. It belongs there."

Willard Mack adapted the Molnar romantic comedy for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The elaborate supporting cast includes Nance O'Neil, Hedda Hopper, Gustav Von Seyffertitz, Richard Carle, Doris Hill and others of note.

CRITIC REVIEWS NEW TRENDS

as he has produced in New York. He has been unalterably opposed to No. 2 companies of his own shows, and when he has taken them on tour at all, the original company has been preserved intact. In talking pictures, he sees now the opportunity to give to the national public the same sort of production for which he has become famous in New York."

The plan, according to an announcement is for Ziegfeld and Goldwyn jointly to make two pictures a year. Without question, the project conjures roseate anticipations.

GOLDWYN incidentally declared that he is not going to give up making the Ronald Colman or Vilma Banky pictures. Mr. Colman is to appear soon in "Condemned." His "Bulldog Drummond" is a sensational success in the East. Miss Banky will soon be seen and heard in a 100 per cent talking film. Goldwyn has also virtually closed a deal for a new English star—a woman, but asserts he cannot as yet disclose her name, because of a prior engagement.

Regarding Miss Banky's future, he is sanguine. "With the right sort of story she will succeed in the talkies," he said, "and besides there is everything to prove that the silent films are enjoying great and increasing favor now. Only in the past few weeks, apparently, exhibitors are playing silent pictures in many places, which they had previously declined to use. They are also bringing back many of the successful silent films that they previously presented, because of the difficulty attending the getting of new films without dialogue.

"The silent picture is not through; it will go on. But all pictures will have to be made more carefully than ever before, and there will have to be fewer of them. The talkies more than any other thing have evidenced the necessity for abandoning the old factory method of production. It is out of date."

WILLIAM LE BARON, executive head of the R.-K.-O. studios, is one of the few producers who can also supply his own plays—out of his own pocket, so to say. One of the pieces he wrote for the theater some years ago is now being made. It is called "The Very Idea," and Frank Craven is having his first innings as a talkie actor playing in it.

Craven has very quietly slipped into the movies. He is doing the dialogue direction, as well as acting, in "The Very Idea." Chances are that if he decides to stay, he'll be writing most of his own, because he has been good at that on the stage.

IT'S JUST about time for a let-up on the crook melodramas. There are a few more scheduled here and there, but when these are over it should be enough. The worst trouble with these pictures is that many of them attempt to arouse sympathy for the crooks. That scarcely fits in with days dedicated to crime prevention and crime eradication. The movies, too, can manage to do their bit.

SCHOLARSHIPS WILL BE GIVEN STUDENTS

L. E. Behymer is to have charge of the class and private teaching of Lazar S. Samoiloff, vocal coach and teacher, who is returning to Los Angeles September 3, next. Now teaching in Denver, at the Lamont School of Music, Mr. Samoiloff goes to Portland for six weeks, thence coming to Los Angeles for a six weeks' term. If conditions are promising as Mr. Samoiloff now thinks, he hopes to remain for the winter, bringing his family West. Two scholarships will be awarded to the most promising students, one for a lady, one for a man. Diplomas will be awarded in the teachers' class.

ELSA ALSEN SCORES SEATTLE SUCCESS

Elsa Alsen dramatic soprano, who recently won a series of triumphs singing with the Seattle Symphony, created a success recently singing in the Seattle Stadium under direction of Dr. Alfred Hertz. Mme. Alsen has returned again to her Hollywood studio to resume her teaching. She will appear with the Detroit Symphony in Pittsburgh, in November, and as soloist with the Hollywood Bowl this season under the baton of Eugene Goossens.

ELKS TO ENTERTAIN

Gay caballero night will be celebrated at the Show Boat Cafe, Venice Pier, tonight, when members of the local Elks lodge, No. 99, will entertain visiting convention delegates at a special program which will be offered from dusk until dawn under the direction of William Meiklejohn, with "Parisian Nights," new Pom Pom revue, as an added attraction.

CHILDREN'S CLASS STARTS

Earle Wallace will inaugurate a children's professional ballet class on the 8th inst. This is the first year that Wallace, the famous American ballet master, has extended an opportunity to children between the ages of 8 and 14 years to take a course of intensive training in the Earle Wallace American ballet technique.

PASADENA GARDENS SETTING FOR FILMS

Joan Bennett, who is playing the feminine lead opposite George Arliss in "Disraeli" for Warner Brothers, has been on location for the past week at Busch's gardens in Pasadena.

Although Miss Bennett has visited many of the famous landscapes throughout Europe, the beauty and grandeur of these famous Pasadena gardens deeply impressed her.

STUDIO CATERING TO TEACHERS IN SUMMER

Teachers returning to the city for study during the summer months are declared to be finding the Sutro-Seyler Studio peculiarly adapted to their needs.

Julius V. Seyeler, teacher of the phenomenal Eugene List, is devoting many hours to those who require normal training.

Henry Svedrofsky, teacher of the violin, accepts serious students from beginners to concertists and has a special preparatory class for symphony players. Mr. Svedrofsky is the assistant concert master of the Philharmonic Orchestra.

All forms of the dance are taught by Willard Moore, head of the department, and specialty teachers assisting him.

While many seek Miss Russell as a musical coach, it is as a voice builder that she prefers to be known, believing that the vital problem is the perfection of production before any effective interpretation can be hoped for.

In addition to the interesting group work for children studying piano and other instruments, a formal recital of advanced piano students is scheduled for July.

ORGANISTS OFFERED FREE SCHOLARSHIPS

Organists who desire to secure a better position by taking a thorough systematic course of organ study, have the opportunity of competing for a free scholarship for the coming season in the Guilmant Organ School of New York City, Dr. William C. Carl, director.

This offer is made possible through the generosity of the Hon. and Mrs. Philip Berolzheimer, who offer four free scholarships to young men and women who possess the necessary talent but who have not the funds to pay for the tuition of the school.

The examination tests will be held Friday, October 4, at 9 a.m.

Application for the scholarship should be made in writing accompanied with written references regarding the character and financial standing of the candidate, also a signed physician's statement stating that the candidate is in sound health. All applications must be received by October 1, when the list will be closed.

Full information may be obtained by addressing the registrar of the Guilmant Organ School, 17 East Eleventh street, New York.

CHESTER GARDEN TO OFFER PIANO SOLOS

Chester Garden, pianist and composer, has been added to the list of artists to appear at the Pacific Palisades Assembly this summer, and is to be heard in a group of piano solos to be given on the 30th inst., at the Pacific Palisades Auditorium near Santa Monica.

Garden, who is well known for his concert work all through the United States, when he appeared with the New York Symphony Orchestra under Damrosch, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Walter Goodrich, was heard in two interesting concerts in Los Angeles last year at the Philharmonic Auditorium, the first consisting of his own recital December 18, and on the preceding day when he appeared in a two-piano recital with Lillian J. Sargeant.

He is also known for his composing efforts, having written a soprano solo now being sung by Mary Garden in her concert programs, entitled "Beloved" and "Mountain Sketches of New Hampshire."

SUMMER CLASS

A special summer class for adult beginners in ballroom dancing will start the evening of the 15th inst., at the Ernest E. Ryan School of Dancing, 1500 South Figueroa street. Students entering this class will receive instruction in all of the late social dances under the personal direction of Mr. Ryan, who upon its conclusion will leave for the East to attend the annual convention of the Dancing Masters of America, Inc., of which he is vice-president.

GUISTI STUDYING VOICE

Victor Guisti, baritone singer and motion-picture actor, is now studying voice with Felix Hughes, Los Angeles vocal teacher. In addition to his vocal work, motion-picture work and legitimate stage work, Guisti is also an artist, having done portrait work. He was recently seen in a sketch at the Orpheum Theater with Roy D'Arcy, whose brother he is.

SCHOOL TEACHES DANCE

The Russian Ballet School of Theodore Kosloff offers fundamental instruction in all forms of the art of the dance.

Those who have seen the public work of this school's students or programs arranged by Mr. Kosloff are declared to be enthusiastic.

TEACHER PROVES POPULAR

Mae Murray, ballet dancer with the Professional School of Stage Dancing, is meeting with success in her new engagement and is already preparing several ballet numbers for the coming theatrical season.

Dancer Builds School on Firm Foundation

Edith Jane, the Hollywood dancing teacher and fencer, has attracted attention by the establishment of a new school to which she has invited several notable guest teachers. Miss Jane arrived in Los Angeles five years ago from New York, where she graduated from the National Academy of Design, the Vestoff-Serova Russian Ballet School and the Ned Wayburn School of Modern Stage Dancing. She has also coached with Ruth St. Denis.

She spent several seasons on the stage in "The Royal Vagabond" and other well-known productions. In Hollywood she has until recently been associated with the Walter Wills School.

She has now developed a group of eighty dancers in her own school on North Highland avenue and will present them in recital the 22nd inst. at the Windsor Square Theater.

SUNDAY COMMENTS ON MUSICIANS

New York Symphony to Tour

The details for a European tour of the New York Philharmonic Symphony next season are being arranged. Toscannini is to direct it there in the spring of 1930.

Alsen in California

Elsa Alsen is endearing herself to Californians by her fine singing and her graciousness. Her Bowl appearance in Wagnerian arias, August 2, is anticipated by thousands. This month she will be guest artist with Karl Kreuger, conductor of the Seattle Symphony, at two summer concerts. Later in the year she will sing at the Redlands Bowl also. Since it has become known that Mme. Alsen has opened her Hollywood studio to earnest students of fine singing, opera and stage deportment, Mme. Alsen has been the object of an even more personal interest among those who can appreciate the quality of her art.

Edmonds Climbs Ladder

Victor Edmonds, formerly one of Los Angeles' professional singers, is achieving a New York success. He is first tenor of the glee singers who perform each week in Carnegie Hall, numbering 150 and singing with a large orchestra. Edmonds will be heard in five concerts at the Civic Center of Chicago this fall, is first tenor of the well-known De Reszke singers who toured with Will Rogers, and is engaged for the Atwater Kent programs throughout the season. Edmonds received his training from Otto Morando.

TWO CENTURIES HENCE DEPICTED BY DE MILLE

"What compound interest can do in 200 years is nothing to what science will accomplish in that time, and more specifically, the science of entertainment."

This is a comment of Cecil B. De Mille, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer producer-director, concerning the will of Will H. Latta, Indianapolis attorney, by which he disposes of $160,000,000 in 2129. This amount is the approximate sum to which a bequest of $50,000 will accumulate in two centuries.

"Mr. Latta's bequest is a tremendously dramatic piece of news," states Mr. De Mille, "And it leads to a speculation as to what the accumulation of compound interest will buy in 2129.

"I refuse to prophesy what science in general will bring—for I am one of those who scoffed at a 'horseless carriage,' in the Dewey parade of 1899. After watching the growth of the motor car and the radio, I hesitate to make a prophecy. We can't seem to be imaginative enough to keep up with science.

"So far as entertainment is concerned, human personality will be the important factor then as now, and as in 4000 B. C. Personality in entertainment may be expressed differently in 2129. Undoubtedly television will be perfected, and both stage and the movies will be very much unlike their present form. But the demand for clever personalities will be just as strong. Jolsons, Chaneys, Shearers, Swansons, Pickfords, Chaplins, etc., will have their counterparts in 2129.

"The charm of human personality is something science and inventions and new centuries will never

Flapper Togs Exceed Those of Olden Day

Flappers are declared to have five times as many clothes as girls of 1840, but the entire wardrobe of a modern girl occupies one-fifth the space of that of a pre-Civil War maiden.

Modern dresses are asserted to contain twenty-five times less the material than the regalia of an 1840 belle. They are also made in fifteen times less time.

Mary Brian, who has the feminine lead in Charles (Buddy) Rogers's starring vehicle, "River of Romance," is learning the costume problem ratios of 1840 and 1929.

Miss Brain's personal riding suit is made of three yards of material, while in the southern picture she has a riding dress made of thirty-five yards of velvet. The evening-gown worn in the production is so large that she cannot keep it in her wardobe closet at the studio. There is a difference of 284 yards between her modern evening gown and that used in the picture. The nightgown used before the Civil War was made of twelve yards of muslin and eight buttons, while four yards of silk, and two snaps complete a pair of pajamas.

Technique of Stage Differs From Screen

Differences in screen and stage technique are many and varied, and even the most experienced stage veteran has new tricks to learn when acting before the camera, according to Kay Hammond, stage star, who is completing a featured role supporting Gloria Swanson in her newest Pathe feature.

One peculiar difference between the methods employed in the two mediums, explains Miss Hammond, is conversation carried on between two actors facing each other in a scene. The screen star does not look his fellow-artist squarely in the eye, but looks at the eye nearest the camera. This not only makes it appear that he is intently engaged in conversation with his vis-a-vis, but it also presents the actor's profile at its best angle to the camera, Miss Hammond relates.

PARAMOUNT SIGNS VAVERKA

Anton Vaverka, who has had thirty years of stage and nine years of screen experience, and who is best known for his portrayal of Emperor Franz Josef in "The Wedding March," has been signed by Paramount for a part in "The Love Parade."

Star Featured in Crook Roles

When Robert Armstrong begins his "Racketeer" picture soon, he will have participated in fifteen crook pictures in a year and a half.

"The public is beginning to believe I was a real prize fighter," said Bob. "I get fan mail asking how to get in the ring, and where I fought all the time. If Pathe does not allow me to be myself soon on the screen, I am going to be hopelessly catalogued."

Bob believes, however, that any interesting characterization is worth doing well. "If I make a good drunken reporter in "Big News," and a good roughneck in another film, it is more satisfactory to me than to be doing gentleman roles half way" he says. "I would like the public to know, nevertheless, that I lacked but three months' graduating from law school, and really am not as bad as I seem in pictures. Perhaps the fact that I studied law makes me a good villain."

TO PRESENT SKETCH

Jack Richardson, character actor of the screen, and his wife, Florence Stone, both of whom are charter members of the Musketeers' Club, will present a one-act sketch entitled "Us Men," this evening at the new clubhouse on Sunset Boulevard.

Furniture Show Set Next Week

The third semiannual furniture market will be held in Los Angeles the 15th to 20th inst.

More than the 130 manufacturers with production exceeding $25,000,000 a year will be represented in this market which is sponsored by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

The market will be held in the Wholesale Furniture Building, Twelfth and Santee streets, Los Angeles.

NEW NOVEL BY J. C. POWYS

side the other, like Chinese boxes." He finds nothing stable. Christie Malakite leaves him, his mother's love is for others, his friend Darnley marries, his wife is unfaithful with the green grocer. He turns to his father's grave and cries aloud to the mocking skull beneath the soil:

"There is no reality but what the mind fashions out of itself. There is nothing but a mirror opposite a mirror, and a round crystal opposite a round crystal, and a sky in water opposite water in a sky."

"Ho! Ho! You worm of my folly," laughed the hollow skull. "I am alive still, though I am dead; and you are dead, though you're alive. For life is beyond your mirrors and your waters. It's at the bottom of your pond; it's in the body of your sun; it's in the dust of your star-spaces; it's in the eyes of weasels and the noses of rats and the pricks of nettles and the tongues of vipers and the spawn of frogs and the slime of snails. Life's in me still, you worm of my folly, and girl's flesh is sweet for ever and ever."

But his son answers: "You lie to yourself! You lie with the old, hot, shuffling, fever-smitten lie. It's the foam-bubbles of your life-mania that you think so real. They're no more real than the dreams of the plantains that grow over your grave!"

And, at the last, stripped of the outward show of things, the poet learns that ripeness is all, that he must endure and even welcome loneliness, must learn to enjoy and forget, learn to endure, or escape this crazy-patch of life.

"Wolf Solent," is not a great novel, but it is a good novel, a worthy twenty-century companion to "Wuthering Heights," full of beautiful writing, interrupted full often by passages of profound psychological analysis, and dominated, now and again, by mystic song.

For comparisons we must not look to Hardy, but to Emily Bronte and, oddly enough, to Henry James. The subjective method here employed was not fathered by James Joyce, but by the sly, American-Englishman who was the analyst of the drawing-room. If one could imagine the reincarnation of a soul, half Emily Bronte, and half Dostoievski, made to exercise its terrible moods over the subtle hand of a Henry James, now exiled from polite sitting rooms and rudely thrust into a Dorset cottage, one can very nearly conceive of the forces that made this pathetically beautiful book. But one is ever compelled to remember that in all the world there could be one "onlie begetter," of such a work, which is the unmistakable, the characteristic child of John Cowper Powys, a rare and winning poet.

A GROUP OF MYSTERY TALES

might surmise from the title of her story. She has in the past contributed several stories to Scribner's.

"The Scarlet Thumb," a mystery story by Jermyn March, published by the Rae D. Henkle Company, has just made a success in England, where it was published under the title "The Dago," and where reviewers credited it with giving a novel and baffling twist to murder.

"Sir Charles Bagot," by C. P. de Glazebrook, will shortly be published by the Oxford University Press, New York. Bagot was Governor-General of Canada in 1841 and instituted the system of representative government for which he was censured and recalled by Lord Stanley. This little book is an essay on English colonial policy in the early years of Queen Victoria's reign as seen at work in Canada. It is specialized in nature and will appeal to readers whose interests are closely touched by questions of imperial history. Bagot was not unknown in other spheres for he was M. P. for Castle Riding in 1807, Parliamentary Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs in the same year, Minister Plenipotentiary to France in 1814, to United States of America in 1815-20, and Ambassador to St. Petersburg in 1820, and to The Hague in 1824.

"The time is near when we Americans will no longer spell the names of our sopranos with spaghetti or put whiskers on the names of American violinists," declares Irving T. Bush, industrialist and close observer of our changing national life, in his book, "Working With the World."

"It was not long ago that we sent our cheeses to Holland to be painted red before they could be sold here," he adds. "We still send our singers to Europe to be renamed. It is the working of the European complex in our simple minds. We cannot believe that Miss Jones can sing as well as Signorina Jonita. But this delusion will pass. The time is near when we shall develop an American artistic expression far beyond our present vision."

the body of some poor opponent, a man he never knew, with whom he personally had no quarrel. Of course, killing men in war becomes so common that it ceases to be real and becomes an abstraction. But even soldiers, hardened as they become to war's grim horrors, at times have to stop for a moment and think.

That the book has met with such a reception in Germany, where over 500,000 copies have been sold, and in England, where the publishers have issued nine large editions, seems to show the readiness of the public for such antiwar tales. Arrangements are being made for translated editions into French, Dutch, Spanish, Danish-Norwegian, Hungarian, Czech, Polish and Italian.

It will be interesting to watch the reception of this book in Italy. Will Mussolini suppress it, or is it just barely possible that he, too, has seen at least a faint glimmering of "the light that was never seen on sea or land," and that his sword-rattling and bombastic fever are gradually subsiding so that like most of the other heads of the great powers, he is ready to assist in developing the "will to peace."

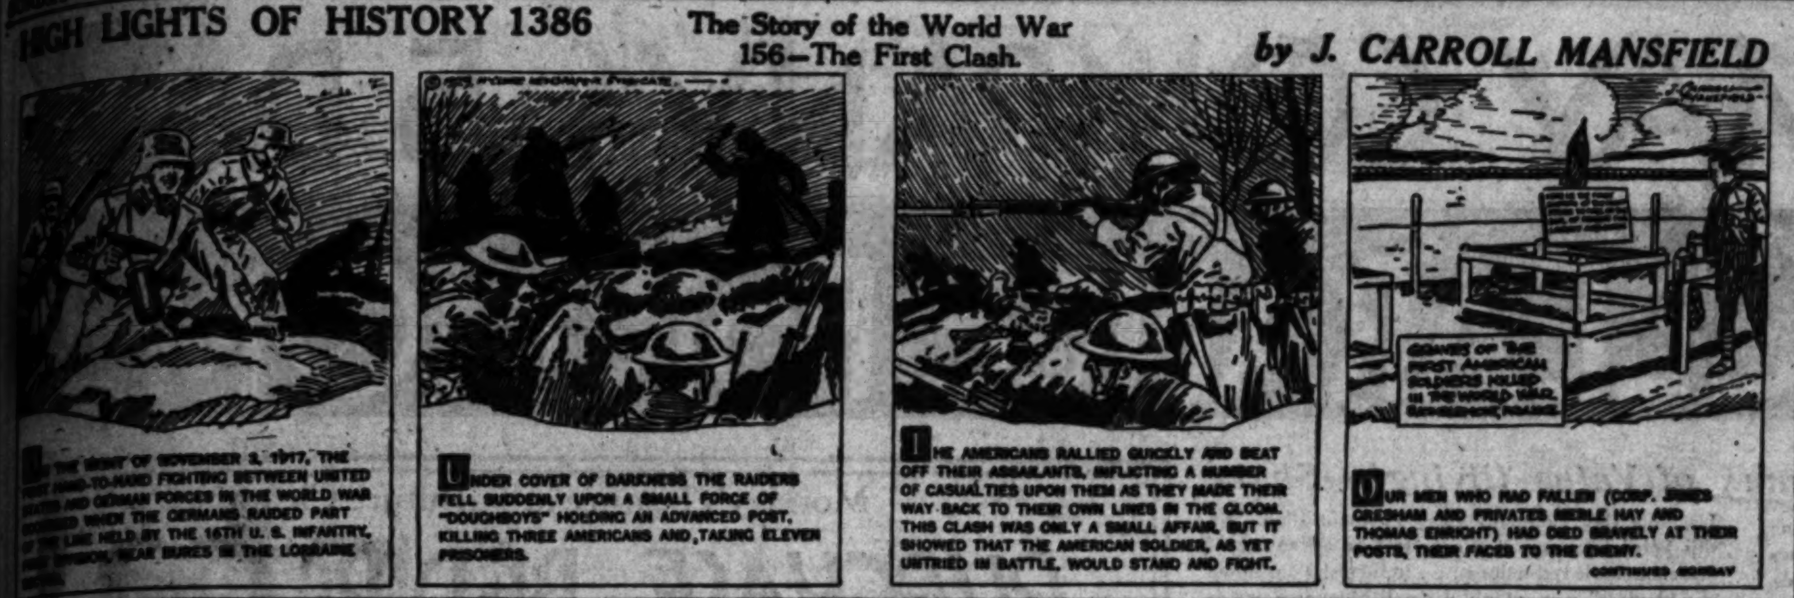
HIGH LIGHTS OF HISTORY 1386

The Story of the World War
156—The First Clash.

by J. CARROLL MANSFIELD



On the night of November 2, 1917, the first hand-to-hand fighting between United States and German forces in the World War occurred when the Germans raided part of the line held by the 16th U. S. Infantry, First Division, near Bures in the Lorraine sector.
Under cover of darkness the raiders fell suddenly upon a small force of "doughboys" holding an advanced post, killing three Americans and, taking eleven prisoners.
The Americans rallied quickly and beat off their assailants, inflicting a number of casualties upon them as they made their way back to their own lines in the gloom. This clash was only a small affair, but it showed that the American soldier, as yet untried in battle, would stand and fight.
Graves of the first American soldiers killed in the World War, Bathelemont, France
Our men who had fallen (Corp. James Gresham and Privates Merle Hay and Thomas Enright) had died bravely at their posts, their faces to the enemy.

Society of Cinemaland

by Myra Nye

With the celebration of Independence Day in mind, scores of the [illegible] independently planned their Thursday vacations and reached [illegible] conclusion, so that the naming of one sport—swimming—[illegible] serve almost as a resume of the manner in which Hollywood society passed its day.

Mary Eaton, here but recently from the heat of New York, took her mother, Mrs. Mary Eaton, her two sisters, Doris and Pearl, and her brother, Charles, to Arrowhead for the week-end. The family had been separated for some time, and Mary's arrival in Hollywood has meant a continuous reunion.

Charlotte Greenwood and her husband motored to Santa Barbara via the new highway, stopping at the Biltmore.

Monte Brice observed the Fourth by walking up the gangplank of a Europe-bound steamer. He was accompanied by his mother, Mrs. Catherine M. Brice, who will continue her art studies on the continent throughout the summer.

A house party at Laguna Beach was enjoyed by Renee Adoree, Margaret Ettinger, Bess Meredith, Michael Curtis, Dan Danker and Rose Shattuck, and the group now is passing the week-end at Agua Caliente.

Johnny Hines was host to a dozen friends at a swimming party in the grounds of his Hollywood home, with fireworks later in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Nye (Helen Lynch,) with Mr. and Mrs. Jason Robards (Agnes Lynch,) entertained Mrs. Billie Eugene of San Francisco, at the Beach Club.

Betty Boyd and her chum, Mary Jane Temple, passed the day at the Lake Norconian Club, where they played golf.

Dorothy Dwan entertained with a swimming party at her Hermosa Beach cottage, following it with a huge display of fireworks on the sand in the evening.

Robert Armstrong took his mother, Mrs. M. Armstrong, and his aunt, Mrs. Chulie Streng, to Catalina Island.

Millard Webb passed the day with the Irvin Willats (Billie Dove.)

Helen Ferguson, torn between the duty of staying at home and balancing her accounts, and going to her cottage at Arrowhead, at the last moment caught the Independence Day spirit, and went to Arrowhead.

Mr. and Mrs. James Gleason and their son Russell enjoyed the day in their new swimming pool with fifty guests who passed the day with them. A buffet luncheon was served at the side of the pool.

Louise Fazenda, who has been vacationing in Alaska, was homeward bound.

Myrna Loy, Mr. and Mrs. Efe Asher, Billy and Elsa Wickersham, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wallace, Kathleen Clifford, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Webb, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Cohen, were at the new Cascades Beach Club for the day.

Ken Maynard left early in the morning by plane for Texas.

Mr. and Mrs. William J. Cowen (Lenore Coffee) assisted their 2-year-old daughter, Toni, at entertaining twenty of her small friends at a fireside party given in the gardens of the Cowens' hillside home.

And Alice and Marceline Day, with their mother, Mrs. Irene Day, went to Catalina Island.

Brilliant Gathering

Elsie Janis and her mother, Mrs Josephine Janis, were honor guests Saturday evening of last week at a delightfully informal party given by Jack King, the young composer, and his mother, Mrs. Ziegler King, at their home in Whitley Heights.

In attendance was a brilliant group of Cinemaland's elite, including Messrs. and Mmes. John Charles Thornes, Ralph Forbes (Ruth Chatterton,) Edwin Knopf, John Gilbert (Ina Claire,) Sydney Russell (Carlotta King,) Mitchell Leisen (Stella Seager,) Basil Rathbone (Ouida Bergere,) Fay Bainter, Ramon Novarro, Laura Hope Crewes, Emily Crowley, Richard Barthelmess, Edmund Goulding, Walter Huston, Nicholas Murray, Lino Carenzio Frank Chase and John Colton.

Cascades Opening

One of the most distinguished assemblages of the week was that of Monday evening, when Mr. and Mrs. J. Ward Cohen (Jackie Saunders) entertained with a dinner-dance at the beach to celebrate the opening of the new Cascades Beach Club.

Their long table, decorated with lilacs and pink roses and lighted with matching candles, was marked with covers for Mr. and Mrs. Paul Scardon (Betty Blythe,) Mr. and Mrs. Fred Windemere (Belle Bennett,) Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Schildkraut (Elise Bartlett,) Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Crosby (Peggy Hamilton,) Mr. and Mrs. Tom Miranda, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Simpson, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Franklin, Mr. and Mrs. John Bowers (Marguerite de la Motte,) Dr. and Mrs. Stuart P. Nolan, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Cohen, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dorian, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Crossthwaite, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Tryon, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Tyler, Mr. and Mrs. Efe Asher and Mr. and Mrs. Mio Illitch, Ruth Stonehouse, Rosetta Duncan, Dorothy Dwan, Ruth Collier, Minna Wallis, Priscilla Dean, Ann Rork, Doris Arbuckle, Pearl Canfield, Rosa Roma, Ella Wickersham, Mrs. Irene Day, Marceline Day, Thelma Hill, Grace Kingsley, Nan Christy, Felix Hughes, O. Fashion Show

An interesting event planned for next week will be the fashion show and tea given Wednesday at the Ambassador Cocoanut Grove in honor of the wives of visiting Elks.

Prominent on the list of patronesses are Mmes. Irvin Willat (Billie Dove,) Jack Dempsey (Estelle Taylor,) Jack Ford, Ben Bard (Ruth Roland,) Charles Kenyon (Jane Winton,) J. Ward Cohen (Jacqueline Saunders,) William Earle Keefe, Edmund Lowe (Lilyan Tashman) and Peverell Marley (Lina Basquette,) Claire Windsor, June Collyer, Sharon Lynn, Thelma Todd and Sue Carol.

Dinner Party

The new home of Gertrude Sutton was the setting recently for a delightful dinner party with which she entertained for several friends in Cinemaland. White roses and green tapers formed a charming color scheme for the table upon which place cards to correspond marked covers for Mary Merton, Clara Bowden, Jeanette Delong, Lillian Lorraine, Don Richards, Tom Newberry, Richard Drummond and John Carlson, Jr., and dancing was enjoyed throughout the evening.

Trout Club Visitors

Recent visitors at Noah Beery's Paradise Trout Club included Mr. and Mrs. Jason Robards, Mr. and Mrs. George Scarborough, Ethel Wales and Neeley Edwards, who enjoyed a week-end of fishing, swimming, horseback riding and hiking.

Sea Breeze Affair

Mr. and Mrs. M. I. De Vito (Dorothy Gulliver) were gracious hosts at a dinner dance given June 29 in the Egyptian Room of the Sea Breeze Club, where a holiday motif was carried out with Fourth of July decorations, favors and place cards. In attendance were Mr. and Mrs. George Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Phillips, Collette Merton, Mona Merton, Wendell Randolph and Tom Thornton.

An unusual party was also given recently at the club by Mona Rico, whose guests passed an afternoon in the enjoyment of various sports, tennis, played in bathing suits, being the favorite game. In the late afternoon tea was served under the gay beach umbrellas to Doris Dawson, Sally Eilers, Doris Hill, Renee Torres, Raquel Torres, Polly Ann Young and Helen Twelvetrees.

Interesting Affair

Mme. Le Moine, a French portrait painter who came recently to Hollywood to paint ten stage and screen players for a leading French magazine, entertained during the week at a dinner-dance in the Roosevelt, to honor Marie Wells, and to celebrate the completion of a painting of Miss Wells, the first subject chosen by the hostess. Following the evening of dancing the party was taken to Mme. Le Moine's home, where the painting was exhibited to the fourteen guests in attendance.

Honoree of Dinner

Victoria Alden was the guest of honor Saturday evening of last week at a dinner party given in the Blossom Room of the Roosevelt. Table decorations were miniature crystal bowls of spring flowers to which were attached place cards for the ten guests, Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Walton, Count and Countess Le Moine, Nancy Bond, Bess Ross, Nan Beck, Louise Merton, Nan Carlton and Frank Deamond.

At Hot Springs

Mrs. Don Alvarado, Mrs. Frank Borzage and Molly O'Day have been enjoying a brief sojourn at Soboba Hot Springs.

Entertains Parents

Honoring her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. William Jurgens, and her brother, Jack Jurgens, who are visiting her from New York, Helen Twelvetrees was a recent luncheon hostess at the Montmartre.

Miss Boyd Hostess

Gathering together a charming group Wednesday at the Montmartre, Betty Boyd entertained several Wampas Baby Stars at luncheon, using pink and orchid-toned flowers to grace the center of her table. Covers were marked for Mona Rico, Renee Torres, Raquel Torres, Helen Twelvetrees, Doris Dawson, Polly Ann Young and Ethlyn Claire.

San Franciscan Here

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Richardson of North Kenmore avenue will entertain as their house guest next week Mr. Richardson's sister, Mrs. William Palmer Lucas of San Francisco. Mrs. Lucas, the wife of one of the Bay City's most prominent physicians, will be present for the breaking of ground for Mr. and Mrs. Richardson's new home in Lake Hollywood Drive, Hollywood Knolls. Several social affairs are being planned in her honor.

At Arrowhead

Fay Bainter was hostess to a party of friends last week-end at Arrowhead Springs, entertaining in one of the private Spanish-type bungalows adjacent to the main hotel building. A moonlight swimming party concluded a day of merrymaking Saturday evening.

After-Theater Party

The final presentation Saturday evening, June 29, of "Hamlet" in the Windsor Square Theater, was the incentive for a memorable after-theater party given in his beautiful new home at 3021 Waverly Drive by Dr. Rodolfo Monaco, who in entertaining members of the cast and production staff and their friends proved himself an exceptionally gracious host.

Dancing to interesting original compositions played by Irving Hamilton, alternating at the piano with Jascha Frank, and several solos by Miss Mildred Carroll were enjoyed throughout the evening, and a delightful buffet supper was served, when Mrs. Cecil Reynolds presided at the coffee urn. In attendance were Dr. and Mrs. Elmer Belt, Dr. and Mrs. Cecil Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chamberlain (Elsa Mathews,) Mr. and Mrs. Jascha Frank, Mr. and Mrs. Cleland van Dresser, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Alexander Hamilton, Miss Elly Malyon, Miss Agnes Leslie, Miss Gladys Pease, Miss Rosalind Shepard, Joseph Schildkraut, Lionel Belmore, Eric Snowden, Armand Monaco, John McLaughlin, Dr. William Hutchinson, Dr. William Branch, William Duray, Ralph Matson, Lynton Brent, Thomas De Graffenard, Anthony Sheehan, Ciecis Saboto, Lucian Self, Harland G. Holiday Guests

Independence Day guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Borsage at their beach home in Los Flores included Josephine Dunn, Emma Johnston, Marie Landenhagen, Mrs. G. McGarger, Lew Borsage, Melbourne Spurr, Carl Allen, Lieut. Twining, Gino Conti, Guido Crento, Al Martin, C. K. Steele, Trento Drandise, Selig Winslow and Wayne Cassidy.

'Big News' to Be Seen Soon

Wade Boteler, who will be seen as that deity of the newspaper press room, the editor, in "Big News," a dialogue drama of modern journalism, prefaced his career as a screen actor by teaching at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, from which he had also graduated. Two of his pupils during this time were Claire Eames and Ruth Gordon, both destined to become Broadway stars.

"Big News," a Pathe production, is scheduled for early release. It features Robert Armstrong, with Carol Lombard appearing in the leading feminine role. Others filling important roles are Charles Sellon, Sam Hardy, Tom Kennedy, Warner Richmond, Frank Nelson, Louis Payne, Cupid Ainsworth and Herbert Clark.

MUSICAL REVUE STAGE OFFERING

The Million Dollar Theater has made elaborate preparations for the stage showing of the California Syncopators, now appearing as the featured stage offering in conjunction with "Innocents of Paris," featuring Maurice Chevalier. The California Syncopators are booked for this week only, and immediately after their local engagement will go on an extended tour of the principal cities under the auspices of a major vaudeville circuit as a headline act.

This musical revue boasts also a bevy of girls in specialties.

MISS BRONSON ABROAD

Betty Bronson and her brother Frank have arrived in England. They plan to visit friends in Oxford for a few days and from there will journey to Heidelberg. This is Betty's second trip to Europe. Two years ago she visited France and England, and in London called upon Sir James M. Barrie, author of her first screen success, "Peter Pan."

NEW FILMDOM BEING CREATED

one studio to another and consequently are not "out" as contract workers, but aside from the directors' list, the number of these instances is limited. There is no question but that to date players and writers have been the most seriously affected by changes wrought by the talkies.

The directors are holding on more securely to their jobs. The influx of the dialogue director has not greatly changed the status of the motion-picture director although it may. Many of the dialogue men are also learning other phases of directing. By many it is considered doubtful, incidentally, whether any large proportion of the players and writers imported from New York will stay in the films. In this case the screen player and writer will probably materially benefit from their departure.

The organizations showing the most actual changes in their lists of players, directors, etc., are Paramount and Fox. Paramount, for example, scarcely has any of the full-fledged stars that it possessed before the talkies came in. The current list comprises the following names: Richard Arlen, George Bancroft, Clara Bow, Evelyn Brent, Nancy Carroll, Ruth Chatterton, Maurice Chevalier, Gary Cooper, Dennis King, Moran and Mack, William Powell and Charles Rogers. The only names appearing on the star list of a year ago were Bancroft, Bow and Rogers. One or two others were featured players.

Bebe Daniels has left the organization, though she is now a star with R-K-O-. Richard Dix has one more picture to make and then he too will be with R-K-O- regularly. Wallace Beery has gone over to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Esther Ralston is now a featured player instead of a star. Emil Jennings has returned to Europe. Florence Vidor and Adolphe Menjou are no longer with the organization. The new stars have nearly all been brought into prominence through the talkies. Paramount has dropped a total of twelve players and added twenty-three on the West Coast, and besides that their eastern activities are to be accounted for.

Fox has materially increased its list of players by importations of stage talent. There are forty-two new actors under contract. Twenty who were under contract last year do not appear upon the current list. Metro-Goldwyn has made more changes in writers and directors than anything. They have kept their featured list pretty well intact and have added a large number. Warner Brothers show important additions to their contracted talent, and Pathe discloses a marked increase.

ganized permanent choruses of their own have preferred lists of singers upon whom they call from time to time.

The advantages of the permanent group are manifold, it is said. In the first place the selected voices are consistently good and because of constant rehearsal are well trained and have at their command a comprehensive repertoire. In scenes of any proportions, the chorus members can be made up as extras to mingle with actors and actresses of the production. In close-ups in the musical and dancing films, where pulchritude of a degree not found in the chorus is essential, the group can double in singing for those people actually seen, or the director can get an effect of off-stage singing.

Irritating problems in diction caused purely by microphone limitations can be worked out by the permanent groups. For example, Royce found one day in rehearsing the Fox chorus that much of the hiss which comes with a letter perfect pronunciation of "s" could be avoided by giving the "s" "z" sound. The word "caress" was sung "carezz" to much better microphone advantage.

"SPECIAL" OFFERED

Raymond McKee is seen and heard in a special talking comedy at the Fox Westlake, as a special added attraction for "The Studio Murder Mystery," Paramount's all-talking thriller, which is the principal screen fare. "The Studio Murder Mystery" was filmed by Paramount on the same elaborate scale as "The Canary Murder Case" and other films of this type. It has an all-star cast. Another feature included on the current Fox Westlake bill is the "Metro Movietone Revue," boasting an elaborate line-up of singing and dancing talent. "The Studio Murder Mystery" will be followed on Monday by "The Valiant," starring Paul Muni.

[illegible] first six months of 1929 has been a prosperous period for [illegible] California builders, according to detailed figures ob- [illegible] seventy-three cities. FACT AND COMMENT

CALIFORNIA real estate salesmen, and there are 65,000 of them, who next month start taking compulsory examinations for their State licenses, are giving the procedure whole-hearted indorsement. Such is the report of Glenn D. Willaman, who as secretary of the State association, comes into close contact with brokers in every section of California.

"When the measure was passed by the State Legislature making it compulsory for all salesmen to take an examination for a license," says Mr. Willaman, "we had anticipated an avalanche of criticism. It was only to be expected that men who had been in the business for years might resent being asked to qualify, by written examination, for the right to continue in that business.

"The criticism, however, has been negligible. Everywhere throughout California real estate men have backed up the examination unqualifiedly. They realize that it will eliminate those who know little or nothing about real estate from the field of selling, and produce more ethical standards. They may consider the examination a slight inconvenience, but they know that in studying for it their minds will be refreshed on the technicalities of real estate and for that reason it will prove highly valuable."

This report by the State secretary is gratifying and again demonstrates that the California real estate dealer is heart and sole for any move that will place his profession on a higher plane.

Canyon Park Protests

Strenuous objection has been voiced to the proposed municipal park in Santa Monica Canyon and these objections promise to crystalize August 12 when the City Council hears protests against the confirmation of assessments.

In the first place the desirability of a park at this point is doubtful. The county-owned strand near by seems to meet the recreation needs of the public. The limited area of the project, three and a half acres, is in itself an argument against the park. Real estate men, surveying the land, declare it much better suited to income property than to playground purposes.

The main objection to the plan is the price of $70,000 per acre set on the tract by the referees appointed by the court. Surrounding acreage can be purchased for from $15,000 to $30,000 per acre and land comparatively close is available at $10,000 per acre.

JURY OF AWARD STUDYING PLAN

Winning Design Selection Expected Soon

Selection of the prize-winning designs for this area in the 1929 National Better Homes Architectural Competition may be completed by the end of the coming week, according to David J. Witmer, chairman of the jury of awards for the district comprising California and Nevada. The jury will meet again tomorrow at 2 p.m. to resume deliberations, which were begun last Wednesday.

Mr. Witmer also announced that, at the request of the naitonal directors of the competition, the local jury of awards will not reveal the identity of the winners of the three prizes of $500 each in the local district until after the prize-winning designs have been sent East and the winners of the national competition have been selected. It will be recalled that the three prize winners in the thirteen districts over the country are to be sent to New York, where thep automatically become entries in the national competition for three prizes of $5000, $3000 and $1500.

SECRECY DECIDED

It is the desire of the national directors to preserve the anonymity of authors of the prize designs in the local competition until after the national jury of awards has viewed them and selected the winner in the conformity with the competition rules of the American Institute of Architects, whose regulations are being closely followed in this competition.

For the above reason none of the envelopes containing the names and addresses of the authors of the designs corresponding to the noms de plume will be opened until the notification permitting such step is received from New York headquarters.

TO RETURNS DESIGNS

It is the intention of the Home Owners' Institute of New York, sponsors of the national competition, and The Los Angeles Times, sponsors of the local competition, to return to the authors such designs as are not winners or which do not receive honorable mention, where such return is requested and the request is accompanied by postage and directions. This cannot be done, however, until the national competition is over.

LARGE HOME AT VENTURA ANNOUNCED

Plans Completed for House of Twenty-one Rooms for Stores Manager

VENTURA, July 6. (Exclusive)—Plans for a palatial Californian style home which is expected to be the largest, most costly and most complete residence in Ventura county had been completed today by Architect Harold E. Burket for Amos N. Lovvorn, manager for the J. C. Penney Company stores in this district.

The house is to cover a ground area of 110 by 140 feet and will contain twenty-one principal rooms in addition to a large number of service and auxiliary rooms.

McKeown & Keuhl, Beverly Hills landscape architects, are now busy moving in trees and shrubs.

The dwelling is situated at the southwest corner of Lincoln and Monita drives, in Hobson Heights, on one of the most sightly hillside lots in the city. A sweeping view of the channel islands, harbor, Santa Clara Valley and east end residence section is afforded.

GREAT SPURT IN BUILDING NOTED

Construction Breaks Record at Long Beach

Six Business Units Rising Simultaneously

New Edifices Cost Total of $3,150,000

LONG BEACH, July 6. (Exclusive)—Six major buildings now under construction at a cost of $3,150,000 reflect the commercial expansion which has followed the residential spurt in building here for the last year.

Three of the buildings are homes for expanding mercantile institutions, one is a height-limit office building on the beach, one a medical and professional building and the other a cafe and hotel structure.

The Marti Building, erected at a cost of $750,000 at Fourth street and Pine avenue in the heart of the shopping district, represents the expansion of what was a small store six years ago. The second unit of the department store is nearing completion. The first unit was occupied a few months ago. The Marti Company will occupy the greater part of the four-story structure. Leases which will bring nationally known chain stores to Long Beach have been signed for the remainder of the building.

The $500,000 addition to the Wise Company department store, erected at Broadway and Pine avenue, likewise represents the development of what was a comparatively small store five years ago. The concrete work on the new building is nearing completion, revealing the structure as one of the most beautiful department stores in the Southland.

Barker Brothers' new building at Broadway and Locust avenue, to cost $200,000, is rising rapidly to its eight-story height. Like the Marti and Wise Company development this building reflects the tremendous growth of the mercantile business in Long Beach in the last few years. The new structure erected

Fee Schedules Declared Same in Many Cities

Twenty-five boards in California use the same schedule of fees as that adopted by the Los Angeles Realty Board, it is revealed in a report on a State-wide survey of real estate board schedules made by the uniform fees committee of the California Real Estate Association. Paul S. Bomberger, Modesto, chairman, conducted the survey which included over 100 cities.

The twenty-five boards are: Alhambra, Arcadia, Azusa, Bakersfield, Bell, Beverly Hills, Compton, Downey, Glendale, Huntington Beach, Inglewood, Long Beach, Los Angeles, Montebello, North Hollywood, Pasadena, Redondo Beach, San Diego, San Fernando, San Marino, San Pedro, Santa Monica, Van Nuys, West Hollywood and Whittier.

Boeing Airport Construction to Start Soon

NORTH HOLLYWOOD, July 6. (Exlusive)—Following several weeks' work of grading, landscaping and laying out of grounds, the first actual construction work on the Boeing Airport on Cahuenga avenue, adjoining North Hollywood on the east, has been started with the erection of tool houses. The Austin Company is the contractor.

J. P. Hayes, engineer for the contracting company, states that the work of building three hangars, several factory buildings and an administration building will be commenced at once.

BUNGALOW COURT STARTED

MAYWOOD, July 6. (Exclusive) Forrest V. Phillips has started the erection of a $24,000 bungalow court at 3652 Fifty-eighth street. The units are to be one-story structures, and there will be a total of forty-eight rooms.

ALHAMBRA PROPERTY SALE MADE

Two Parcels of Business Property Sold for Sums Totaling $425,000

ALHAMBRA, July 6. (Exclusive) Sales of business property owned by the Temple Estate Company were announced this week by the Forbes Company, local realty brokers, the total considerations amounting to $425,000.

The larger transaction involved the four-story Edison Building at the corner of Main and Third streets which was sold for $300,000 to H. L. Averill of Los Angeles, who has extensive holdings in the harbor district. The Edison Building was completed by the Temple Estate Company in the fall of 1927. It was erected on a ninety-nine-year leasehold. The ground belongs to a group of Hollywood investors. It is a modern store and office structure.

The second deal was the sale of the business property at the corner of Main and Fourth streets, also owned by the Temple interests, to the L. & R. Investment Company of Los Angeles for $125,000. The property has a frontage of 118 feet on Main and 145 feet on Fourth. The corner is occupied by the undertaking parlors of F. A. Utter & Son and adjoining it is the Temple Theater, with a seating capacity of 850.

The vacant property was acquired in 1921 by the Temple Estate Company for $12,500. The buildings were erected soon afterward. Prior to the purchase by the Temple Estate the two lots were owned by George Pethybridge, who paid $8000 for them in 1919.

SPORTSMAN WILL BUILD SHOWPLACE

Beverly Hills Man Erecting Mansion North of This City to Cost $500,000

A $500,000 estate, which, it is declared, will become one of the show places of California, is under construction in the foothills of the Santa Susana Mountains for E. John Brandeis, Beverly Hills millionaire sportsman. Moss and Vandegrift, contractors, 356 North Rodeo Drive, are erecting the mansion on plans prepared by Don Uhl, architect.

The estate will be known as the Open Diamond Bar Rancho. It comprises 140 acres and will include many buildings. Early California architecture is predominant, the buildings being of the low, rambling type with adobe walls, heavy hand-hewn timbers and hand-made clay tile roofs.

Other improvements are a championship-size tennis court, large polo field, swimming pool and bath-house, dance pavilion, handball court, croquet court, teahouse, tiled power house and a substantial-size bridge. A miniature lake will be stocked with fish and equipped for canoeing.

Suggestive of olden, golden days is the main residence, 126 feet long, with its broken roof levels and four-foot thick walls. Every room in the house has its own rock, open fireplace for burning logs, the one in the living-room being built of heavy volcanic rock and of Babylonian proportions. Another unique feature of the two-story living-room is the walls and mahogany plank floors, which will be covered with the heads and skins of sharpu, Dras sheep, ovis ammon, lions, tigers, leopard, rhinoceroses, etc., shot by Mr. Brandeis in Africa, India and Tibet, on his big-game hunting expeditions.

Survey Discloses Real Estate Subdivision Activity of Cities in Los Angeles Co

MANY HOMESITES OPENED FOR NEW RESIDENCES

San Fernando District Leading All Areas in Number of Tracts Under Development

Subdivision activity in Los Angeles county the first half of the year resulted in the opening of 193 new tracts, aggregating 8357 parcels of land, according to a survey made by the California Title Insurance Company. The filing of new tracts was distributed throughout the first six months of the year as follows:

	No. of Tracts.	No. of Lots.
January	29	1073
February	48	1391
March	42	2087
April	20	1284
May	30	1668
June	24	854
Total	192	8357

Los Angeles city proper accounted for seventy-one of the new subdivisions, containing in all 2530 lots. The San Fernando area led all other sections of the city, both in number of new tracts and in highest number of new lots, with fifteen subdivisions, containing in all 1051 parcels of land.

EASTERN AREA SECOND

That section of the city including Highland Park, Eagle Rock and that portion of the East Side lying north of Alhambra avenue, ranked second in number of new tracts filed with ten, aggregating 228 lots.

Other districts of the city leading in new subdivision activity the first half of the year were:

District.	No. of Tracts.	No. of Lots.
Westgate-Sawtelle	12	326
Southwest	9	443
Industrial (close in)	6	62
Venice-Del Rey	5	250
Hollywood	4	29

Long Beach led all other cities in the county with the exception of Los Angeles in new subdivision activity the first six months of the year. Thirteen new tracts, aggregating 509 lots in number, were offered the real estate investor within this period. Glendale was second with nine subdivisions totaling 195 plots, while Pasadena witnessed the opening of seven tracts containing in all sixty lots.

New subdivision activity has been especially marked in the Antelope Valley area and vicinity. Seven new tracts were placed on record in Newhall and vicinity. These subdivisions comprised 114 plots. Palmdale and Lancaster each witnessed the opening of four new subdivisions comprising 294 and eighty-four lots, respectively. An eighteen-lot tract was thrown on the market in the Little Rock district.

SANTA MONICA ACTIVE

The Santa Monica Mountains and beach area was exceptionally active in new subdivisions. Nine tracts, embracing some 827 lots, were opened to the public in this region, extending from the Palisades up into and beyond Topanga Canyon.

Aside from these especially active areas the new tracts filed the first half of the year were fairly evenly distributed throughout the county, practically every city witnessing the opening of at least one new subdivision.

for the department store and the retail store of the Sears-Roebuck Company constructed within the last year are other architectural results of retail trade development here.

One of the most outstanding buildings under construction in Long Beach at present is the fifteen-story, $1,000,000 Ocean center office building being erected at Ocean Boulevard and Pine avenue at the entrance to the new horseshoe pier and the amusement zone.

Providing the first exclusive office building for physicians, surgeons and dentists, the new structure being erected on the W. Patton-Wilson property, Eighth street and Pine avenue at a cost of $200,000, is another of the numerous changes in the skyline of the shopping district this year.

The Kress Company is erecting an addition to its quarters in the eight-story Kress Building on Pine avenue to meet the demand for additional facilities.

In the apartment district where the Riveria Building was completed early this year the Lafayette Cafe and Hotel is nearing completion. Costing $500,000 this structure at Broadway and Linden avenue will provide dining-room facilities in addition to its apartment and hotel facilities. It adjoins the Campbell Apartments completed this year.

In the nine blocks of the shopping district on Pine avenue from the ocean to Eighth street 60 per cent of the frontage has been replaced or rebuilt in the last six years, a record which is believed unequaled by the shopping district of any city of this size in the country.

ENORMOUS GAIN SHOWN IN BUILDING

Ventura Construction for Six Months Exceeds Total for All Last Year

VENTURA, July 6. (Exclusive)—With the building permit figure for the first six months of this year exceeding the total for all of 1928, new construction records of all sorts are being set by this city.

The June figure of $405,445 set a new mark for any single month. It was swelled by the inclusion of a $250,000 senior high school building and surpassed the previous high record of April, 1926, when another high school permit was issued.

The record for the first six months of this year, $1,748,608, is by all odds the biggest half-year period in the city's history and is more than double that for the same period in 1928.

Buried Walls Held Proof of Brick's Value

At Williamsburg, Va., where the old section of the little city is being restored to its original colonial-day aspect, brick foundations recently have been uncovered after having been lost track of for possibly a century or more. Most of these early Williamsburg houses were built 200 or more years ago. Many of them require very little restoration.

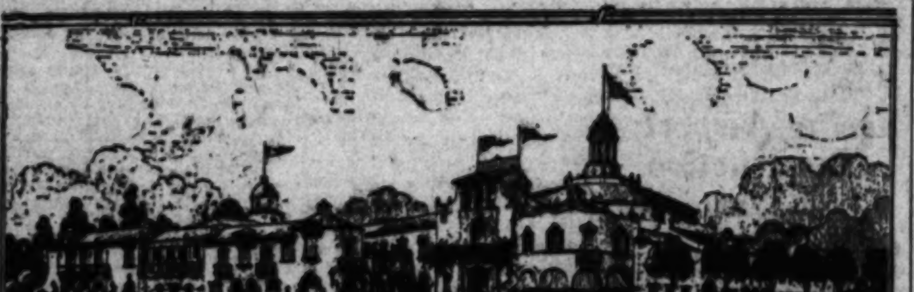
This fact is cited as emphasizing the unequaled merit of the brick foundation wall. In these particular instances the foundations were as firm as when they were originally laid. The bricks suffered no measure of damage from the long burial and the mortar showed no evidence of disintegration.

TO EXCAVATE SITE

C. G. Willis & Sons have recorded the contract to excavate the site of the California Club at 538 South Flower street.

ART CENTER DEVELOPMENT LAUNCHED

Alhambra Structure Will Be Started Shortly



ALHAMBRA, July 6. (Exclusive) Completion of the architects' plans for the proposed new art structure to be known as the Biarritz, and which is to be built here at the corner of Main street and Hampton Court, was announced today by John J. Tyrell, who added that ground would be broken for the structure at an early date.

Mr. Tyrell is president and general manager of Biarritz Incorporated, Ltd., a Delaware corporation which has sponsored the project, to represent a $1,000,000 investment when completed, according to Louis Du P. Millar and Edward A. Hayes, associated Pasadena architects. The other officers are Fred C. Schallau, Pasadena, and C. L. Tyrell, Alhambra, vice-presidents; Edward Roeth, Pasadena, treasurer, and Joseph M. Wapner, Los Angeles, secretary.

The proposed building is expected to develop into an art center, and will contain a theater, seating 800, banquet and dining-rooms, ballroom, art galleries and studios, billiard room and bowling alleys, Castilian arcades, promenades, patios, sunken gardens, fountain, shops, subterranean garage for 250 cars, and many other features. The site comprises 57,210 square feet, and it is proposed to have the building completed before the Christmas holidays. It will be of Class A and C construction.

Plans for the structure have been approved by the Alhambra City Commission.

CALIFORNIANS DRAW HONORS

Realty Men Here Prominent in National Board

Many Given Recognition by Boston Convention

This City Slated as Place of 1932 Meeting

California realtors were awarded additional places of recognition in the National Association of Real Estate Boards at the Boston convention presided over by President Harry H. Culver.

J. Bradley Clayton of San Jose, president of the California Real Estate Association, was elected fifth regional vice-president, with jurisdiction over the far western States. This presages a closer contact between Realtors of Arizona, Nevada and California. Clayton is working with Past President Hal Hotchkiss to bring about this desired cooperation.

Robert Baker of Los Angeles, treasurer of the California Real Estate Association and for many years one of its directors and most active workers, was elected director of the national association for the three-year term beginning in January 1930. The national midwinter meeting for next year has been invited to Phoenix, Ariz., and the national midsummer convention of the realtors is tentatively slated for Los Angeles in 1932, the Olympiad year, and thus Baker will be a prime factor in these great events for the West.

HANSON HONORED

Hal G. Hotchkiss of San Diego, State president last year, was elected chairman of the States council which is the contact body between the 650 local boards and the Nation Association. It is known as the Senate of the realtors, and the chairman virtually becomes the lieutenant-governor of the realtors' Senate. By virtue of his office Hotchkiss becomes a national director for the year 1930.

Peter Hanson of Glendale, chairman of the State appraisal division of the California Real Estate Association, was made vice-chairman of the national appraisal division and is a member of the executive committee. Hanson has become a national authority on appraisals as a result of his work in California. Last year he won the national appraisal championship.

John N. D. Griffith of San Diego was elected chairman of the national realtor secretaries division. He was vice-chairman during the past year and has served for several years on the board of directors.

W. R. Alexander, president of the Santa Monica Bay District Realty Board, was made first vice-president of the multiple listing division.

Californians who participated in the national program included Mason Case, Los Angeles; Frank J. Buckley, Los Angeles; G. D. Robertson, Los Angeles, who is an alternate States councillor; Charles F. Stern, Los Angeles financier; W. M. Patch, who represented Redlands in the home-town contest; George C. Boardman of San Francisco, member of the board of directors; Tom Ingersoll, who acted as chairman of the credentials committee and was awarded a recognition by the national convention for his general worth to the real estate business; Leslie Burks of San Francisco, who addressed the secretaries; A. J. Delano, secretary, Sacramento; Aileen Via, assistant State secretary California Real Estate Association.

Runnymede
"—has courag character & abi says Dr. Schell

MR. EDWIN A. SCHELL, ex-president of Iowa Wesleyan College, and former Red Cross official, finds in Runnymede ideal of an investment and says so in no uncertain language.

Dr. Schell's letter, reproduced herewith, forceful and logical, and clearly sets forth reasons for his purchase. He believed Runnymede at the outset, and after of ownership, is more firmly convinced ever of the value of his investment.

Dr. Schell, like hundreds of other Runnymede owners, is enjoying an income from flock of hens and creating a heritage his land ownership which is part of the Runnymede Income Plan.

If you haven't seen Runnymede, you missed one of the most interesting Southern California. Operating the World's Largest Poultry Plant, where more 265,000 hens have been installed, Runnymede is one of the Southland's greatest tries.

If you haven't investigated Runnymede and acquainted yourself with the details the Runnymede Income Plan, you are looking the outstanding investment opportunity of the day. Runnymede offers you tinctive investment found nowhere else.

By all means see Runnymede. Drive to the big plant and learn how you come a Runnymede owner, or send for trated folder giving full details.

Read Dr. Schell's Letter

Last May one of the most successful business men in America told me, how years ago, he bought stock in a manufacturing plant that has since paid an almost incredible profit.

They made and sold a utility used in every American home; they had responsible and capable officials; they operated on a large scale, and early secured mass production.

Runnymede appeals to me in that same way. Their product is a universal food; the present production staggers ordinary thinking, and by combining 1000 units—soon to be 2000—they are able to compass an immense and legitimate profit. The men in control have courage, character and ability.

By taking one unit and a small holding of Runnymede stock, I intended to help build up California and the San Fernando Valley, and to secure a regular monthly income. Now I find myself participating in a giant enterprise that is just putting on its NINE-LEAGUE boots.

I am satisfied beyond mere words with my investment.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Edwin A. Schell.

Building-Loan Federation Formed to Strengthen State Companies

RESERVE FUND DECLARED RESOURCE SAFEGUARD

Clearinghouse Idea Embodied in Plan to Place Loans in Sections Requiring Capital

[illegible] on lines comparable to the Federal Reserve Bank, the [illegible]-Loan Federation of California, Inc., has been organized [illegible] California building and loan associations for the purpose [illegible] their resources, now approaching the $500,000,000 [illegible] and which are increasing at the rate of $100,000,000 [illegible] of widening the building-loan field, Gilbert H. Beese[illegible]-manager of the Guaranty Building and Loan As[illegible], who is a director of the reserve corporation, announced [illegible]. A reserve fund of $5,000,000 will be made available. [illegible] associations have 352,108 members and investors. [illegible] that California build[illegible] loan association resources [illegible] in five years, [illegible] declared that the re[illegible] through its clear[illegible] function presents enor[illegible] for beneficial use [illegible] and encouraging the [illegible] rehabilitation of homes [illegible] where such activities [illegible]. Construction through[illegible] will be strengthened [illegible] reserve corporation's co[illegible], he said.

[illegible] OUTLINED

[illegible] with Milo R. Rob[illegible] of the building-loan [illegible] Mr. Beesemyer, outlined [illegible] corporation's plans as [illegible]

[illegible] of the reserve cor[illegible] is to provide a central [illegible] of credit which will be [illegible] sound and worthy build[illegible] loan associations to meet [illegible] and emergency with[illegible], to aid in the bet[illegible] of associations by [illegible] a desire for such super[illegible] and third, to aid in the [illegible] of building-loan [illegible] working in a limited way [illegible] of a clearinghouse.

[illegible] toward accumulating a [illegible] of credit it is proposed [illegible] association becoming a [illegible] of Building-Loan Federation of California, Inc., will hold [illegible] a reserve with the [illegible] through purchase of its [illegible] certificates, this reserve [illegible] addition to the investment [illegible] association in the [illegible] of the federation and [illegible] at an agreed rate to be set forth in the investment certificates issued.

The capital stock payments will be sufficient to enable the federation to issue investment certificates as needed, and probably will be held as deposits in carefully selected banks in California and in New York City. The amount of reserve deposits which member associations will be asked to carry with the federation has been set at one-half of 1 per cent of the withdrawable investment funds of the respective member associations. The moneys thus accumulated, together with the capital stock payments and the bank credit which should be available after completion of stock payments for the shares of the Building-Loan Federation stock now being subscribed, should make available for purposes of the reserve a total of approximately $5,000,000.

CLEARINGHOUSE IDEA

The clearinghouse function of the reserve corporation has tremendous possibilities for beneficial use. For instance, in some sections of the State there are at certain times of the year sums of money offered for investment in building-loan association considerably in excess of loan requirements in such localities at the immediate time, while old, thoroughly sound and well-managed associations in other sections have requests for excellent loans which they are unable to meet through lack of funds. The federation would be in a position to remedy this situation by mobilizing funds where and when they are most needed.

Another valuable service coming within the scope of the clearinghouse functions of the reserve corporation is that of lessening competition from other loaning agencies.

OLD BROADWAY LANDMARK PASSES INTO HISTORY

Ten-Story Building Will Replace Famous Early Motion-Picture Playhouse

PASSING of practically the last of Broadway's interesting old landmarks took place recently when workmen removed the last of Tally's "New Broadway" Theater to make way for erection of the new $2,000,000 addition to the May Company's building between Eighth and Ninth streets.

Tally's was Los Angeles's finest palace of the cinema from 1910 to 1920, seating the then remarkable audience of 900 patrons. Some of motion-picture exhibition's most picturesque history was made in this theater, the showing of feature-length pictures having its birth there, together with the extended-program run. Running of the same picture for an entire week and later carrying a program for two weeks by Tally's startled the city and began what is common practice today.

The "New Broadway" was built in 1910 by T. L. Tally and succeeded Tally's former theater at Sixth street on the present site of Silverwood's. The latter house seated 500 patrons, while Tally's first theater, situated at Third and Main streets, had a seating capacity of 250.

The final program of the theater just razed to make room for the city's progress was held on the last day of April, concluding a continuous exhibition of nineteen years to a day. T. L. Tally, its founder, had been in the motion-picture show business for twenty-nine years.

A modern, steel-frame building of ten stories with basement and subbasement will be reared in place of the old wood and brick one-story building. It will have a frontage of sixty feet on Broadway and Hill street and a depth of 322 feet. Consolidated Steel Corporation has the contract for fabrication and erection of steel. Work of assembling the steel frame is scheduled to start immediately, according to Ford J. Twaits, executive vice-president of the steel corporation.

J. V. McNeil Company are the general contractors. Aleck Curlett is the architect.

SIX BOARDS FILL QUOTA SCHEDULED

Pasadena Realty Group in Lead Throughout State for Membership Honors

The six real-estate boards in the fourteenth district of the California Real Estate Association have made their quotas of memberships, according to State Secretary Glenn D. Willaman and comprise the initial district in the State to gain this distinction. The boards are Palm Springs, Riverside, Ontario-Upland, San Bernardino, Pomona and Redlands and the district vice-president is Frank C. Nye, who conducts monthly meetings of the board officers. The district is keeping a close check on the part-time salesmen. More than 200 realtors and salesmen are enrolled in the boards.

The California Real Estate Association now has fifty-five gold-star boards, meaning those which have made their quotas of membership, this being a new high level for the association rolls as of July 1, and President Clayton hopes for a complete 100 per cent by quarterly directors' meeting at Eureka August 9-10.

The Pasadena Real Estate Board, with more than 100 brokers and 200 salesmen, is the largest board yet to make its complete quota as assigned at the beginning of the year. The Pasadena district, which embraces Alhambra with eighty-nine members, is headed by Vice-President Carroll S. Nelson. Other boards are Arcadia, San Marino, South Pasadena and Wilmar. President E. V. Latham forecasts that the Alhambra board will pass the 100 mark shortly.

Advancement Predicted for Development

"During the next two to three years a great growth will come to the district of which the Bicknell property, known as Montebello Park Golf Club unit, is the heart."

This was the message of J. B. Ransom, president of the corporation bearing his name, to more than seventy-five branch managers of the Ransom organization throughout Southern California, who gathered for dinner during the past week at Montebello Park Golf Club as guests of the corporation.

In outlining the expansion program of the organization in that district, Mr. Ransom pointed out to those gathered that the time has come when the purchase of Bicknell property will reward investors. This conclusion, he stated, is based upon the near completion of Garfield avenue from Pasadena to Whittier Boulevard and from there to the sea, which will make the intersection of Garfield avenue and Beverly Boulevard one of the Southland's outstanding major intersections.

Steel Making Film Released by Government

Taking further advantage of the educational possibilities of motion pictures the United States Bureau of Mines has just released a three-reel "thriller" illustrating the process of steel making.

Particular emphasis was placed by the film on the making of alloy steels, without which modern industry could not function, according to the bureau's announcement received yesterday by Consolidated Steel Corporation, Los Angeles. Visualization of the entire process has been made possible through preparation of the picture.

Steel making is one of the most exact of sciences in the entire field of industry, officials of the steel corporation pointed out. Opening scenes of the film picturize operations of the blast furnace, where manufacture of steel really begins with the making of pig iron from iron ore. There is also shown in detail the adding of other metals, such as nickel, chromium and molybdenum, to the steel to form the alloys.

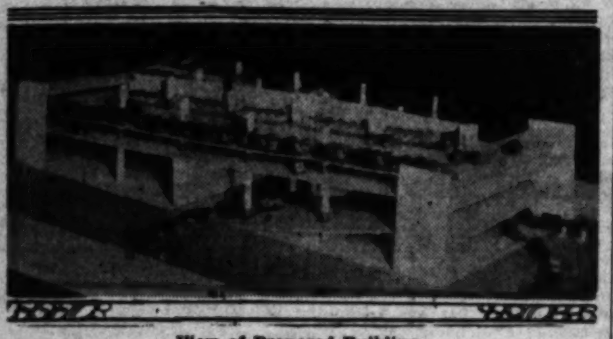
The film will be available for showing in Southern California schools.

NEWHALL IMPROVEMENT

The engineering department of the Southern California Telephone Company, Los Angeles, is preparing plans for a new $145,000 building to be erected at Newhall to house long-distance equipment neccasary for the Los Angeles-San Francisco circuits, it was announced yesterday.

NEW PARKING PLAN ANNOUNCED

Skyscrapers May House Automobiles



View of Proposed Building

LOS ANGELES soon may have limit-height buildings as a solution of its parking problems under plans prepared by J. J. Roche, manager of the Merchants Parking Company, 902 Broadway Arcade Building. Roche proposes structures advantageously placed in downtown districts as a solution of the difficulty now encountered by shoppers in finding a place to park. The organization is seeking advantageous sites for such structures.

Under Roche's plan now in effect on a smaller scale and which is said to be indorsed by downtown merchants as a relief from the present parking difficulties, the company sells scrip to merchants. The scrip so purchased by the merchant is given to the customer in an amount commensurate with the amount of the purchase. The scrip is acceptable at any one of sixteen centrally located parking stations and garages who in turn then clear the scrip for payment through the Merchants Parking Company. In this way the downtown merchant provides a parking space for his customer without the expense of owning or maintaining a parking station of his own.

The Merchants Parking Company would augment its present plan with limit-height buildings of fifteen floors, five of them being beneath street level. The buildings would cost approximately $1,750,000 each and face three streets. They would consist of approximately seventy-eight city streets one above the other on which four cars could pass and in which thousands of automobiles could be parked.

Plans for the proposed structure have been prepared by Kenneth MacDonald, Jr., architect. Roche, with a number of associates, is seeking a location for the first structure of this type.

TITLE FIRM OPENS NEW OFFICE UNIT

Inaugural of Structure at El Centro Celebrated Last Week by Company

EL CENTRO, July 6. (Exclusive) An informal opening of the new office of the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company here was held during last week, following the completion of the building erected by the company.

The structure, of Spanish architecture with arcaded sidewalks, is considered one of the outstanding business units of El Centro. Construction of the building, which is the tenth of a series of branch offices to be erected by the company in as many counties of Central and Southern California, was started several months ago.

The front portion of the building is one story in height. The rear portion, however, rises to a height of two stories and contains an enormous vault. This vault will permanently house the records pertaining to titles in Imperial county.

FACT AND COMMENT

ment depends, in no small measure, on stabilization of values. Any time that a municipality places an unjustified value on a particular tract, the inherent worth of surrounding tracts are more or less demoralized. In this particular case, assessment and taxation standards for near-by lots would be thrown completely out of line, creating an inequitable situation and seriously injuring the marketability of the land.

Not only will the confirmation of assessments be opposed at the August hearing, but abandonment of the park project in its entirety will be requested. A detailed study of the situation indicates that the latter procedure is most advisable.

Manchester Widening

With an appropriation of $100,000, the Board of Supervisors last week materially advanced the project to open and widen two stretches of Manchester avenue; one from McKinley to Wall streets, the other from Avalon Boulevard to St. Andrews Place.

Similar aid is expected from the city with the balance of the cost of the work to fall on individual taxpayers whose holdings will be enhanced by the improvement.

Eventually Manchester avenue will be a 100-foot highway from the Orange county line to the sea. When that has been accomplished the street will take its proper place as a major cross-town artery with resulting increases in value of all contiguous land. The present traffic congestion, made dense by links where the street is as narrow as twenty-four feet, will also be eliminated.

Manchester's rebirth, as well as those of other important streets whose widening are in the offing, will be a costly rennaisance but well worth the expenditures.

Business Firm Acquires Space for Expansion

A new lease has been obtained by the Miller Desk and Safe Company from the I. W. Hellman estate on stores located on Second street between Spring and Broadway with a rental involving about $100,000. An addition adjoining the present stores will be remodeled at a cost of $10,000.

J. Miller, the proprietor, has been established in the same location for the past ten years and has seen his store frow from one of eighteen feet frontage to one of 130 feet frontage.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

SPANISH TYPE HOME FAVORED

This Style Declared Most Popular Here

Company Analyzes Choice of Californians

Factory Construction Part of Firm Activity

An analysis of home building development in metropolitan Los Angeles shows the continued popularity of Spanish or Mediterranean types of homes, according to a report issued by the construction department of the Los Angeles Investment Company. Next in preference among home builders come English, French-Norman and quaint Monterey types.

The Los Angeles Investment Company has been actively engaged in building homes for more than twenty years, not only in the southwestern part of the city where they have concentrated in real estate developments, but also in other rapidly growing sections.

BUSINESS CENTER BUILT

Viewpark, the largest real estate development of the company, is being made a choice residential district. To serve the hundreds of homes in this community, a business center already has been established on Angeles Mesa at the intersection of Vernon. Improvements completed here by the company include electric and telephone wires in underground conduits, macadamized streets and cement curbs and sidewalks. Carob trees have been planted along the streets and a number of attractively landscaped parks have been provided to further enhance the natural beauty of this view community.

Home owners are being protected by restrictions and have selected this district because of the view of city, mountains and surrounding country, easy accessibility to the Los Angeles business district and because of transportation facilities.

MODEL HOMES OPENED

In keeping abreast with the modern vogue in home construction, the Los Angeles Investment Company has built several model homes of the "Barcelona" type which are open for public inspection at Viewpark. Many of the latest developments in home enjoyment have been incorporated in these new homes.

In addition to building homes, the Los Angeles Investment Company has constructed many industrial plants and commercial buildings throughout the city, including limit-height, Class A structures in downtown districts.

Some of the subsidiaries of this institution are the Los Angeles Investment Securities Corporation, Investment Building and Loan Association, Investment Insurance Agency and the Los Angeles Investment Trust Company.

New Highway Held Spur to Development

The opening of Malibu Highway is reported to have been responsible in the past week for greatly enlivened sales activity at Rancho Malibu La Costa, a development of the Harold G. Ferguson Corporation.

The extension of this scenic coast link highway is said to protect property owners against traffic congestion. While previously motorists were forced to return over the same route of travel a large per cent of the traffic will now continue on to Oxnard and other routes north.

"The number of motorists who have been paying visits to the property during the last week has tripled now that Rancho Malibu La Costa has become such an important link in the motor travel along the south coast," Ferguson officials declare.

"Buyers are regarding their purchase as an investment since they realize that values will increase, naturally through a development as important as the Malibu Highway."

OPENING OF RECREATION TRACT TOLD

Sherwood Lake Property on Ventura Boulevard Will Be Sold as Villa Sites

Opening of a 2500-acre privately owned tract of mountain and valley land surrounding Lake Sherwood as an all-year outdoor playground was announced yesterday by James R. Canterbury, Jr., and E. E. Modine, developers.

The property, which is thirty-two miles out Ventura Boulevard north of Hollywood, has been named Sherwood Lake Estates. Villa sites are to be sold around the 200-acre lake.

This recreation ground, five miles inland from the newly opened Roosevelt Highway and extending to within 1000 feet of Ventura Boulevard in the vicinity of Triunfo, is acknowledged to be one of the most scenic areas in Southern California. Great clusters of California oaks, wide valleys, gently sloping hillsides, jutting promontories of native rock and spring-fed streams and lakes provide an unusual combination of natural attractiveness. The property is so noted for its beauty that it is a favorite setting for motion-picture concerns, more than 600 motion pictures having been taken on the grounds.

A magnificent clubhouse near the lake is practically finished. Roads and other improvements, costing thousands of dollars, have been completed. Sherwood Forest, from which the property derives its name, is an area of more than twenty acres in which open fire pits have been built and spring water has been made accessible for picnic parties.

Trees Utilized in Setting for Seashore Home

The architectural committee of Huntington Palisades has approved the plans which have been drawn for an English-type home to be erected at Huntington Palisades for Roy Castner of the Parmelee-Dohrmann Company, Los Angeles.

"In planning a home for the Castness in Huntington Palisades," says L. A. Hardie, sales manager of the Huntington Palisades division of the Santa Monica Land and Water Company, "full advantage was taken of the natural beauty of the seven fine old trees on the site. These trees harmonize with the type of English architecture employed and with the stone and timber type of construction. The home is to be of two stories and will represent an investment of approximately $25,000."

LIBRARY TO BE ERECTED

The Los Angeles board of library commissioners soon will call for bids for the erection of a new branch library building at 1005 West Sixty-fourth street, it was announced yesterday by Architect H. F. Whitney. It will be of brick construction and will cost approximately $22,000.

The first prize for five to seven-room residence was won by H. Roy Kelley, first prize for eight to twelve-room residence was won by Gordon B. Kaufmann.

Among the honorable mentions were plans proposed by David J. Witmer and Loyall F. Watson.

NEW HOMES IN RANCHO ANNOUNCED

Corporation Santa Fe Tells of Three Residences Which Will Cost $200,000

Three homes in Rancho Santa Fe costing $200,000 have been announced by officials of the Rancho Santa Fe Corporation. They are the homes of Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gilbert and Mr. and Mrs. Glen W. Tomlinson.

The Bishop is a beautiful Spanish house with twenty-two rooms. It was designed by Marston & Maybury, Pasadena architects. The development of the Bishop country estate of more than fifty acres includes also riding stables, tennis courts, swimming pool, and elaborate landscaping.

The Gilbert home is located in the heart of a 2000-acre eucalyptus grove through the swaying branches of which are charming vistas of San Dieguito Valley. It is built of Adobelar brick with shake roof, following the motif of a Monterey house. Mr. Gilbert is president of the Chapman Valve Company at Indian Orchard, Mass. The Gilbert home was designed by Palmer Sabin, Southern California architect.

The Tomlinson home was designed by Handy L. Wass, Santa Barbara architect. It is of hacienda type construction, one-story high, with white stucco walls and red tile roof. Plans for the development of the Tomlinson estate also include the building of a swimming pool, concrete tennis courts and stables for riding horses. The swimming pool is being built on the crest of a hill in such a way that water drained from it may be used for irrigating a commercial orchard on the slope below. The Tomlinson home enjoys a delightful view of the Pacific Ocean.

On the [illegible] there has recently been [illegible] the expenditure of $250,-[illegible] replacement of rail and [illegible] ballast reinforcement. [illegible] work of reconstruc-[illegible] line through the city is [illegible]. This involves nine [illegible], new passenger [illegible] signal equipment [illegible] features. It will result [illegible] the line two-tenths of [illegible] entire program costing [illegible].

[illegible] made by the Southern [illegible] in shortening run-[illegible] trains is disclosed by [illegible] of the schedules in operation today between this city and San Francisco and those of an earlier day.

In September, 1876, the first passenger train between San Francisco and Los Angeles was operated by the Southern Pacific. The time for the trip was twenty-four hours and forty minutes.

Today the Southern Pacific's Daylight Limited makes the trip between the two cities in twelve hours.

The more rapid the transportation, the shorter the distance between two points. By this standard, in the fifty-three years that have elapsed since that first train was operated, San Francisco with its bay district, and Los Angeles and its surrounding country have been brought over 50 per cent closer together.

GRADUAL PROCESS

This improvement in transportation facilities and speed of travel was not brought about at once, but has, of necessity, been a matter of slow but continuous change.

In June, 1918 six trains were operated by the Southern Pacific daily San Francisco to Los Angeles, three via the San Joaquin Valley and three via its coast line. Northbound five trains were operated, three via the San Joaquin Valley, and two via the coast line.

At the present time nine trains are operated daily in each direction between Los Angeles and San Francisco, six via the coast line and three via the San Joaquin Valley.

In the eleven-year interval the number of passenger trains operated daily has been increased from eleven to eighteen, an increase of seven trains or 63 per cent better transportation facilities. This increase is declared due to two factors; first, the desire of the railroad to give California the best and most convenient service possible and, second, to the growth of the State.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS

In addition to the additional service provided in the past eleven years, it has been speeded. In 1918 the fastest time between San Francisco and Los Angeles was fourteen hours. Today it is twelve hours. This saving in time has been brought about by improved equipment, heavier rail, improved roadbed, shortening of line and improvement of grades.

NEW PLANT ANNOUNCED IN GLENDALE

Shoe Manufacturing Firm Setting Up Machinery in $27,000 Factory

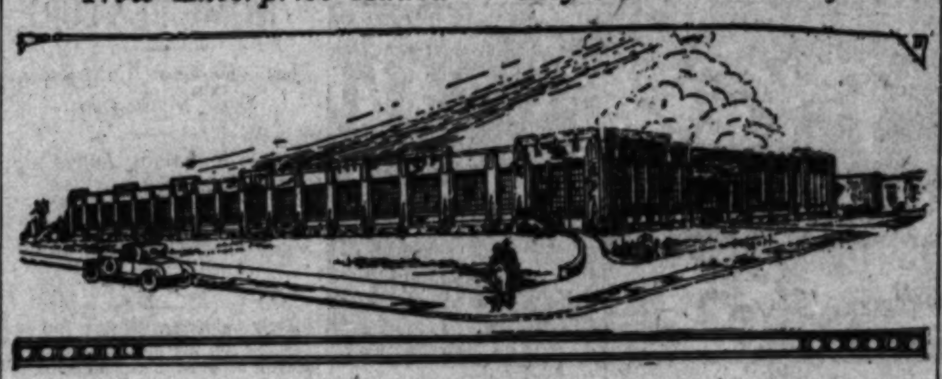
GLENDALE, July 6. (Exclusive)—Establishment of the Hollywood Shoe Manufacturing Company, Inc., that is setting up its machinery in its new $27,000 factory on Standard avenue, adds another industry to Glendale's rapidly growing list and assures employment of approximately 100 persons. The officers of the firm are A. C. Emery, president, who is also president of the Empire Bond and Mortgage Company, Pasadena; Hugo Robinson, vice-president, in charge of production; Robert W. Emery, vice-president and assistant superintendent; W. G. Torquand, secretary-treasurer, and John Scott, formerly of Lynn, Mass., as general superintendent. The plant, President Emery states, will have a daily capacity of 1500 pairs of shoes, that he expects will be increased to 5000 pairs daily within eighteen months, to supply the Pacific Coast trade, and to compete in the twelve western States with the firms in the East that are now shipping 50,000,000 pairs of shoes into this territory. Practically all of the materials used in the manufacture of shoes are to be obtained in the West, according to L. H. Wilson, president of L. H. Wilson, Inc., who erected the factory and brought about the establishment of the new industry here. The local plant will, he says, save the consumer much of the cost entailed in the shipment of raw materials to the East and the shipment of the finished product back to the West Coast. The company is being financed without the sale of any stock to the outside public.

Burbank Sites Purchased by Plane Workers

The Edwards & Wildey Company reports and increasing demand for property in its west Burbank subdivision located on Empire avenue, half way between the Boeing Airplane Company sit and the Lockheed Aircraft Company.

The sales in June have more than doubled the sales in May, totaling $78,000. A number of lots were sold for immediate improvement as the Boeing plant will employ several hundred men, and it will be necessary to have residences to to house their employees. Five homes are under construction now in this tract, with five more to be started in the next thirty days.

New Enterprise Added to City's Industrial Life



Bag Factory to Build Plant Here

Announcement was made last week by the Bates Valve Paper Bag Corporation of the selection of a site in Los Angeles for a $250,000 factory.

FIREBRICK CONTRACT LET

Largest Deal for Commodity Ever Made on Coast Consummated This Week

Denoting the rise of Los Angeles to a parity with the greatest manufacturing centers of the United States, the largest contract for special refractory firebrick ever signed on the Pacific Coast was this week awarded to Gladding, McBean & Co., largest fabricators of tile and refractories in the West, with headquarters in Los Angeles.

The contract calls for delivery of approximately 3,000,000 special firebrick, aggregating 200 railroad carloads, for use in the conversion plant of the Petroleum Conversion Corporation, of Dallas, Tex., now being erected here by C. F. Braun & Co., engineers. The Braun company recently obtained the contract for the $3,000,000 refinery, which will employ a special patented process in the production of gasoline and will be one of the largest and most modernly equipped in Western America.

Prior to the awarding of the refractory contract technical engineers on the eastern staff of the petroleum corporation made a special trip to Los Angeles. While in the city they satisfied themselves that there was a clay products company here with a sufficiently large capacity to handle the unusual order, according to Fred B. Ortman, vice-president and general manager of Gladding, McBean. It was also necessary for them to satisfy themselves that a refractory of high quality, capable of withstanding the tremendous heat generated in the refining process could be produced here in a large enough quantity.

To reassure them on the latter point, the special research laboratory at the Gladding, McBean Tropico plant was set aside for the use of the eastern experts and there, in co-operation with E. Blanckenburg, engineer for the petroleum company; E. L. Varney, chief engineer for the C. F. Braun company; J. P. Morgan, in charge of the refractory department of Gladding, McBean, and C. R. Minton, in charge of the research laboratory, experiments were conducted with the nonmetallic minerals of Southern California which fully satisfied the eastern investigators.

Deliveries on the contract will get under way in about sixty days, Mr. Ortman declared.

PLUNGE AT FONTANA TO OPEN SOON

Birthday Fiesta Provides Funds for Completion of Community Project

The financial results of Fontana's sixteenth birthday fiesta held recently have enabled work to proceed on the community plunge. It will be located in the recreation park near the Civic Center, and will be ready for use about the first of August.

At present workmen are laying pipe lines which will furnish the domestic water supply from Lytle Creek. The cement work already is in and construction of the buildings will start soon.

The architecture will be of Spanish style, with attractive colonnade, red tile roof and a tower which will be illuminated at night. The men's and women's locker rooms will be on either side of the office and main entrance, and the spectators' gallery will be erected at one end of the pool.

The opening and dedication of this new plunge is eagerly awaited by residents of Fontana, as the funds for its building were raised wholly by community effort. When completed it will represent an investment of $30,000.

CONSTRUCTION STARTS SOON

Construction will start this month on a one-story store building to be erected at Euclid avenue and Virgil street, Santa Monica, for G. S. Dennison, according to A. V. Perkinson, Los Angeles, who has the general contract. It will be Class C, 150 by 180 feet, of brick and steel construction, and will cost approximately $30,000, plans reveal.

FACTORY TO LOCATE BAG PLANT HERE

Industrial Unit to Employ 150 Persons and Will Cost $250,000

Construction of a $250,000 paper-bag plant to be located at Medford and Eastern avenues, in the city industrial tract, is announced by the Bates Valve Paper Bag Corporation a subsidiary of the St. Regis Paper Company of New York.

Approximately 150 people will be employed in the new plant which is being designed and constructed by Austin company and will be a modern day-light factory built of steel, concrete and brick.

When completed it will be served by Southern Pacific Company and will give to Southern California one of the largest and most modern plants of its type. The architects hope to have the new plant completed and ready for operation within the next sixty days.

According to D. A. Fleischman, general manager of the paper-bag division of the St. Regis Paper Company and W. S. Weaver, district manager for Bates Valve Paper Bag Corporation, 107,000 square feet of property was purchased on which they plan to erect a 360x160-foot building, equipped with the latest style machinery for manufacturing of heavy paper bags for cement, plaster and other products.

Before choosing the location for their new plant in Southern California, Joseph A. Quinlan, general traffic manager for the St. Regis Paper Bag Company, made a careful survey of traffic conditions of industrial properties in San Francisco and Bay District, but finally decided that Los Angeles would be the ideal location for the new bag company.

This will be the third expansion of the Bates Valve Corporation in the last two and one-half years.

Mason, Cole & Co., specialists in industrial property, handled the deal which makes the second new industry they have brought into this territory in the past ten days.

Manufacturer Plans Increase in Factory Unit

With plans under way for international distribution of its product, the Qualitone Corporation, with headquarters at 5360 Melrose avenue, Hollywood, shortly will enlarge its plant. The demand for the Los Angeles made talking picture projection device has exceeded the expectations of Samuel Freedman, president of the concern, and night and day shifts are being worked.

ICE MADE BY ELECTRICITY WINS FAVOR

City Department Reports Gain in Families That Use Such Refrigeration

Families, estimated at 20,000, or 80,000 individuals in Los Angeles, now enjoy the benefits of electric refrigeration in their homes, according to figures compiled for the Department of Water and Power of the city of Los Angeles.

The same report shows that all new apartment-houses are being equipped with electric refrigerators and also many of the older apartments are making installations.

Office buildings have become large users of electrical refrigeration units in connection with the cooling of drinking water systems. Industrial plants here also have made large installations. Water can be maintained constantly at a desired temperature by electric refrigeration, it is pointed out.

The popularity of electric refrigeration in Los Angeles is due in a large part to the cheap rates for current here. The Department of Water and Power provides current for an ordinary electric refrigerator at a cost to the consumer of less than 5 cents a day.

Telephones of Area Disclose Great Growth

VAN NUYS, July 6. (Exclusive)—Additional equipment costing $14,700 will be installed in the telephone exchange here, which is now handling 10,000 calls daily, according to C. C. Campbell, local manager. Total number of phones installed in the Van Nuys-Studio City area has reached 1619, as compared with 1381 a year ago.

CONSTRUCTION PLANS QUESTIONS ANSWERED

PLAN STRESSES FLOWER GARDEN

Home Design for Lovers of Out of Doors

Airiness Declared Feature of Arrangement

Seventy-Foot Lot Required for Setting

BY THEODORE A. KOETZLI

To most people there are few things in life more interesting than the pleasant adventure of building a home. And probably at no other time in the history of the country have there been available to the individual who is so inclined so many real and worth-while helps. National and local better homes associations are devoting time, talents and means in promulgating the doctrines of good design and construction. Monthly, weekly and daily journals illustrate the possible and the accomplished in these directions. And many of the manufacturers of materials are doing disinterested work to the same end. An outstanding instance of the latter is the volume of Spanish detail photographed by Richard S. Requa, A. I. A., just made available by the Monolith Portland Cement Company for the use of planners of homes.

CALIFORNIA TYPE

Today's small house is a splendid example of a particularly Californian scheme. It was designed by Horace S. Moses, and I am outlining below his thought as to its purpose and possibilities.

It is planed for the lovers of the out-of-doors, and a climate where the garden is the principal feature the year 'round. The living-room, dining-room and bedrooms open in the terrace and uninterrupted garden front. It is the same motif of airiness that has led to an arrangement where every room faces two or three exposures.

The often unsightly and disagreeable service portion is kept to the side behind a high wall and entered conveniently from the front, so that the seclusion of the outdoor garden is never open to intrusion by trades people.

The plan itself is compact and convenient. The housewife at her work is never far from both entrances and yet there are two doors between the kitchen and any other room to shut off odors. The bath is similarly insulated from all rooms by two walls. Every room is easily accessible and one need never pass through one room to reach another, the terrace openings make an emergency passage between the two wings.

SEVENTY-FOOT LOT

This of course is a suburban residence type and needs sufficient ground around it to give it a satisfactory setting. The lot should have about seventy feet frontage, but may be quite shallow.

The design is one that lends itself very successfully to adobe construction, assuming that the materials are available on the site. There are about 2000 square feet of floor area and the building cost can be probably be kept within $6000.

LONG LEASE TAKEN ON ALHAMBRA LOT

ALHAMBRA, July 6. (Exclusive) A ninety-nine-year lease on the fifty-foot lot on South Garfield avenue, adjoining the Bank of Italy Building, has been taken by Rusl G. Heiger and George Whyte, Jr., it was announced this week by the John L. Mills Company, realty broker.

The property is owned by M. W. Moomaw of Pasadena. A three-store one-story brick building will be erected.

School Group Construction Work Rushed

LAWNDALE, July 6. (Exclusive)—Construction of the Adolph Leuzinger High School group, at Rosecrans and Fourth street here is progressing rapidly, with completion scheduled for February 1, 1930. The group, being built at a cost of $400,000, forms the second plant of the Inglewood High School district of which this section is a part. It will be a four-year school and has a sixteen-acre playground to be laid out in a plan following that of the football and track field of the Los Angeles Coliseum. The school is designed as a solution to the transportation problem of the south portion of the district and to take care of the overflow of the high school at Inglewood.

The Romance of the Ranchos

By E. PALMER CONNER

(This is the seventeenth of a series of historical sketches on Southern California Ranchos, written by E. Palmer Conner, chief title searcher of the Title Insurance and Trust Company.)

Rancho Los Verdes has been the scene of some of the earliest as well as the latest development in Los Angeles county. For more than thirty years before Willmore platted Willmore city, later called Long Beach, and before Jones and Baker laid out their harbor city of Santa Monica there had been a thriving settlement at the port of San Pedro in the Rancho Los Palos Verdes.

The town of San Pedro, later city of San Pedro, and now part of the city of Los Angeles, was built around that port settlement and almost the entire district was carved not out of the Rancho San Pedro, as is generally understood, but out of the rancho Los Palos Verdes.

LARGE ACREAGE

The rancho was granted June 3, 1846, by Gov. Pio Pico to Jose Loreto Sepulveda and Juan Sepulveda, brothers, and extended from Redondo to Wilmington and was bounded on the north and northeast by Rancho San Pedro and on the southeast, south and west by the Pacific Ocean. It comprised 31,629 acres. Pico, however, reserved a plat of land along the beach, 500 varas square, for the use of the "superior government of the Mexican nation."

With the death of the original grantees and the passing of the ranch title to their many heirs, Rancho Los Palos Verdes passed into a period of extensive litigation and had the rancho not been of such tremendous size and of such constantly increasing value in all probability it soon would have belonged to the attorneys. From 1865 to 1880 seventy-eight lawsuits were instituted involving the rancho. The ranch title itself was contested and it was not until 1880 that the United States finally confirmed Pico's grant.

All of the heirs and their successors in interest held undivided parts of the rancho and six partition suits were filed before the property was divided according to the respective ownerships. There were also a dozen suits to eject squatters, several divorces among the owners, three condemnation suits by the United States government for land for the lighthouse at Point Fermin, an action to fix the boundaries of Timms Landing at the port, two foreclosure actions and several complaints for possession.

The commissioners in one of the partition suits platted the town of San Pedro, composed of ninety-eight blocks and this plat filled the twofold purpose of making an easy method of dividing the property among the partitioners and of providing for the growth of the settlement at the harbor.

HILLS RETAINED

In the years that followed the east part of the rancho progressed rapidly while thousands of acres in the hills from Point Fermin to Redondo were retained in a few ownerships and the land used only for farming. Few people ever saw the rugged coast of Palos Verdes, although Malaga Cove, Rocky Point, Point Vicente, Long Point, Portuguese Point and Portuguese Bend were all known to fishermen.

In 1913 for a consideration of nearly $2,000,000 the western part of the rancho was conveyed to Jay Lawyer and Frank Vanderlip, the latter a leading financier of New York. Palos Verdes Estates was conceived in 1922 to develop this part of the property and to make a world-famous community of homes. The rancho of the Sepulvedas is a perfect setting for this effort.

MORTGAGES AND TRUST DEEDS

In the last two articles we compared the procedure when default occurred under a mortgage or trust deed respectively. In either case the mortgagor or trustor may step in and pay off the claims against him, between the time foreclosure proceedings begin and final disposition is made of the default cases, that is, the day after foreclosure proceedings have started he may pay the mortgage in full with interest due, plus whatever expense mortgagee has had with the case to date. He cannot, however, reinstate the mortgage or trust deed simply by paying the delinquent interest or installments, unless mortgagee or beneficary agrees to such settlement.

POWER OF SALE

Mortgages are sometimes made with power of sale, in which case they may be sold by parties empowered to do so, in the same manner as trust deeds. This may seem rather simple. However, there seems to be considerable confusion in regard to such mortgages. It appears that our law makers who, evidently had in mind to place mortgages on the same footing as trust deeds, more or less, by providing for such power of sale, did not quite "follow through," forgetting apparently that there are some basic differences between the two instruments which were not taken into account, but which would make quite a difference when it came to actual cases.

The courts themselves seemed in some instances to confuse the two instruments and have referred to "deed of trust" and "mortgages with power of sale" in the same breath as though the terms were undistinguishable. The confusing feature about such a mortgage seems to arise when title is acquired by a purchaser who is also the holder of the mortgage and note. In some cases it has been held that where mortgagee purchases under such sale, the sale is voidable, but only at the instance of the mortgagor and action must be brought within a reasonable time. In other cases it has been held that the holder of the mortgage can secure good title without the right of redemption, provided the sale is conducted in a fair manner and there are no defects in the declaration of default or notice and terms of sale. The early California cases leaned towards the first view while later cases seemed to favor the second view. This latter view, however, is more or less nullified by the fact that in the cases mentioned the court referred to deeds of trust and mortgages with power of sale as being practically the same thing, while the decisions themselves referred specifically to trust deeds. Inasmuch as the opinions of the authorities differ on this, we would question the advisability of the mortgagee buying in the property at a sale under such power. In any event, do not do so until you have discussed the matter thoroughly with your attorney.

We notice in a recent statement that a court decision was to the effect that the holder of a note and mortgage in the case under discussion cannot be a purchaser and that a sale to the mortgagee or holder of note and mortgage is void. We find that this case, however, was only an appellate case and the mortgage in question was a chattel mortgage. Furthermore, the sale was set aside chiefly on the ground that it was conducted unfairly. It cannot, therefore, be taken as establishing a precedent.

If there is any doubt as to whether the instrument is a trust deed or a mortgage it will be considered a mortgage. (135 Cal. 277.) It is a trust deed only if a trust is created. Giving a deed at delinquency in order to obviate foreclosure of a mortgage is a dangerous procedure unless mortgagor receives a reasonable compensation for his property and it is given in full settlement of the debt and there are no other incumbrances. Any junior incumbrances would continue to attach to the property. Foreclosure would clear the property of these incumbrances.

When note secured by a trust deed is paid, beneficiary must make out a request for full reconveyance or subject himself to damages and a fine. A release of the mortgage must similarly be made by the mortgagee or his assignee when it is paid in full. Failure to do so will make him liable for damages and a fine as in the case of a trust deed. Reconveyances of trust deeds and releases or satisfactions of mortgages must be acknowledged and recorded in order to clear the records of the incumbrances created by such mortgage and trust deed.

The reconveyance should be made to whomsoever is in possession of the property at the time, but the canceled note should be given by the trustee to the original maker thereof. The canceled note secured by a mortgage should similarly be given to its maker. As the cancellation of the note destroys the mortgage, it makes very little difference what becomes of the mortgage after its release or satisfaction. It is sometimes burned with appropriate ceremonies to celebrate the so-called "lifting of the mortgage."

VACANCY IN TRUSTEESHIP

In case of vacancy under the trusteeship under a trust deed, unless instrument provides for the appointment of other trustee, the Superior Court must appoint such trustee (Sec. 2287-89 of C. C.) A beneficiary over 14 years of age has right to make a nomination, which otherwise is at the court's discretion. (See also 158 Cal. 390 and 91 Cal. 191.) Such a contingency would not likely occur if a corporation (trust company or bank) were made the trustee. In case of a lost note secured by a trust deed, a surety bond for twice the amount will usually be asked for by the trustee to protect him against any claims by any who may appear with the lost note, before reconveyance or sale is made under trust deed, as it is required that note and trust deed must be surrendered to trustee before a reconveyance is made when note has been paid or sale is made on default.

SPACIOUSNESS HOME FEATURE

Plan Depicts Californian Type Architecture

House Embodies Latest of Conveniences

Dwelling May be Erected on Small Lot

Early Californian in style and an example of the spaciousness that may be achieved in a small house, is the offering from the Small Home Plan Bureau under the supervision of the Los Angeles Architectural Club, the Architects' League of Hollywood and the Pasadena Architectural Club. The plan was submitted to the bureau by J. F. Cavanaugh, architect.

SEVEN-ROOM HOME

This plan of a seven-room house embodies modern conveniences, such as automatic refrigeration, unit heat, tile baths, radio equipment, complete electric-lighting system, etc.

Open trusses in the living-room lend height and spaciousness, and the large open fireplace, suitable for burning logs, expresses a feeling of hospitality and comfort.

Bedroom No. 1 is so situated that it may be used advantageously either as a maid's room or a guest room. The master bedroom is declared unusually large for a house of this size. All of the bedrooms have cross-ventilation and the closet space is more than ample. The halls are so arranged that it is possible to go from one part of the house to another without passing through any of the rooms.

COST APPROXIMATED

The house may be built for approximately $6500, contains about 1780 square feet and may be built on a fifty-foot lot. Working drawings and specifications may be seen at the Small Home Plan Bureau in the Architects' Building at Fifth and Figueroa streets.

Many Schools Being Erected in Arizona

PHOENIX, July 6. (Exclusive)—Fifteen school districts of Maricopa county are spending $1,308,500 this summer on school buildings to be ready for the opening of the 1929-30 term in the fall.

The largest program is being carried out in Phoenix, where $625,000 is being used for the erection of a new junior college, a new high school auditorium, and several classroom structures.

Phoenix grammar school district is spending $270,000 for construction of two new buildings and additions to another.

Tolleson, in the west end of Salt River Valley, has just finished a $75,000 high school. Litchfield is spending $34,000 and Buckeye $36,000 for high school purposes. Creighton district northeast of Phoenix, has voted $75,000 in bonds for expansion. Various other districts have buildings under way that are to cost from $6000 to $35,000.

New Dwellings Being Erected at El Segundo

EL SEGUNDO, July 6. (Exclusive)—Among many dwellings under construction here, are two units of a six unit bungalow court at 205 North Oak street being built by W. E. Benson at a cost of $4300 each.

Several single dwellings costing $4000 and more are under construction, building reports show. Some of the builders are Howard G. Vesper, 609 Tenth street; A. J. Sullivan, 415 Concord street and A. A. Tinney, 607 Eucalyptus avenue.

HOSPITAL PLANNED

De Camp-Hudson Company has a permit to build a $65,000 Class A hospital for A. C. Fry at 14500 Sherman Way.

Home Builders' Primer

By REX AVON

Question: In looking over a set of specifications I note several proper names. Why is this done?

Answer: A good architect will invariably specify standard building materials and accessories by name because the manufacturer's reputation always stands behind them.

Q.: We will probably build our home soon. What do you think of brick veneer for a conventional English residence?

A.: Brick veneer is advocated by good contractors because it makes a sturdy and economical building. The brick work should be placed on a substantial wood frame, which has been tightly sheathed with solid boarding and placed on a solid foundation.

Q.: What does it cost to operate an electric range—an electric refrigerator?

A.: An electric range in a family of two or three will average about $2.50 per month. An electric refrigerator should average from $1.25 to $2 per month.

Q.: Is it cheaper to own your own home than to pay rent?

A.: Yes, if the prospective home owner does not yield to the temptation to assume a greater financial responsibility than he is able to carry. Ask yourself these questions without optimism or bias. How much can I afford to pay? How much money have I on hand and how much can I borrow? What is my income and what of its stability, growth or increase? What is my present rent? How much of my income can I save? The satisfactory home is the one that does not absorb too much of the family's income and running expense.

Q.: I own a property which is well located and structurally sound but not modern in design and equipment. Would it pay to have it modernized and how would one proceed?

A.: Modernizing pays big dividends in the form of increased values and modern comforts and conveniences. To secure a "balanced job" it is best to consult an architect who will not be apt to overdo certain parts such as plumbing and electrical fixtures and will give sufficient attention to removal of partitions, changes of stairways, roof lines, stucco-overcoating, etc.

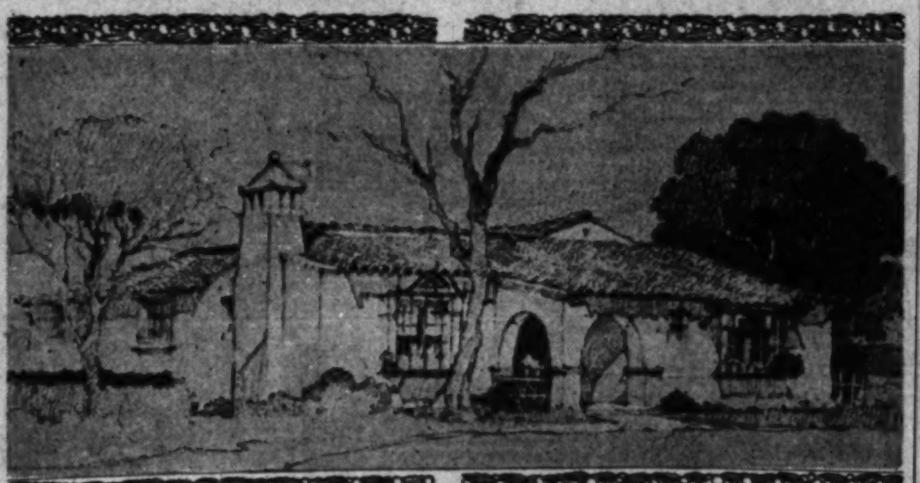
ARIZONA CITY TO GET WATER PLANT

MIAMI (Ariz.) July 6. (Exclusive)—So many new homes are being built in Central Heights, a subdivision between Miami and Globe, that Tom West, the subdivider and original owner of the property, has obtained a public utility franchise and will install a pumping plant of 30,000 gallons' daily capacity. West is also planning to build a water plant for Midland City and Little Acres, where about thirty-five homes are now dependent on wells.

CHARM BEARS NO RELATION TO COST



Distinguished by Long Rambling Lines

That architectural charm and distinction have no relation to either the size or the cost of a home, is aptly illustrated by the accompanying sketch of a Spanish country cottage now being built by the American Builders, Inc., for a private owner in Pasadena.

"This six-room cottage has grace and pleasing personality," says John N. Douglas, chief of the American Builders' designing staff, "because it is authentic in line, because it will comfortably meet the needs of the family that is to occupy it, and because it will be in perfect harmony with its environment. If it failed in any one of these three respects it would not be regarded as a successful piece of construction."

Mr. Douglas, who is a member of the American Institute of Architects, says that as soon as the public realizes that unreasonable amounts of money need not be expended in the erection of charming homes, they, and the communities in which they build, will benefit.

The Spanish cottage illustrated is distinguished by its low rambling lines, the bell-tower chimney which is found in parts of Southern Spain and the pleasing lines of its porch arches. The tile floor of the porch is carried through the living-room of the house and adds materially to the rustic effect of the interior.

ATTORNEY DEFINES DE

Legal Terms Used in Conveyance of P Explained by Los Angeles Lawye

BY N. B. NELSON

Member of the Los Angeles Bar

In a deed it is essential that there be two partie making the deed who is called the "grantor," and the pers the property is conveyed who is called the grantee. In ord be a valid deed it is essential there be a grantor capable of the property. And it is likewise essential there be a grant receiving title to the property.

Where the property is transferred to a fictitious person, such grant is void and does not pass title out of the grantor named in the deed. But a conveyance to a person under an assumed name, and a conveyance by such person to another under such assumed name is valid. A person may assume any name he desires, as long as it does not work a fraud upon others, and a conveyance to, and by him under that name will pass title. If there be a person in existence who is identified as the grantee mentioned in the deed, and such deed is delivered to him, or his duly authorized agent, it makes no difference by what name he is called. He may use one name for one transaction or occasion, and another name for another time, if it does not perpetrate a fraud on any one.

LEGAL NAME DEFINED

A legal name consists of one given name and one surname or family name. The middle name or initial is, strictly speaking not a part of the legal name. But since the use of initials instead of a given name before a surname has become a common practice, such initials and surname are now fully recognized. In such case the rule undoubtedly is where the Christian name is signed by initials only, the initials taken altogether in their regular order should be considered as the Christian name for the purpose of signature.

When the grantor is married, the wife or husband should join in the execution of the deed otherwise the community interest of the husband or wife may not pass by such deed. It is also advisable that the name of the grantor correspond with the name stated in the deed by which he acquired the title to such property. If the name does not correspond, the grantee may have the actual title to the property, but this paper or record title may be defective.

Whenever title to real property is transferred to, or conveyed by, a partnership, the description of the parties in the deed should be as follows: "Black Realty Company, a partnership consisting of A. B. and C. D." The reason for the foregoing rule is that a partnership is not a legal entity the same as a corporation. In such case the legal title is in the partners, and not in the partnership. The wives of the partners should also join in the conveyance to convey the full title to the property.

MARK LEGAL

Whenever a person has taken title to property in one name, and who thereafter changes his or her name, either by court proceedings or marriage, he or she must in any conveyance of such property, set forth the name in which he or she derived the title and also the new name. A person cannot convey property to himself.

Whenever a person is unable to sign his name to a deed, he may sign the same by mark. In such case the signature of the person signing by mark should be written by the witness and the grantor then makes his mark. There must be two witnesses to such signature. It is sufficient that the the witnesses appear mark. Although it is they are witnesses statement is not requir it legal.

Memory Chapel of Mediterranean Type

Memory chapel of the Ives & Warren Mortuary, 100 North Hill avenue, recently erected, is an architectural adaptation of the early Italian Renaissance with details taken from the Davenzatti Palace in Florence, Italy. The general exterior of the building is of a later date due to the necessity of using reinforced concrete walls instead of stone. Architects were Frederick Kennedy and his associate, Glenn Elwood Smith. The building was constructed by William T. Loesch & Son, contractors. Members of the Ives & Warren firm are Clyde K. Warren, president; Clark E. Ives, vice-president, and Franklin J. Ives, treasurer.

With Independence Day cutting the week to five working days, a decrease in activity was noted in the local realty market last week from the totals of the preceding week, but the daily average was decidedly higher, according to the weekly survey made by the Standard Mortgage Company and based on filings as published in the Los Angeles Daily Recorder.

In the entire area of the city, 984 transfers of property were filed during the week, a loss of 120 deeds from the preceding week's total. However, the holiday made the daily average for last week higher by thirteen deeds. Trust deeds were valued at $3,950,305.90, or a daily average of more than $790,000. For the week ending June 28, trust deeds in the city were valued at $4,140,017.56, making the daily average for last week greater by more than $100,000 per day.

Notwithstanding the short week, half the districts of the city showed increases in volume of transfers recorded. The Westlake Park district, holding ninth place in the survey, was first in increase over the week of June 28, showing a gain of twenty-one deeds. The Hollywood district, Highland Park, Venice, Playa del Rey, Hollenbeck Heights, Vernon Industrial and the Central business district also showed greater volume in turnover of property for the week.

The southwest district held first place in the survey with 195 deeds recorded. Trust deeds were valued at $621,245.51, a gain of more than 180,000 over the preceding week. Mortgages amounted to $76,476.28; releases eighty-six, and reconveyances, ninety-nine.

Wilshire district, holding second place in the survey, was first in value of realty financing, mortgages and trust deeds in that section amounting to $994,228.16, a gain of $185,087.38 over the corresponding period of last year. The Hollywood district was third in the survey with 117 deeds filed, but held second place in value of financing, mortgages and trust deeds carrying a total valuation of $702,356.79.

San Fernando Valley, with a loss in deeds both from the totals of last week as well as from the corresponding week of 1928, showed a gain in financing. Deeds numbered 102 and mortages and trust deeds were valued at $310,512.52, a gain of more than $87,000. There were eleven releases and twenty-five reconveyances.

In various sections of the city, gains were noted in actual transfers of property over last week as well as an increase over the totals for the corresponding period of last year. Among these, the most notable are the Hollywood district and the Westlake Park district. The greatest increase in financing over the figures of last year was shown by the Wilshire and the San Fernando Valley districts.

PROSPERITY FOR POULTRY SEEN HERE

Feed Expert Foresees Era of Good Times Coming to Chicken Ranches

G. G. Steere, general manager of the Fernando Feed and Fuel Company, accompanied by Dr. W. P. Holst of the University of California at Berkeley, recently made an inspection of the Runnymede poultry plant in the San Fernando Valley.

In discussing the poultry, egg and feed situation, Steere expressed the opinion that the $300,000,000 appropriated by Congress for the purchase of surplus wheat of the farmers would afford only a temporary relief, because it still will be in the warehouses. "When all is said and done," said Mr. Steere, "we must not forget that supply and demand are the only two factors which really create values."

Applying this directly to the poultry and egg industry in Southern California, Steere said:

"Egg prices today at 35 cents per dozen net to the producer afford the highest market on the Coast, and with the number of eggs in storage throughout the United States the lowest in years, the situation points to future prosperity of the poultrymen in this district.

"The fact that our egg prices are the highest on the Coast bears out our former statement that supply and demand make values regardless of all other factors. With fryers selling at 29 cents per pound, it will pay to keep the brooder houses busy this fall."

Mr. Steere's company has supplied the world's largest poultry plant at Runnymede with feed since its inception. The requirements of this plant, where more than 265,000 hens have been installed, are now over 1,000,000 pounds of feed per month.

Real Estate Transactions in Eighteen Southland Counties According to Survey of Court Instruments Show San Diego Section in Second Rank

With a record of filings in Los Angeles county of 277,921 for the first six months of this year it is apparent that the 1929 total of filings will substantially exceed the 500,000 mark, according to the figures compiled monthly by the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company, covering not only Los Angeles county, but seventeen other counties of Central and Southern California, in all of which except two it maintains branch or affiliated offices.

The six months' total for the eighteen counties now stands at 494,034, an indication that the combined record for all of the counties will cosely approach 1,000,000 instruments. While Los Angeles county shows a slight drop as compared with the first six months of last year, the total for the eighteen counties is above last year's record.

BASIS FOR REALTY

Officials of the title company consider the monthly volume of filings in each county as a reliable basis for judging the volume of real-estate activity. Analyses of filing over past years have shown that about a third of the instruments recorded each month in each county directly involve property transfers. An additional third of the recordings deal with real-estate financing operations, the filing of mortgages and trust deeds secured by real property.

During June there were 41,429 instruments recorded in Los Angeles county, a daily average of 1657. The combined total for the eighteen counties during the month just closed was 72,075, establishing a daily average for the entire territory of 2880. The June filing for Los Angeles county showed a loss of about 6000 as compared with June of last year and the total for the eighteen counties was approximately 7900 below the record of June, 1928.

The decline in recordings, however, is not regarded as especially significant by officials of the title company, since decreased activity normally develops in June and extends through the summer months. It is expected, therefore, that July, August and September will also show a lighter volume of activity, followed by notable increases during the fall and winter months.

SAN DIEGO RANKS HIGH

Second to Los Angeles county in total volume of recordings was San Diego county with 5691 instruments filed during June. In San Bernardino county, which was third, there were 3365 recordings. Orange county was fourth with a total of 3121, and Fresno county was fifth with 2517.

Santa Barbara county headed the list for the month in point of increased filings, this county showing a gain of 354. In Ventura county, which had a total of 1195 instruments recorded, there was an increase of 165. Slight gains were also made by Imperial, San Luis Obispo, Madera and Kings counties.

Company Will Finance New Development

SANTA MONICA, July 6. (Exclusive)—Financing of the erection of the thirteen-story Bay Cities Guaranty Building, at 225 Santa Monica Boulevard, this city, will be through the Mutual Properties Corporation, organized to handle the transaction, according to an announcement by J. D. Rishell, president. The building site is at the northwest corner of Third street and the boulevard, in the heart of the downtown business section, adjoining the Bank of Italy property. The construction of Santa Monica's new skyscraper already has started with clearing away an old building and breaking the ground.

Capital stock of the financing organization is $350,000, and has been issued. It is a Santa Monica group headed by Mr. Rishell.

Rush Starts for Auto Drivers' New Licenses

MAJORITY OF AUTO DRIVERS MUST TAKE EXAMINATION

Questions to Be Asked Included in Questionnaire; All Licenses Prior to 1927 Revoked by Order

BY AL PARMENTER

The majority of automobile drivers here have never taken an examination for a license to drive, but the revocation a week ago of all licenses issued prior to January 1, 1927, makes it necessary for at least two-thirds, probably more than 1,000,000, of the Southern California drivers to take a test to procure a new card.

[illegible] of the Division of Motor Vehicles at Sacramento canceled all licenses issued before 1927 in accordance with amendments to the Motor Vehicle Act passed by the last Legislature.

According to Lon W. Butler, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Motor Vehicle Department examinations for driving licenses have been averaging about 2200 per week prior to the present rush stimulated by the revocation. Now applicants number more than 1000 each day and will be greatly increased.

The law is not effective until August 14, but the division and all police departments in the metropolitan district except those at Glendale, South Pasadena and Long Beach are already accepting applications for new licenses. After the lapse of time sufficient to allow all to procure a card those having out-of-date permits will be arrested on a misdemeanor charge.

No difficulty is met in procuring the new card if the applicant can

HUPMOBILES

We urgently request the owners of 1926, 1927 and 1928 Hupmobiles to trade in their cars now on new Hupmobile Century Sixes or Eights. This request is made because of the tremendous demand for these popular Hupmobile models—a demand our used car supply does not permit us to fulfill.

Due to this demand and Hupmobile's exceptionally high resale value we are now in a position to offer a very attractive allowance on Hupmobiles sold during the past three years.

If you are the owner of a 1926, 1927 or 1928 Hupmobile—either six or eight—it will be to your advantage—and ours, too—if you trade it in now. When the demand exceeds the supply the market value is necessarily higher.

Important Notice

Hupmobile's new program of expansion has reduced all prices . . . some up to $260.00.

STARS TAKE LEAGUE LEAD

Kinney Gets Four Hits to Help Hollywood Defeat Solons, 6-3, But Fails to Last on Mound

SACRAMENTO, July 6.—Hollywood moved into first place in the second half race of the Pacific Coast League today by defeating Sacramento for the fifth consecutive time, 6 to 3, while San Francisco was falling before the Seattle Indians.

In the five games of the second half, Hollywood has looked the part of real contenders for the play-off money. Oscar Vitt has his men up and coming and they have displayed the winning combination of strong defensive and offensive work and effective pitching.

WALTER KINNEY

Walter Kinney had a hectic day on the mound for the Stars today. He walked four batters, but he held the Senators to five hits in seven plus innings before he yielded the box to Wetzel. And of those five hits, all of them were gathered by the two Sacramento youngsters, Backer and Hoag. Backer hit three. In the last three games, Shellenback, Hollerson and Kinney and Wetzel have been touched for only fifteen hits.

Kinney was also an important factor in winning today's ball game, slapping out four hits in four times at bat. Cleo Carlyle also had a perfect day—three out of three, and one of his blows was a home run with the bases empty.

Hollywood, as usual, scored in the first inning, Lee walking, taking second base on Rollings's sacrifice and completing the circuit on a sacrifice fly and a hit by Funk.

Hollywood scored again in the second on a hit by Kinney, a walk

ANGELS COP AGAIN FROM DUCKS, 7-4

Roberts Twirls Seraphs to Fifth Straight Win; Hannah Pilots Club

With Truck Hannah in charge in place of Marty Krug, deposed Los Angeles manager, the climbing Cherubims ran their winning streak to five straight yesterday when they humbled the Portland Ducks again at Wrigley Field, 7 to 4.

Red Roberts, the big right-hander with the sorrel thatch from Wichita, pitched the Angels to victory. Roberts let the Ducks down with nine hits, five of which came in the seventh and eighth innings, and was never in distress after his mates presented him with a four-run lead in the opening round.

Curt Fullerton, who had won his last five starts for Portland, hooked up with Roberts on the mound and had his winning string broken. Fullerton was larruped for a dozen safeties by the Seraphs, who bunched nine of them in the first, fourth and sixth innings to score all of their runs.

Fred Haney, the peppery Angel infielder, led the local attack with

RAIN AGAIN HALTS NET TOURNEY

Grant Leads Pare in Indianapolis Semifinal When Weather Stops Play; Hall Gains Final Round With Victory Over Bell; Last Matches on Schedule

INDIANAPOLIS, July 6. (AP)—Improving his game steadily against a gradually fading opponent, J. Gilbert Hall, South Orange, N. J., today entered the final round of the national clay court tennis singles championship tournament by defeating Berkeley Bell, Austin, Tex., in a five-set match. Scores were: 6-3, 1-6, 3-6, 6-1, 6-2.

Bryant M. Grant, little Atlanta (Ga.) player, and Emmett Pare of Chicago, tapped balls at one another for nearly four hours without determining the other semifinal match, rain finally stopping it with the Southerner on the verge of victory but badly spent. Grant won the first two sets, 6-2, 6-4, lost the third, 4-6, and was leading in the overtime fourth, nine games to eight, when it rained.

The Grant-Pare match will be completed tomorrow morning, and the winner will meet Hall for the title at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hall-Bell contest was full of color, each player at times approaching the height of tennis skill. Hall's stroke control was better than Bell's in the first set, in which he took a lead, and was not headed. Bell netted and overdrove repeatedly.

The Texan, who a week ago won the national intercollegiate championship, rallied brilliantly to take the second set with the loss of only one game. Six double faults and inability to handle Bell's sharp chop stroke brought about Hall's lapse.

Dashing to the net, Bell got away to a lead in the third set and was tired but never passed. Hall's

AMERICAN TENNIS PAIR WIN WIMBLEDON CROWN

BY FRANK H. KING
Associated Press Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON (Eng.) July 6. (AP)—With two dashing American youngsters on their first trip to Europe furnishing the biggest thrill, the United States forces outdid themselves and carried off three of Britains five coveted tennis titles in the Wimbledon tournament, which ended today.

WILMER ALLISON

In a terrific five-set battle on courts made slippery by intermittent rain, young Johnny Van Ryn, of Orange, N. J., former Princeton tennis captain, and his blond partner from Austin, Tex., Wilmer Allison, finally triumphed over the powerful British Davis Cup pair of J. C. Gregory and I. G. Collins to win the final for the men's doubles championship by scores of 6-4, 5-7, 6-3, 10-12, 6-4.

HELEN AGAIN

It remained for Miss Helen Wills, serene in the possession of her third Wimbledon singles crown gained in easy fashion yesterday, to sally forth later in the afternoon paired with the veteran, Francis T. Hunter, and add the mixed doubles championship to America's list of laurels. Miss Wills and Hunter won in decisive fashion from Collins and Miss Joan Fry of Britain by scores of 6-1, 6-4.

SACRAMENTO MAY LOSE COAST LOOP FRANCHISE

SACRAMENTO, July 6. (AP)—Unless better patronage is given its home Coast League baseball team, the Senators, Sacramento may lose its franchise in that organization, Lewis Moreing, owner of the Senators, indicated today.

Although Moreing stated he had no definite plan for the future, he said it was beyond "human endurance" to financially hold a team in Sacramento because of the light patronage at Coast League games held at Moreing Field.

Moreing is said to have mentioned doing one of several things, including moving the team to Stockton or making it a permanent road club.

"I have just about come to the conclusion that Sacramento is

JACK LELIVELT TO TAKE OVER JOB AS ANGEL BOSS

Veteran Minor League Pilot Will Join Cherubs Next Week; Fans Not Hot on Wrigley Choice

BY BOB RAY

Jack Lelivelt, a veteran minor league manager, will be the next Angel manager. Lelivelt, who was recently ousted as pilot of the Milwaukee club in the American Association, will replace Marty Krug at the helm of the Los Angeles club in Sacramento some time next week.

Lelivelt, according to Los Angeles club offices, was appointed by William Wrigley on the recommendation of Joe McCarthy, Cub manager, and Tom Hickey, president of the American Association.

MARTY KRUG

Local fans, however, did not seem to be so hot on the selection, for Lelivelt's name means nothing to them here. Lelivelt, although he is said to be a driver, is not a demonstrative type of manager, being even less talkative than Krug, whose lack of enthusiasm on the diamond cost him his job. Angel rooters would have preferred a bombastic manager—one who could rate with Oscar Vitt, the Hollywood pilot, in the matter of personality.

Had Angel fans known that Wrigley was going to appoint a pilot whose name was not widely known in major league circles, they would have preferred Bill Essick, the former Vernon manager, who is now acting as scout for the Yankees. Essick is a wonder at handling pitchers, which is the kind of a skipper needed by the Seraphs, and also has a host of followers in Los Angeles. Essick's appointment would have won over a lot of old Vernon rooters to the Angel cause.

Doc Crandall, the former Angel pitcher who is now with Sacramento, would have been another more popular choice as manager than Lelivelt.

Lelivelt, who performed at first base and was known as a hard-hitter during his playing days, has been in the managing end of the game for ten years, acting as pilot for Omaha, St. Joseph, Tulsa and Milwaukee. During that time he has won but one pennant, managing the Tulsa club to a flag.

The new Angel leader took over the reins at Milwaukee in the American Association in 1926, the Brewers finishing third. The club finished in a tie for second in 1927 and in third place last year.

This season, though, Milwau-

TRACK CLASSIC FOR SOUTHLAND

Mercury Club Athletes on Journey Home

BY PAUL LOWRY
Sports Editor, The Times

DENVER (Colo.) July 6.—The L.A.A.C. track-and-field team, runner-up in both the junior and senior national A.A.U. championships and winner of the relay championship during the three-day meet staged here this week, left for Los Angeles tonight. And with them they carried the knowledge that the forty-second annual A.A.U. championships will be staged in Los Angeles.

This was the last-minute recommendation of the championship committee, which has worked out a tentative three-year program which sends the championships to Los Angeles in 1930, the far east the following year and to a middle western point, possibly Denver, the next year.

The 1932 meet, of course, will be held earlier than usual, to make way for the Olympic Games to be staged in Los Angeles that year.

This is a tentative schedule and it comes up for approval at the annual A.A.U. meeting in November. However, the recommendation of the championship committee is tantamount to acceptance of the program.

Therefore, all Los Angeles has to do to get the meet is to go after it and raise the necessary guarantee. Denver bid $6000, staged the three-day championships for approximately $18,000, and took in about $20,000 at the gate.

The Mercury team of thirty-two men which left the City of the Angels a week ago was not intact when the boys hopped the train tonight. Sevmeans of a map if the contestant does not wish to include it in the text of the plan. Entries preferably will be typewritten and must be on one side of the paper only. Each contestant may submit no more than one plan. No manuscript will be returned. The Times reserves the right to publish any plan submitted with credit to the writer, whether or not it wins a prize.

WINNING TRIP PUBLISHED

Names of the prize winners will be announced by publication in this section of The Times as soon after the close of the contest as the entries can be passed upon by the judges, probably not sooner than two weeks after the close of the competition. At the same time the text of the winning $100 first prize plan will be published. Other winning plans and those receiving honorable mention will be published in succeeding issues of the section so long as they are valuable as vacation or trip suggestions to be followed by motorists. In determining this the duration of the vacation season and the merit of the plan will be the determining factors.

In rating the entries the judges will consider the attractiveness of the vacation suggestions made, their practicability, accuracy of facts, and skill and neatness of presentation.

TIME MAY BE LESS

It is not necessary that the trip outlined shall occupy an entire week, although, in the nature of things, a week's trip would probably present more attractions than of shorter duration. Neither is it necessary that the contestant have made the trip which he outlines, although it will probably give him an advantage through first hand information to have been to the points he describes.

Accuracy of facts will be an important factor in judging the plans. As an aid in this direction the contestant may call on The Times Information and Resort Bureau for facts or, in the case of members, on the Automobile Club of Southern California. The club is also ready to supply members with maps.

Figuring the cost of running a car at 10 cents a mile, which is a generous allowance for practically every make of car (depreciation included) the first prize of $100 will pay the automobile expenses of a 1000-mile vacation trip, the second cash prize would finance a 500-mile journey and the third prize money would carry the car over a 250-mile tour.

Fine Fishing at Yellowstone

YELLOWSTONE PARK (Wyo.) July 6 (Exclusive)—Tourists entering the Yellowstone Park this season are enjoying unprecedented fishing in all streams and lakes open for that purpose, according to reports reaching Mammoth Hot Springs, headquarters for the park, from other sections of the great playgrounds.

With the opening of the Yellowstone Park on June 20, all lakes and streams in the park with the exception of Wolf, Cascade, Squaw and Grebe lakes and Grayling Creek were opened.

With practically nine months of closed season during the period when the park is officially closed and during which time the majority of the fish native to the Yellowstone Park spawn, there is assurance of good fishing throughout the year.

Is Your Car Ready for Summer?

EXTRA demands are placed on your car by summer driving. Long trips, rough roads, steep grades, hot weather—all mean more work and harder work for the family automobile.

To prepare your car—on which you depend so much for vacation pleasures—for this gruelling grind, have a complete job of lubricating done on it RIGHT NOW. This doesn't mean just a shot or two of grease—such as you get at an ordinary grease rack—but a thorough cleaning out of all the old, worn-out oil and grease and replacing them with just the right kind of fresh lubricants to keep your car fit.

Let us do this for you. Without extra charge we will also go over your car thoroughly, tightening all loose screws and nuts and reporting any worn or broken parts to you.

By following these suggestions you are certain to get a lot better service out of your car and a lot more fun out of your summer driving.

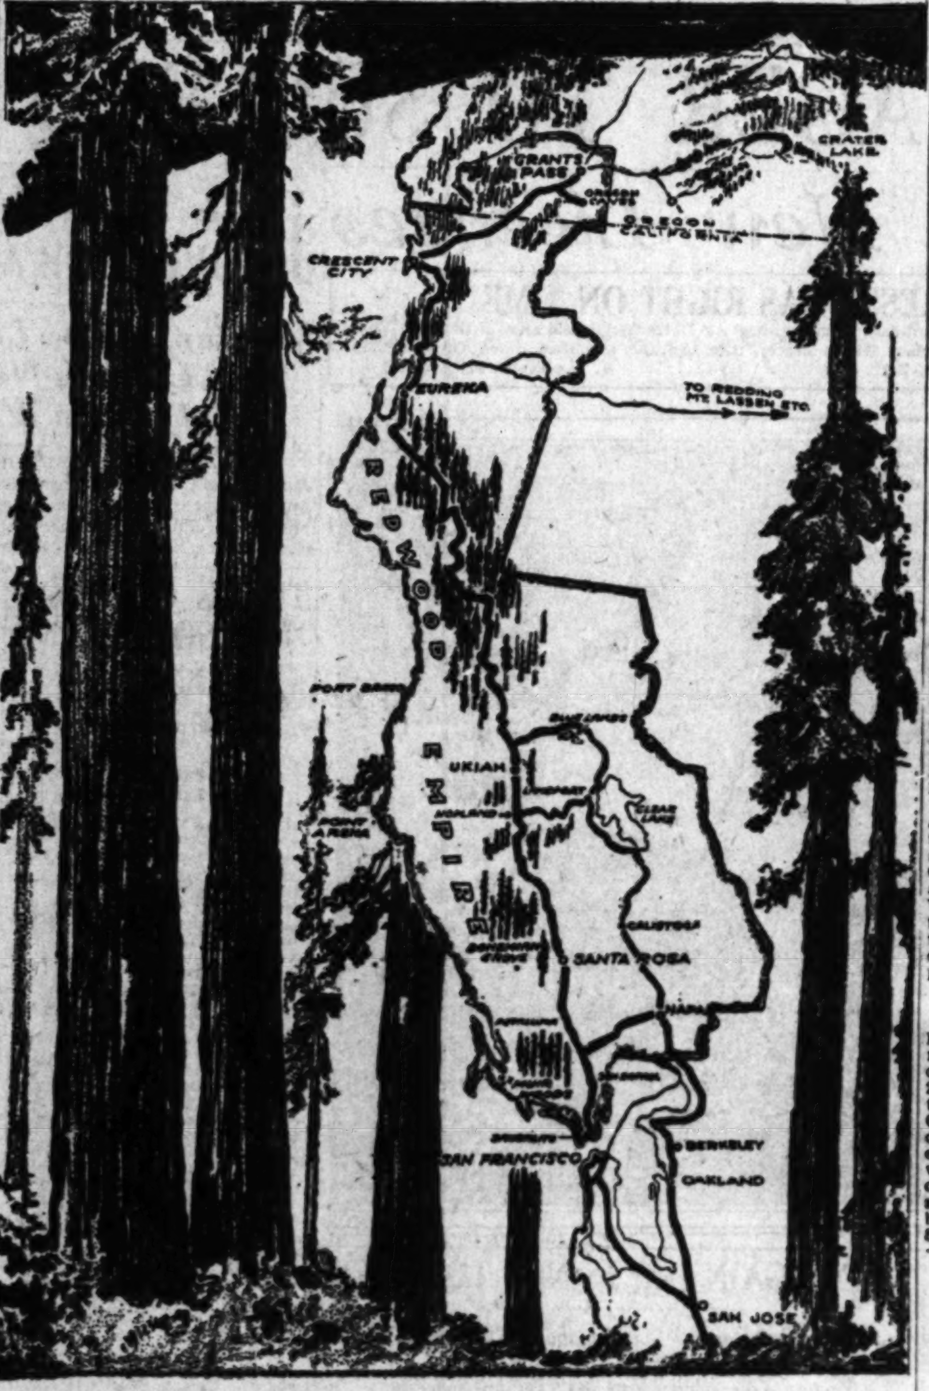
STORY OF REDWOODS TRIP TOLD

Ride Through Stupendous Beauty Amazes



Drawing by Times Staff Artist Charles H. Owens

BY HARRY CARR

THIS is the story of a grand buggy ride.

People come from Europe to take this ride. About every celebrity in the world seems to have made it; and thereafter searched his soul and ripped the covers off the dictionary trying to tell the world how he felt about it.

It goes straight through the heart of the giant redwoods. Every one from Walt Whitman to Jack London has tried to describe these dim-lit forest cathedrals. Trees that were old when Cleopatra was born: forests so dense that the sunlight filters through in wan gauze veils of light. Forests carpeted with bracken and ferns, a veritable jungle of wild and stupendous beauty. This ride through the redwood forests is one of the most remarkable experiences in the world. As a spectacle, it belongs with Grand Canyon and the Yosemite.

I am not going to try writing a prose poem about it. I am only going to tell you how to get there. And what else there is to see when you are there—and getting there.

THINGS WORTH SEEING

On your way to San Francisco, there are two or three things worth stopping to see. One is the Mission at San Juan Bautista and the other the old mission at San Antonio de Padua. There are some old adobes at San Juan worth visiting. Also, it is worth while going through the mission itself. It gives you a glimpse of the life led by the old padres; their kitchens and wine cellars. San Antonio de Padua is a little off the road. You leave the highway not far north of El Paso de Robles. There isn't so much to see inside the old mission; but the setting is very beautiful and interesting.

You leave San Francisco by the Golden Gate Ferry at the end of Hyde street.

When I made the trip with a delegation of publishers who were guests of the Redwood Empire Association, we went over on the ferry in the morning and had luncheon in the mountain inn at the edge of Muir Woods.

This is a forest of giant redwoods given to the State by the late William Kent. It involves a walk of a couple of miles; but is worth while.

Mill Valley itself is one of the most charming spots in the world. You wind through this—and over it—in making the short detour to Muir Woods.

The main road goes straight through San Rafael to Santa Rosa. I found it worth while to turn off at Ignacio in order to go to Sonoma. This old town is a perfect peach.

It is fragrant with history. The Bear Flag was raised there for the first time. One of the last of the missions is there in excellent condition. It is one of the loveliest and most charming of all the mission buildings. The allure of the town, however, lies in its old adobes.

To my mind, the finest period of early California architecture came along in the '40's and '50's when they built balcony houses. Whereas these new Hollywood Spanish houses give me the heebeejeebees, these old balcony houses—half Mexican and half Southern were restful and had the true poetry of line and proportion. Sonoma has a city plaza almost entirely surrounded with them. One was the old barracks buildings and another was the Blue Wing Inn where Joaquin Murrietta used to stop.

A few miles outside of Sonoma was the old adobe mansion of Gen. Vallejo and the estate of Jack London.

WHERE BURBANK SLEEPS

You come back to the main highway at Santa Rosa. This was the home of Luther Burbank. He is buried under a big tree in the yard of his old house. I expected to find his experimental gardens about the size of Tejon Rancho. It was a couple of city lots. There is a good hotel at Santa Rosa.

You are now on the edge of California's Switzerland—Lake county.

Instead of spending the night at Santa Rosa, you can push on through Calistoga and Middletown into the mountains. There are all kinds of charming mountain hotels in the midst of pine forests.

If you don't care to do this, keep on the main highway until Hopland; turn off, right; and make a a circle of the lakes.

Clear Lake is the largest body of water entirely within the boundaries of California. It is not as beautiful and lacks the wild quality of Tahoe; but it is worth seeing. The chain of lakes called "The Blue Lakes," just beyond Clear Lake, is one of the loveliest sights in California. The water is a bright emerald blue; and the lakes meander like rivers through mountain chasms.

There is a lot that is interesting in the mountain country around here. Cattle, sheep and fruit. Especially cherries.

After you leave Willetts on the way north, you get into the redwoods.

You travel all day through the forest. The giant trees line the highway mile after mile. Now and then you come across a sight that makes you shudder—stumps of a forest whose trees have been murdered. It makes you feel as though you had seen some one blow up an old mission with dynamite. They invited me to go through a lumber mill and see these grand old trees made into shingles; but I declined. I haven't much thirst for murder.

Happily most of the trees that line the highway have been saved forever through the efforts of the Save the Redwoods Association. The State Legislature has appropriated $12,000,000 to save these trees. The condition is, however, that each dollar of State money must be matched by a dollar of money raised by the counties and by private subscription. As these counties are poor and sparsely settled, most of the money has come from private sources. In several instances, groves have been presented to the State by lumber companies and private owners.

All through the forest, there are auto camps, hotel camps and there is at least one fine hotel. I don't suppose there is a more beautiful place in the world than this hotel. The mountains look down upon the redwoods and the redwoods down upon a silver lake. Wild deer wander all around the place. It is expensive, however.

Some of the camps are charming. The guests are in cabins scattered around through the forest. You don't have to lull yourself to sleep hearing the people from Arkansas spanking the babies as in most similiar hostelries. The trees in at least one such place are magnificent beyond any description.

The dense forests continue all the way to Eureka and beyond. Most people spend the night at Eureka. There is a good hotel and it is an interesting town. It is a harbor town with a water front that smells of lumber.

Owens Valley, Tahoe Region Road Improved

Motorists traveling to Owens Valley and Lake Tahoe regions will encounter much-improved road conditions, advises the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Pavement is traversed from Los Angeles by way of Saugus and Mint Canyon to Mojave, followed by thirteen miles of regrading and oiling operations. The majority of this section is in good condition, although some short sections are chucky and soft. From the end of this stretch generally good graded gravel and natural gravel is used to a point six miles beyond Little Lake, followed by oiled gravel to a point ten miles north of Olancha, thence fair to good gravel to within three and one-half miles from Lone Pine.

From this point excellent oiled macadam extends north by way of Big Pine and Bishop to the summit of Sherwin Grade, followed by graded gravel and natural gravel, chucky and corrugated in places, to a point just north of Mono Lake, thence excellent graded highway to Bridgeport. Between Bridgeport and Coleville, construction work necessitates the closing of the highway from 7 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and from 1:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. daily. During those hours it is necessary to use a fair detour be way of Sweetwater and Wellington.

From the end of the detour excellent gravel extends to Gardnerville, followed by oiled gravel and pavement to Reno.

AMERICA OWNS MOST OF WORLD'S AUTOS

More than two-thirds of the automobiles in the world are registered in the United States, according to a statement reaching the Automobile Club of Southern California. Of the 32,028,584 automobiles registered in the world, 24,629,921 are operating in the United States. Pleasure cars make up 27,007,965 of the world registration; trucks total 4,702,950, and busses 317,669. Besides the automobiles operating in the various countries of the world there are 2,262,932 motorcycles being used as means for transportation.

DRAMA OF FOREST TO BE STAGED

Spectacular Pageant Will Entertain Sequoia Visitors on July 14

Many Southern California July vacationists are planning motor trips to the Giant Forest of Sequoia National Park near Visalia for a few days outing in one of California's most beautiful playgrounds. There will be opportunity to see "Ersa of the Red Trees," the outdoor pageant written by Dan Totheroh and the late Garnet Holme, to be presented July 14.

Giant Forest, with its towering Sequoias, many centuries old, is declared one of the most unique vacation lands in California. The trees of this national park compare in size with any found anywhere else in the world.

The two-hour play, "Ersa of the Red Trees," will prove an added incentive to motorists contemplating trips to the Giant Forest. The setting is in a natural amphitheater which fronts the largest of the big trees—Gen. Sherman.

The play tells a story of romance, adventure and conspiracy of plotters who would destroy the oldest and largest of living things—the great Sequoias.

Required in the cast are: forest maidens, wood nymphs, foresters, the legendary "Spirit of the Trees," the guardian of the forest, and his daughter Ersa, about whom the story centers. Frances Adams, former Broadway dance star, has been selected to play the part of Ersa.

The production was first presented last year and it was due to the success of this initial performance that the Visalia Chamber of Commerce decided to give the play again this year. Floyd Byrnes of Visalia is in charge of the production while Frank Knox is directing the play with 60 per cent of the cast that gave last year's successful pageant.

NEW BRIDGE OPENED

The new bridge over the Smith River on the Redwood Highway, northeast of Crescent City, was opened to the traveling public June 22. This eliminates the last section of the old narrow road between Crescent City and Grant's Pass. The only remaining section of old road encountered on the Redwood Highway is one of 2.5 miles just north of Requa, which will be eliminated about July 15, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

TIRE PRESSURE SUGGESTED

In view of the great importance to vehicle owners of proper use of balloon tires, the standards division of the Society of Automotive Engineers has felt that the incorporation in the Society of Automotive Engineers specifications of some information on load and inflation pressures for balloon tires for passenger cars and commercial vehicles and for high-pressure tires for commercial vehicles was advisable. As the Tire and Rim Association has approved such tables for publication in its handbook on specifications, the Society of Automotive Engineers tire and rim division decided to recommend that the following table be adopted as a new Society of Automotive Engineers recommended practice:

Bumper Height to Be Altered

Because motor cars are being built lower than a few years ago, it is proposed to change the specification for standard bumper heights as adopted in 1923 and revised last year by the Society of Automotive Engineers. A subdivision of the standards committee of the society recently recommended that the height above ground of both the front and rear bumper be standardized at seventeen inches, instead of the present standard of eighteen inches for the front bumper and nineteen inches for the rear bumper, according to S. S. Quincy, general manager of Frank James Motors, Kissel distributors. The measurement is to the horizontal center line of the bumpers, and is to be the mean height between no-load and full-load position of the frame.

It is also recommended that the mountings for the front bumper have their faces perpendicular to the ground when the car is unloaded, and those for the rear bumper perpendicular when the car is fully loaded. The purpose of this is to assure that the faces of the bumpers will be set to the correct angle to the horizontal to give the best appearance.

Unless both front and rear bumpers on all cars are set at approximately the same height, they will not afford maximum protection, as the face of the bumper of one car may be above or below that of another when the cars come into contact.

Revoked Drivers' Licenses Send Crowd to Take Examinations

The room full of people are part of the constant crowd that has thronged the Division of Motor Vehicles seeking driving licenses since cards issued prior to 1927 have been revoked.

DRIVING TESTS REQUIRED

drive and is versed in the traffic laws and is physically fit. The procedure is as follows: The applicant goes to the Motor Vehicle Department at 2419 South Grand avenue, its branch at Long Beach, or any police station giving the tests and states the kind of license he wants—operator's or chauffeur's. He is given a blank on which he fills in his name, age, and personal description.

EYE TEST FIRST

Presenting this card he is given an eye test—a simple one that will determine if he is able to read traffic signs and see well enough not to become a hazard if he is driving.

The applicant then is asked whether he is well versed in traffic laws and if the answer is in the affirmative he is given a prepared list of twenty-five questions to answer. If the answer is in the negative—in other words, if he requires time to study the traffic laws—he is given a questionnaire containing the necessary information and told to return in five, ten, fifteen or thirty days, depending upon the time he requires to complete the study.

MUST ANSWER QUESTIONS

To pass the written examination the applicant must answer not less then twenty of the twenty-five questions correctly. The questions are simply stated in positive form. At the right of the page are two columns, one labeled "right," the other "wrong." The applicant merely marks an X in the "right" or "wrong" column opposite the different questions, depending upon whether in his judgment the statement is correct or incorrect. The questionnaire covering those questions asked in the examination follows:

GOOD FISHING FOUND IN EVERY SECTION

Motor vacationists in quest of trout and other fish can expect good results, due to the extensive program of the Federal and State governments for stocking the streams in practically every section of the country. Although California and some sections of the country stand out for game fish, especially the mountain trout, generally speaking there is good fishing in practically every State of the Union. Suggestions as to the best fishing localities can be secured from the outing bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

TWO FINED UNDER NEW STATE LAW

Venice Justice Punishes Pair Who Dumped Refuse on Right of Way

Practical application of the law against "uglifying" California highways recently was made in a Venice court where the justice of the peace fined two men $50 each for dumping refuse on the right of way two miles north of Topanga Canyon.

This action is regarded as a distinct step forward in the clean-up and beautify the roadsides campaign inaugurated by the Automobile Club of Southern California some months ago. Although a State law has been in effect for years it has been called into play but rarely and the action of the Venice court is regarded as significant.

The law makes the dumping of bottles, glass, nails, tacks, hoops, wire, cans or any other substances likely to injure any person, animal, or vehicle upon any public highway a misdemeanor. Any person who accidentally or otherwise drops, or permits any destructive or injurious material to be dropped or throw on any highway, immediately shall remove, or cause the same to be removed, or suffer the penalty of the law.

Although the Venice justice in imposing the fine declared that the highways must be kept safe and that it will be the policy of his court to impose fines, and if necessary jail sentences to carry out the law, such decisions also automatically tend to keep the roadsides clean and wholesome, it is pointed out by the Automobile Club of Southern California.

California is not alone, says the club, in working to preserve its natural scenic beauty and to keep the highways from being defaced. So many other States are working toward this end now that the movement is fairly national in scope.

DICTATORS
in demand

THE introduction of the new Studebaker Dictator Eight has stimulated the demand for this popular priced car and at the same time has created a big demand for used models of the Dictator Six.

Owners of Dictator Six models are urged to take advantage of this used car market demand and exchange their present cars for the new eight cylinder model.

You will doubtless be agreeably surprised to learn for what small difference you can graduate into the eight cylinder class.

Eight cylinder cars are rapidly gaining dominance of all price fields above $1500. The new Dictator Eight Sedan sells for $1609 delivered here, fully equipped, including spare tire and bumpers.

folks used to be fond of tinkering
now they prefer to ride

Gone are the days when half the fun of owning a car was fussing with its ailments; and half the pride of ownership was the ability to make it run. Owners no longer boast about their prowess with piston rings and pump gaskets. The car that spends most time on the road and least in the service station is the car they want.

The motoring public, in less than a year, has found it a fact that the Chrysler-built De Soto Six stands up exceptionally—that its capacity for continuous road duty is greater than that of any other six below $1000.

Owners find, too, that the pleasure of driving and the pride of owning a De Soto Six do not wane after many thousands of miles of travel. In fact, the enthusiastic praise of these owners has been a vital factor in De Soto's phenomenal success.

Visit our showroom and judge De Soto Six at close range. We know its beauty, finish and appointment will delight you—and a demonstration will confirm your first impression.

Northern and Southern California Doubles Teams Play Today for Coast Net Laurels

Neer and Davies Will Face Herrington, Herd

Stoefen Meets McArthur in Men's Singles Event

Miss Dieke Has Chance at Women's Crown

BY RALPH HUSTON

Cliff Herd

Southern and Northern California will battle it out this afternoon on the courts of the Los Angeles Tennis Club, for the Pacific Coast doubles championship, and the privilege of going east to participate in the national championships.

Southern California will be represented by Clif Herd and Alan Herrington, runners-up in the recent local championships, and the northern district will offer Phil Neer and James Davies as the contestants.

Herd and Herrington won their way into the finals yesterday with a hard-won victory over a junior doubles team composed of Jack Tidball and Clif Robbins. The youngsters carried the fight to the veteran team all the way, hotly contesting each point. The scores were 6-8, 6-4, 6-4, 6-4.

STRAIGHT SETS

Neer and Davies won the intercollegiate doubles crown in 1922, when both were students at Stanford. They won over Dolph Muehleisen and Ted Eaton, San Diego youngsters, yesterday in straight sets, 8-6, 7-5, 6-2, to win their way into the final round.

The northern team is favored by local net players to win. Davies's flashing brilliance, and Neer's steady performance combine to make the visiting duo an extremely formidable organization.

Les Stoefen, municipal court champion, and Hugh McArthur, Southern California interscholastic champion, from San Diego High, won their way into the finals of the special men singles, each scoring two victories yesterday. Stoefen defeated "Sonny" Bennett, 6-3, 6-4, in a quarter-final match, and won over Lyle Oje, 6-4, 6-3, in the semifinal. Oje previously had won over Dolph Muehleisen in a well-played match, 6-4, 6-3.

McArthur had no trouble in winning over Longcope, 6-3, 6-1, in the quarter-finals, but was forced to come from behind in the semis to win over Weldon, 3-6, 6-2, 6-2. The San Diego youngster has been playing remarkable tennis all year, and will give the L.A.A.C. star a great game today.

STRONG RALLY

The finals of the women's singles will feature Gladys Patz and Elizabeth Dieke. Miss Patz, who will also defend her municipal court championship in another match tomorrow, won from Dorothy Robinson in straight sets yesterday, 7-5, 6-1. She was trailing 4-5 in the first set, and rallied to win three straight games and the set, two of them on Miss Robinson's service. In the second set she won five straight games, dropped the sixth, and won the seventh and the match.

Miss Dieke scored something of a surprise when she defeated Caroline Babcock in straight sets, 8-6, 6-4. The husky L. A. High girl showed fine staying powers, and a steady, carefully planned game to win. Miss Babcock, who was seeded No. 1 in the tournament, lost only one point in the first three games. But Miss Dieke won the next four, and broke through Miss Babcock in the thirteenth game and won the set. In the second set, Miss Dieke trailed, 2-4, and won four straight games and the match.

The men's singles final is scheduled for 1:30 this afternoon, the doubles for 2:30, and the women's singles for 4 o'clock. Yesterday's results:

MEN'S DOUBLES

Semifinals—Neer and Davies defeated Muehleisen and Eaton, 8-6, 7-5, 6-2; Herd and Herrington defeated Tidball and Robbins, 6-8, 6-4, 6-4, 6-4.

MEN'S SINGLES

Third round—Bennett defeated Berry by default.

Quarterfinals—Oje defeated Muehleisen, 6-4, 6-3; Wheldon defeated Neville, 7-5, 6-3; McArthur defeated Longcope, 6-3, 6-1; Stoefen defeated Bennett, 6-3, 6-4.

Semifinals—McArthur defeated Wheldon, 3-6, 6-2, 6-2; Stoefen defeated Oje, 6-4, 6-3.

WOMEN'S SINGLES

Semifinals—Gladys Patz defeated Dorothy Robinson, 7-5, 6-1; Elizabeth Dieke defeated Caroline Babcock, 8-6, 6-4.

Hudkins Purse Delivered to State Officer

SACRAMENTO, July 6. (AP)—The Ace Hudkins-Charley Belanger purse of $14,205 forfeited after the bout in San Francisco last week, was delivered to State Treasurer Charles G. Johnson today for deposit in a trust fund in his office.

The money will be held by Johnson until the courts act upon Hudkins's petition for a permanent writ of injunction against the State Athletic Commission. Hudkins obtained a temporary restraining order yesterday to prevent the commission from disposing of his share of the purse, amounting to $13,000.

The forfeiture was declared after officials in charge of the bout held that both boxers made a poor showing in the ring.

BUSY QUINTET

Only five Coast League players have been in the line-up in all games played by their clubs this season. The quintet who have been on the job every game belong to five clubs. They are Dudley Lee, Hollywood; Gus Suhr, San Francisco; Jack Sherlock, Missions; "Buzz" Arlett, Oakland; Art Jahn, Portland.

SEEK NET LAURELS

Phil Neer (left) and James Davies, one-time national intercollegiate doubles champion, make a strong bid for the Pacific Coast championship today on the courts of the Los Angeles Tennis Club. The radio match planned for next Saturday is being postponed for several weeks or until the broadcasting station at Washington, D. C., installs some new equipment to hook up with the powerful station at this end.

There are four ways of deciding a game as drawn—two by agreement and two by claim. (1) Forces reduced to where either side has little or no hope of winning—drawn by agreement. (2) Perpetual check—drawn by agreement. (3) When fifty moves have been made without a capture or pawn move (practically always in endgame) a draw may be claimed. (4) When an identical position has occurred three times (not necessarily consecutive or close together) the player whose turn it is to move may claim a draw—the player who has just moved cannot claim it. This rule pertaining to a "draw by three-fold repetition of position" is not clear to many.

The game below was drawn by agreement after a perpetual check as well as "three-fold repetition of position." Played in a 1927 event of the Correspondence Chess League of America in which the writer would have had a clean score of wins but for this draw. Some wild stuff here.

World Champion Alekhine's recent three months' American tour included exhibitions at New York, Boston, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Chicago, Cincinnati, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and in Mexico—Zacatecas, Guadalajara and Mexico City. From a total of 616 games played he won 515, lost forty-seven and drew fifty-four. He will spend most of July and August at his home in Paris preparing for his coming title match with Bogoljubow, which begins in September.

The championship of New Jersey has been won by J. W. Brunnemer for the fifth time in succession.

The Pasadena Chess Club's secretary, Douglas Houghton, writes that their membership is made up of artists, writers, professors, musicians, noted scholars, distinguished scientists, bankers, brokers, certified accountants and good home folks. The women members are mostly college grads. We understand they've even allowed a few real estate men in (but don't advertise it.)

In the London-Washington cable match of last November the London player at sixth board retracted a move on the plea that a teller had decoded a message wrongly. The game went on under protest and was drawn. Washington's claim to this game has been upheld by the International Chess Federation at The Hague, thereby making the match a 3-3 tie instead of a win for London.

SCHULTZ TO BATTLE LA SALLE WEDNESDAY

Two beach stadium favorites, both topnotch sluggers, are slated to headline an ultrawarm card at the Ocean Park boxing arena Wednesday evening. These boys are "Battling" Schultz and Kenneth LaSalle. The tow-headed Schultz gave Bay District fans a pair of sensational performances in his last two battles. LaSalle has kayoed a large majority of his opponents, four out of five at the seashore ring and a total of eighteen out of twenty since his debut into professional fight ranks.

In the semi-wind-up, Tony Bevo, fighting Italian ace, will meet Jackie Stewart. Bevo's last fight against Stewart was a spectacular affair. "Little Italy" has also showed to advantage in scraps against Billy Blake, Oscar (Boom) Rankin and a host of others. Stewart is a classy scrapper, however, and should give his opponent a great fight. They clash for six rounds at 150 pounds.

MANDELL TO FACE KAISER THURSDAY

A great "Hollywood natural" has been signed by the Pasadena Arena for its Thursday night card, when Jack Mandell and Charlie Kaiser, two of the most popular bantams ever to appear at the Legion's house in Movieland will do their stuff for the Crown City millionaires.

A six-round semifinal that ranks as a real main event will be furnished by Joe Moncillas and Oriel Astudillo, lightweights. Moncillas, fans will recall, was an Olympic main eventer not long ago against such fellows as Baby Sal and Fernandez.

RIVERS, JACKSON ON SANTA ANA CARD

Arizona Joe Rivers, cagey Mexican welterweight, and Sammy Jackson, Ocean Park negro, have been signed for the ten-round main event at Santa Ana Wednesday night. The principals are well known to Orange county fight followers despite the fact that neither lad has ever appeared at the Delhi Road Arena.

The main event is well supported with four prelims and an attractive semifinal. Tony (Baby Face) Moreno, Placentia bantam star, battles Battling Brown in the semifinal. It is a four-rounder. Johnny Gabuco vs. Luis Medina, Bert Wagner vs. Wildman Macias, Marvin Pina vs. Urban Hernandez and Kid Lucas vs. Louis Garcia, in fours, complete the program.

UPLIFTERS AND MIDWICK CLASH

Rival Polo Squads Collide Today at Beach Field

Twelve Goal Title-holders Rule Favorites Here

McCarthy and Roach Likely to Play Star Roles

BY FRANK ROCHE

HAL ROACH

Midwick Country Club horsemen and Uplifters' Ranch poloists resume their mallet feud today on the Rustic Canyon Field, at Santa Monica. Today's polo game is the second of a series of five which the two crack Southland squads have scheduled. Midwick, holder of the Pacific Coast twelve-goal championship, won the opening tilt of the series last Sunday by a 10-to-6 score.

The contest was one of the most exciting in the history of the Santa Monica organization. Today's battle may be even closer and more exciting, polo officials at the Uplifters, declare.

On paper, the Midwick riders figure to beat the ranch players. The Midwick team is made up of the following low-goal stars: Dr. Harry Wilson, Neil McCarthy, Gordon Cronkhite and Howland Paddock. This team has played together all through the spring and early summer season. Their team play is almost perfect on occasion, the experts contend.

Uplifters are sending a four into battle with the Midwick team that figures to click today. On the team are Hal Roach, southpaw star; C. B. Wrightsman, the best-mounted man in west coast polo; Will Rogers, noted humorist and sportsman, and Clair Brunson, an up-and-coming mallet swinger.

Uplifters are making every effort to keep the high standard of polo that has been set during the past weeks as a permanent fixture in the Southland. The polo on display now at the Uplifters, is as good as any of the recognized low-goal contests staged anywhere in the country and in a lot of cases it is better, the local mallet officials state.

Right now at the Uplifters, there are more than $200,000 worth of polo ponies stabled. The C. B. Wrightsman string, alone, is said to be worth somewhere near $100,000. Upkeep of the stables runs from $3000 to $4000 a month, Uplifters point out, and the field cost at least 50,000 to put in shape for the games here, they say. These figures should give the fans a good idea of what polo means to Southern California in round dollars.

It usually costs a player anywhere from $5000 to $25,000 a year to play the game of polo. The participants are real simon-pure sportsmen. They derive nothing from the game besides the pleasure they get out of playing it.

There is one player at the Uplifters, who modestly forbids his name being mentioned who spends enough money on his tack—saddles, bridles and so forth in a month to keep the average man in comfort for a half-year. This man performs for Southland fans on Sundays and gets a big kick out of it, although every ball he hits cost him around a dollar a shot.

The fascination of the game keeps the players footing the bills willingly. The most a player ever gets is a trophy or a piece of silver plate. Gate receipts go to the upkeep of the field.

Today Southern California fans will have a chance again to see that type of sportsman cavorting for them when these two teams clash.

Midwick rules a slight favorite to win the honors.

The line-ups:

Will Rogers	No. 1	Dr. Harry Wilson
C. B. Wrightsman	No. 2	Neil McCarthy

ROSE OF SHARON COPS RACE

COVINGTON (Ky.) July 6. (AP)—D. E. Stewart's Rose of Sharon reasserted her claim to three-year filly championship honors today as she won the $10,000 Latonia Oaks. Ben Machree was second and Nellie Lyons, third. Rose of Sharon's time for the mile and a quarter was 2:11 3-4.

Johnny Doeg Triumphs at Glen Cove

GLEN COVE (N. Y.) July 6. (AP)—John Doeg of Santa Monica, Cal., defeated Gregory Mangin of Georgetown in the final round of singles in the Nassau Country Club's invitation tennis tournament today, 12-10, 6-2, 6-2. Mangin gave the westerner a great battle of it in the first set, but found Doeg's chop strokes too much for him in the last two and deciding sets. Doeg had reached the final round by eliminating Kenneth Appel of Princeton, 3-6, 6-3, 6-0, in the semifinals earlier in the day. Mangin disposed of Bradshaw Harrison of Oregon, 6-4, 6-1. In the doubles, Mangin and Appel defeated E. W. Feibleman and Jerry Lang of New York in the final which went five sets. The scores were 1-6, 7-5, 6-1, 3-6, 7-5.

AMERICANS WIN AT WIMBLEDON

other two titles, Henri Cochet overwhelming his French countryman, Jean Borotra, by scores of 6-4, 6-3, 6-4, to ascend the men's singles throne, and England's team of Mrs. Phoebe Watson and Mrs. Peggy Saunders Shell retaining its women's doubles supremacy by downing Mrs. Phyllis Covell and Mrs. Dorothy Shepherd-Barron, 6-4, 8-6, in the final round

Most of the tennis fireworks on this rainy and wintry day came in the memorable five-set fight in which Van Ryn and Allison carried away on their youthful shoulders on their first invasion of Europe, one of the most cherished titles known to the game. The issue was in doubt until the very last ball crashed into the net from a British racquet and sent Van Ryn and Allison, exhausted but elated, leaping over the net to receive congratulations from the pair of rugged Britons.

Gregor, built more like a heavyweight prize fighter than the usual tennis star, and Collins, a tall, lank, black-haired Scot, presented a great contrast to the trim, lithe Americans whose polished strokes flashed brilliantly to give them the first set fairly easily.

LOTS OF FIGHT

But what the Britons lacked in polish they supplied in fight. Collins, except at the service, rarely presented the sterling game that enabled him and Gregory to defeat George Lott and John Hennessey, the United States champions, the other day. The burly Yorkshire man carried the brunt of the battle, and, smashing his shots with all the power of his huge frame, he was an ever-present danger near the net and almost proved the Americans' undoing.

Games and sets alternated with such regularity that when the Americans finally won it was difficult to say just where their supremacy rested. Doubtless the margin of victory lay in the fact that they had youth behind their racquets, for while the Britons never tired nor surrendered the cunning of their shots and the strategy of their teamwork were just sufficiently inferior to their opponents in the decisive fifth set to bring defeat.

After winning the first set the Americans lost the second as a result of a disastrous campaign of lobbying. Gregory smashed these balls so hard they bounced into the stands.

The third set went to the Americans and then, with the invaders leading by two sets to one, came the most terrific doubles struggle in the annals of modern Wimbledon.

The Britons led at 4-1 only to have the Americans rally and carry the count to 5-all. Games going with service, the advantage swung back and forth across the net until nearly 20,000 persons were in a frenzy of excitement.

With the Englishmen leading at 7-6, the Americans faced set point but Allison saved it with a steaming service ace and then went on to win the game. Spectacular rallies with the players slipping and falling on the wet turf in frantic attempts to save sideline shots engaging in terrific driving duels, fighting it out at close quarters at the net or going in for prolonged defensive tactics with the use of high, arching lobs, provided more thrills than in any match of the championships.

Then with games at 10-all, Collins served a love game. The next game the Britons broke through his service and won the twenty-second game and the set.

UNDISMAYED

With the score, standing at two sets all and their advantage wiped out completely, the young Americans were undismayed. In the fifth set they crashed the Scotchman's service to take the third game and lead, 2-1, and were never headed from then on until finally the title was theirs.

Van Ryn and Allison fully earned their laurels as on the way to the final they elimnated Cochet and Jacques Brugnon, French holders of the title, and Bill Tilden and Frank Hunter, who won it in 1927.

The men's singles final was colorless by comparison with Cochet's effortless style easily mastering Borotra's spectacular acrobatic, after a stubborn fight over the first six games of the opening set. The Basque never seriously threatened the subtle Cochet's chances to repeat his victory of two years ago. Now Cochet, Borotra and Rene La Coste each won two Wimbledon singles titles in a French monopoly that has covered the last six years.

BRITISH TEAM WINS ON TRACK

Oxford-Cambridge Runners Conquer Canadians

Edwards Wins Two Events After Airplane Trip

Visitors Show Superiority in Field Events

HAMILTON (Ont.) July 6. (AP)—Superiority in the field events gave the combined Oxford-Cambridge track and field team a victory over the Hamilton Olympic Club in the invaders' first dual meet of their American campaign today.

The final score was 7 to 5, first places only counting in the scoring.

The eight track events were evenly divided but the invaders took three of the four field events.

Phil Edwards, negro middle distance star, and Johnny Fitzpatrick, members of the Canada's last Olympic team, each accounted for two of the Hamilton club's five first places.

Edwards, making the 1600-mile trip from Denver where he competed in the National A.A.U. championships on the 4th inst., by airplane and train, won the half-mile and one-mile runs, while Fitzpatrick was romping away with the 100 and 220-yard dash events. The other Hamilton victory went to A. Gilbert in the pole vault.

Against these triumphs the Englishmen could point with pride to J. M. Pumphrey's victory in the two-mile run in 9m. 33 2-5s., a new Canadian record, and wins in the 120-yard high and 220 low hurdles the 440-yard run, the broad jump, high jump and sixteen-pound shot put.

I. R. Mann of Cambridge won the 120 high hurdles and the 220 low hurdles went to his team-mate, R. M. N. Tisdall. R. Leighwood of Oxford took the 440-yard run to give Oxford and Cambridge an even break in the running events.

Caleb G. Gates of Oxford, former Princeton star, won the sixteen-pound shot put; the high jump went to C. E. S. Gordon of Oxford and the broad jump to R. W. Revans of Cambridge.

As a general rule, times and distances were far behind the records, Pumphrey being the only man able to shatter existing Canadian marks. Edwards, however, turned in a fine half-mile in 1m. 53 2-5s., and then came back to take the mile from C. E. G. Green of Cambridge in 4m. 25 3-5s.

eral of the athletes have branched off for other sectors. Fred Sturdy, the Yale pole-vaulter, who won the senior title Thursday, left the same night for New Haven, Ct., to prepare for the dual meet between the combined team of Harvard and Yale vs. Oxford and Cambridge, one week from today.

Charley Paddock, the "world's fastest human," left for Minneapolis after his great comeback in the relays yesterday, and there will assume his position as vice-president of the map-publishing concern with which he recently became affiliated. Frank Wykoff, Bill McGeagh, Cliff Halstead, Jimmy Ferrie, Henry La Salette, Ken Grumbles, Clyde Blanchard and Milt Maurer stayed over here to leave tomorrow night for Vancouver, B. C., where an A.A.U. meet sanctioned by the British Columbia branch will be staged the 12th and 13th inst.

Grumbles and Mrs. Grumbles will be in charge of this party. This is a meet arranged primarily to show the natives of Vancouver that Percy Williams, the Olympic Games champion, is the kingpin flyer of the universe. Besides Wykoff, the Canadian sprinter, will have as competition Bracey, the Rice Institute boy, and Eddie Tolan, who achieved the unusual feat of winning both sprints in the senior championships the other day. Coming back on the train with the L.A.A.C. team is Raymond Alf, the little blond sprinter of Denver A.C., who took second to Leland in the junior 100-yard championship and set a new junior A.A.U. meet record of 21 5-10s. in 200—a splendid performance under the weather conditions that prevailed.

Alf is a school-teacher, and is going west to take a position in Los Angeles and later to become affiliated with the L.A.A.C.

He is a product of Doana College, and has a record of 21 1-10 in the furlong and 48 1-10 in the quarter. His 220 mark was set during a meet at Boulder, Colo., just a week before the A.A.U. championships opened here.

Great Britain Takes Honors in Golf Play

ST. ANDREWS (Scotland) July 6. (AP) — Great Britain won the senior international three-cornered golf match today with a score of 41 points. The United States had to be satisfied with 10 points and the best Canada could do was eight.

WEATHER HALTS COURT TOURNEY

three victories in the nine games were in the second, sixth and seventh.

The rest period between the third and fourth sets benefited Hall. He returned to the courts possessed of better control. Bell won only the second game of the set.

Bell started with a rush in the final set, winning the first two games, it was his final effort, for the powerful Hall then took such complete charge of the match that he ran out five consecutive games with only a minimum of opposition.

Hall had won his way into the semifinals by a surprise victory over Fritz Mercur, Bethlehem, Pa., yesterday. Bell entered the semifinal round by defeating Julius Seligson, of New York City in a match which was halted yesterday by rain after two sets and completed today. Scores were 8-6, 6-2, 6-3.

Where the Hall-Bell match was replete with fast tennis just the opposite was true in the Grant-Parc contest. Neither put much on the ball and each was content to knock it about until the opposition erred.

Just after Grant had won the seventeenth game of the set to take a one-game lead, a heavy shower ended the contest until tomorrow morning.

Wray Brown of St. Louis and Harris Coggeshall of Des Moines, Iowa, entered the semifinal round of the doubles by defeating Keith Gledhill, Santa Barbara, Cal., and Ellsworth Vines of Pasadena, Cal. Scores were 6-2, 4-6, 6-8, 7-5, 6-1.

Another quarter-final match between Bell and Louis Thalheimer of Dallas and the team of D. K. Murray and Clifford Sutter, both of New Orleans, was not completed. Bell and Thalheimer won the first set, 9-7, and Murray and Sutter took the second, 6-4. Bell and Thalheimer were leading, three games to two, in the third set when darkness put a temporary halt to the match. It will be completed tomorrow morning.

One semifinal match will be played tomorrow afternoon, bringing together the winner of today's uncompleted match and the team composed of Ben Gorchakoff and Arthur Kussman, both of Los Angeles.

The other semifinal match will be between Fritz Hercur and Hall and Brown and Coggeshall. It will be played Monday morning and the final will be played Monday afternoon.

Sharpe Victor in Star Race at Speedway

Jimmy Sharpe, pinked checked Southland youngster, showed the way to a smart field last night at the American Legion Speedway where he captured the 15-mile sweepstakes, after a sensational stretch drive. Walter Mays took second place and Mal Keneally collected third honors. Mays provided a good deal of thrills in the race. Mays was leading up to the sixth lap when his car took a nose dive and turned around twice before he righted it. Despite this mishap he again went out and gave Sharp a battle for the honors. The two drivers finished neck and neck down the home stretch, with Sharp grabbing the nod.

S. Stubblefield took a special match race from Nick Martino, Italian idol. M. McKee was the winner of a five-mile event. Speed Hinckley was second and Ernie Triplett was third. Mel Keneally was the winner of another five miler. S. Stubblefield collected second prize and Nick Martino third. Walter Mays won the opening event Jimmy Sharp was in second place and Bill Hessler was third. A crowd of 3500 witnessed the show.

To Eliminate False Starts

PHILADELPHIA, July 6. (AP)—Declaring that for several years many crews have taken advantage of the false start ruling at Poughkeepsie, John Arthur Brown, rowing chairman of the University of Pennsylvania, and member of the board of stewards, suggests that false starts be eliminated.

In a letter to Maxwell Stevenson, chairman of the Intercollegiate Rowing Association, New York, Brown also recommends that three referees be used instead of one and that crews be required to appear on the starting line punctually. Brown urges Stevenson to have the recommendations taken up at the fall meeting.

Due to false starts and late races, the recent intercollegiate regatta at Poughkeepsie was finished in semidarkness.

No start should be rerowed because of a broken oar, or jumped slide at the start any more than it would be if this occurred in the middle or end of the race, Brown said. "The crews should not be recalled, except at the instance of the referee in case he should determine any crew or crews started before the signal."

COLLEGES TO TEST PLANES

Six Universities Equip to Make Research

Code of Procedure Drawn Up by Committee

Manufacturers of Craft May Make Applications

NEW YORK, July 6. (Exclusive) —Six American universities equipped for research in aeronautical engineering have been selected by the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce to test commercial airplanes in accordance with a new code of procedure on standard performance.

The new code, drawn up by a committee of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce headed by Prof. Alexander Klemin of New York University, is expected to provide manufacturers with a standard basis upon which to compute the speed, rate of climb, ceiling, landing speed and other performance data which characterize the capabilities of their planes.

MANY INACCURACIES

Since there is no standard procedure now followed by the manufacturer in computing this data, experts say that there is a wide range of inaccuracies in the results obtained and advertised.

New York University, University of Michigan, Purdue, Stanford, Washington and the California Institute of Technology are the six outstanding engineering institutions selected to carry on the standard tests. Officials of the six universities have accepted the designation of their institutions for the work and are prepared to start the first tests at an early date.

Plans for the first test to be conducted under the new code of procedure are to be announced by the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce within a few weeks.

"The universities designated will undertake to have in readiness, at all times, the necessary instruments and apparatus and to be in a position to give reasonable service to manufacturers," Prof. Klemin said. "Dates for the planes to be tested will be selected by the manufacturers, but they must be licensed by the Department of Commerce. Qualified observers will be furnished by the universities, which will receive reasonable remuneration for their work in making each test."

The manufacturer may ask for any or all of the following tests to be conducted: High speed, climb to [illegible] feet, ceiling, angle of initial climb, length of take-off, time to [illegible], length of landing run, [illegible] speed, minimum speed with [illegible] and minimum speed with [illegible].

[illegible] SETTING ALIKE

The type and setting of propellers will be the same for all tests and will not be changed for different tests. In the case of multiengined planes, performance tests may be made with one or more of the motors not in action. The code gives specific technical directions to the universities on how the tests are to be conducted in order to be of [illegible] standard.

The Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce committee which developed the code includes Prof. Harold [illegible], California Institute of Technology; Walter Beech, Travel Air Company; A. J. Edwards, formerly of Prudden-San Diego Aircraft Company; C. S. (Casey) [illegible], Curtiss Flying Service; Prof. Alexander Klemin, New York University; Prof. E. P. PLANE RADIO DEVELOPED

Army Signal Corps Completes Receiving Set That Meets Many Requirements

BY DR. RALPH L. POWER

Radio receivers for aircraft have a twofold purpose. One has to do with the factor of safety, while the other brings in entertainment to while away the long hours on lengthy journeys.

The four most important requirements for an aircraft radio are compactness, light weight, simplicity of operation and ease of installation.

The United States Army Signal Corps has developed a new receiver which, aside from its ability to satisfactorily receive radio signals, also meets the four other requirements.

SIMPLE OPERATION

The receiver is a five-tube outfit using "peanut" tubes of extremely simple operation, and is so coupled to eliminate variations in reception that usually occur from the swinging of a trailing-wire antenna when an airplane is maneuvering.

Another out-of-the-ordinary feature is the excellent regeneration control provided. The regeneration on the detector stage has been carefully designed so that the receiver can be made to enter oscillation smoothly, without electrical backlash, through the range of the receiver.

It is frequently necessary, in regenerative detectors, to select the detector tube with considerable care in order to get good operation. In the new receiver an adjustment has been provided which enables detector tubes differing considerably in characteristics to be used satisfactorily.

The receiver covers a frequency band of 250 to 1500 kilocycles and employs three sets of plug-in coils covering, respectively, 250 to 400 kilocycles, 400 to 850 kilocycles, and 850 to 1500 kilocycles.

A container to carry the two sets of spare coils is provided and can be mounted in the aircraft if desired. The receiver is mounted with sponge rubber shock absorbers on two brackets, one at either end, and can be quickly installed or removed.

Perhaps one of the most interesting things of the set is its extreme thinness. This has resulted in its being nicknamed the "pancake receiver." In thinness the outfit compares with others in about the way that a modern thin-model watch compares with the kind that grandfather carried.

When lying on an office desk for exhibition purposes, it occupies a space less than that needed for a wire desk tray. The dimensions are twelve inches long, eight inches high and two and three-fourths inches thick. Over-all dimensions, including all projections, such as knobs, dials, mounting brackets, and so forth, are, length fourteen and five-eighths inches, height, nine and nine-sixteenths inches and thickness three and three-fourths inches.

RECEIVER ON COCKPIT

Because of the thinness the receiver can be installed on the side of a cockpit with minimum interference to the pilot or observer.

The old receiver, which the new one will replace, consisted of two separate boxes of a much larger size. The old ones took up .502 cubic feet of space, while the new ones will take only .298 cubic feet.

The weight of the new set, with one set of coils, is but ten pounds. The two extra sets of coils weigh three-quarters of a pound each, making a total of 11.5 pounds weight.

The control knobs and dials have been carefully designed so that they project as little as possible from the face of the receiver. They are beveled to remove the possibility of catching in the clothing or equipment of the aviator.

This is a safety precaution in the event that it becomes necessary to leave the plane via parachute. Yet the controls have been so carefully designed that they can be easily operated when wearing heavy gloves or mittens.

The new receiver can be operated with any one of the three aircraft radio sets now standard in the Army. It can also be operated in conjunction with the present interphone sets.

COUNTY MAY OBTAIN GIGANTIC AIRDROME

BY TERREL DE LAPP

These aerial shopping tours of the County Board of Supervisors for a county airport may result in the establishment of one of the largest and most fully equipped airdromes in the country, is the opinion of R. F. McClellan, chairman of the board, and an air-minded veteran of county government, who has seen transportation develop from hoofs to wings.

Mighty transports roaring away to all points of the compass, little sport planes buzzing around on pleasure flights, echoes of industry from airplane commercial construction plants, giant dirigibles gliding in easily to towering mooring masts and crowds on the ground busy with furthering and enjoying Southern California's lead-off in aviation.

So is visualized one picture that may result from the county airport movement.

TECHNICALITIES INVOLVED

On the other hand, Supervisor McClellan points out, there are technicalities of the law which may put the damper on the tentative plans. Whether it will be permissible for the county to supervise and institute such an undertaking is a matter of conjecture.

But one thing is certain. Members of the Board of Supervisors are air-minded; they realize that only through co-operation of governments of and within the State can the private air industry which already is holding its own with other aviation centers, keep up the stride which it promises.

Every effort is being made by members of the board to go into the matter of selection of a suitable site and straighten out the technicalities which might hold up the plan.

It is Supervisor McClellan's opinion that the taxpayers of the county realize that local meteorological conditions and natural flying advantages have brought remarkable air industry here to stay and that it will join in the chain of prosperous industries of which the county is proud.

A United States naval board will arrive here this month to select the base for the Navy's two 6,500,000 cubic-foot gas-capacity dirigibles under construction at the Goodyear plant in Arkon, O.

Six major airlines, operating to all parts of the country, have their western termini in the county.

Airplane manufacturing plants are springing up and the ships they produce and others that are imported will have to have proper landing and housing facilities.

OCEAN AIR FLEET

A trans-Pacific airfleet of dirigibles is in the offing.

These factors, combined with a myriad of other flying activities, have aided in bringing home to the Board of Supervisors a need for a large modern airdrome.

But the board members are going slowly and carefully. They are weighing all facts impartially and plan to take no definite steps until convinced that the plan is workable. They feel that such a county co-operative project is bound to come—if not now, then soon.

Two sites, both near El Monte, have been offered for the Supervisors' approval.

One is a tract of 968 acres, bordered on the west by Peck Road; on the east by the San Gabriel River; on the south by the Pacific Electric tracks, and on the north by the Rio Hondo.

The other site lies across the San Gabriel River, its western boundary, and south of the Pacific Electric tracks, its northern boundary. This is known as the Barnes tract and comprises 950 acres.

Both have their respective advantages; both are said to lie in an ideal flying-weather belt and planes or airships could approach for several miles within a few feet of the ground without being endangered by ground barriers.

But the Supervisors will take their time, they declare, and if their plan bears fruit it will be in the form of a giant airdrome, planned carefully and in keeping with Southern California stability.

Survey Made by Chamber for Air Marks

The aviation committee of the Los Angeles Junior Chamber of Commerce through its chairman, William L. Stewart, Jr., announces the establishing of twelve air markers since the completion of its aerial survey recently.

Conducted over a year's period, the survey embraces more than seventy-five cities within a radius of 100 miles of Los Angeles' metropolitan section. Aerial photos of suitable sites for air markers were photographed and the chambers of commerce of these various communities contracted for the purpose of establishing markers.

Through these efforts air markers have been completed in Hollywood, Norwalk, Balboa and Los Angeles. The committee on aviation will continue its efforts in this respect until approximately seventy-five markers have been established, according to Stewart.

A Ryan-Mahoney monoplane, powered with a Wright 300-horsepower V-6 motor was donated by Mutual Aircraft Corporation for the survey. Ted Schluter, local representative, is also a member of the junior chamber and has been one of the most active members in carrying on this work.

BRITISH TO EXHIBIT SUBMARINE AIRPLANE

LONDON, July 6. (AP)—A small airplane which can be transported in a submarine will be shown to the public for the first time by the British Air Ministry at the international air exhibition here, according to advance reports of the show.

Tacticians point out that a plane which is so constructed that it will fit into a submersible fighting ship can be transported to any desired spot with complete secrecy and will be of great value in co-operating with the fleet.

The success of day air mail has led to the establishment of government night routes for postoffice service. This is a view taken at Salt Lake of the first night flight from San Francisco on the Boeing line.

TAIL SPIN ATTACKED

LANGLEY FIELD (Va.) July 6. (AP)—The tail spin, still regarded as one of the major problems of aeronautic engineers, is to be given intensive study in a new wind tunnel built expressly to investigate it at the laboratory of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics here.

The "flat spin" discovered in a navy plane, and which has caused many pilots to be blamed for carelessness or poor flying, will receive particular attention by the committee's aeronautic experts, who have had the matter under study.

In previous studies of the spin, ordinary horizontal wind tunnels have been used. The new tunnel will be built in vertical position so the plane model under test may be suspended in natural spinning position in relation to gravity and the air stream.

The importance of solving the spin problem was stressed by aeronautic engineers at the recent aircraft engineering research conference here, at which representatives of the industry laid questions for research before the advisory committee.

Before discovery of the "flat spin," which, unlike the vertical tail spin, is not regarded as particularly dangerous, many pilots who experienced it were credited with "sloppy" flying when their airplanes cracked up.

Sound Device Used to Fight Forest Fires

Use of the airplane for direct supervision of forest-fire fighting is being planned by forest protective associations, says a dispatch reaching the Automobile Club of Southern California. It is declared that loud speakers with tone amplifiers which have been operated recently from airplanes as advertising stunts can be utilized most effectively in fire combat.

Such amplifiers permit the broadcasting of the flyer's voice so that it can be plainly heard from a distance of a half-mile. A great saving of time can be effected through use of this apparatus, for an order can be given to fire fighters employed in the most inaccessible places on the ground within a few minutes from a reconnoitering plane so equipped.

Ordinarily the fighting during a great fire had to be directed from a central headquarters many miles away, and valuable hours were often lost in relaying messages to the men on the fire front. A patrol airplane equipped with a loud-speaker machine can keep the men working to greater advantage in the fire zone and protect them from regions of danger.

First National Championship Golf Tourney for Elks Gets Under Way Here Tomorrow

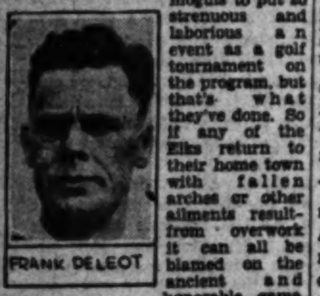
SUNSET FIELDS SCENE OF OPENING ROUNDS

Qualifying Play Slated to be Held at Popular Public Course With Final 18 Holes at Rancho

BY BRAVEN DYER

What looms as the most serious and important business on the program of the sixty-fifth annual convention of the Elks is slated to begin tomorrow at Sunset Fields when the eighteen-hole qualifying round of the first national golf tournament will be played.

The B.P.O.E. brethren are in Los Angeles for a lark and it really seems downright nasty of the local moguls to put so strenuous and laborious an event as a golf tournament on the program, but that's what they've done. So if any of the Elks return to their home town with fallen arches or other ailments resulting from overwork it can all be blamed on the ancient and honorable game of golf.



FRANK DELEOT

This week's program, as outlined by Ike Wentworth, chairman of the Elks national tournament committee, includes eighteen holes of qualifying play at Sunset Fields tomorrow, eighteen holes of medal play on the same course Tuesday and the final eighteen holes Wednesday at the Rancho Golf Club.

HAROLD THOMPSON

The thirty-six holes of play at Sunset Fields will count toward the perpetual trophy offered by J. J. Doyle for the team championship. Latest reports indicate that there will be no less than fourteen teams entered from the Pacific Coast alone. Each squad will number four men.

Whichever golfer has the best score at the end of the fifty-four holes will be declared the Elks' national champion and will be presented with an exact replica of the team trophy, this to be his personal possession. The lodge winning the team cup will hold it for a period of one year.

Visiting golfers will find both Sunset Fields and Rancho courses very much to their liking. The former is long, but the fairways are wide, which should meet with the approval of the lower handicap players. Rancho is neither so long nor so wide; in fact, you have to keep 'em pretty straight out there, or there's trouble ahead.

Some of the best golfers in this section of the country are numbered among the B.P.O.E. brethren. There's Milo Marchetti of Rancho, Harold and Russell Thompson of Glendale, Dick Russell and Paul Johnson of Huntington Park, Floyd Sisk and Harry Borde of Santa Monica and many others.

Ike Wentworth yesterday announced the following line-ups of teams:

Los Angeles No. 99—Dr. C. K. Manhart, Guy E. Hanson, Milo Marchetti, Frank Deleot.

Bakersfield—H. K. Batchelder, Lloyd Stroud, Tom Maguire, Charles E. Webster or John DePaolo.

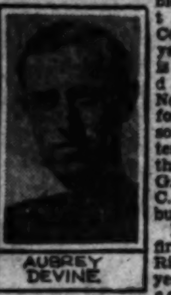
Notables Play Riviera Club Golf Course

Robert M. Eyre, one of the veteran golfers of the State of California, was one of the many notables playing at the Riviera Country Club yesterday. Eyre is vice-president of the Northern California Golf Association. Yesterday he was the guest of W. G. Nevin and C. M. Washburn.



AUBREY DEVINE

It was Eyre's first visit to Riviera in a year and he complimented Bob Morrison, club professional, on the splendid appearance of the course, which is now in the best shape it has ever known.

Jack Mulhall, popular motion-picture actor, played his first round yesterday since his return from Honolulu, where he spent several weeks. Jesse Lasky, who has been in the East for some time, was also on deck yesterday.

Aubrey Devine, former all-American quarterback under Howard Jones at Iowa, was also among those present at Riviera. He played with his brother, Glenn, who is visiting Aubrey for several weeks. Glenn coaches at Parsons College, Iowa. The two brothers wound up with identical scores yesterday.

Morrison has been giving considerable time to his game, after having been busy for a long period with affairs of the club, and intends to enter the Southern California open which will be played Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Lake Norco course.

CADDIES AWAIT TOURNEY

Bag Toters of Southern California Getting Ready for $1000 Open Championship Billed for August

One of the high lights of the forthcoming $1000 open caddie golf tournament, which is to be played at the Rancho and Sunset Fields golf clubs, is the keen rivalry existing between the caddies at the various clubs throughout Southern California, who are tuning up for the seventy-two holes to be played on August 5, 6 and 7.

From the brand of gold that some of the caddies are shooting it looks as though it will take a much better score than 293 to win the tournament. Joe Brotherton, Jr., last year's winner shot a 293 with one round of 68. Chick Rutan and Johnny Amlin finished in a tie with 297 but Rutan won the play-off with a much lesser margin than 23 strokes.

A. H. "OLLIE" PAINTER

Judging from the reports coming in to A. H. Painter, chairman of the tournament committee, there are many dark horses among the caddies. It seems that Johnny Keogh of Rancho, who is being managed by Buster Keaton is one of the very dark horses being groomed to win this year's tournament.

In the special thirty-six-hole medal play caddie masters' tournament to be held in conjunction with the main event, there are several mighty fine golfers. Elmer Vice at Midwick, Harry McNamara at Los Angeles, Fred Tongue at Brentwood and Pete Garcia at Lakeside are exceptionally fine golfers and should be among the winners.

Immediately following the completion of the caddie master's tournament on August 5, there will be a meeting of the caddie masters and an association will be formed by the boys for the purpose of organizing a school for the development and instruction of caddies. This body will be known as the Caddie-masters Association of Southern California. The idea is a good one and results should be shown during the coming year among the caddies.

Roy Tufts of San Diego and Tommy Lowe of La Jolla have written in to the tournament officials advising them that their clubs expect to be well represented this year. Curley Freeman at La Cumbre and Earl Forsman at Mountain Meadows are taking a keen interest in several of their caddies who are expected to finish well up in the money.

J. Benjamin Fahy, sponsor of the caddies' open tournament this year, has received many letters of commendation for the interest he has taken in the caddies' welfare and for putting up the $1000 to be awarded to the winners. Mr. Fahy's whole idea is to help the caddies help themselves.

PREDICTS BRILLIANT TOURNEY

Leo Diegel Says All Leading Golfers Will be at Agua Caliente

AGUA CALIENTE (Baja California, Mex.) July 6.—According to Leo Diegel golf pro. for the club, Agua Caliente will be host to probably the greatest collection of professional and amateur golf stars ever assembled for tournament for the $25,000 "open" to be held here on the course, now under construction, either in December of this year or January, 1930.

LEO DIEGEL

Diegel, national professional and Canadian open golf champion, is now in New York and reported upon his return to America from the Ryder Cup matches and the British open that by far the greatest collection of English golfers ever to invade the United States at one time, would be over for the $25,000 tournament, the biggest money event ever offered in golf history.

George Duncan, captain of the British Ryder team, which defeated the American squard captained by Walter Hagen this spring, will head the delegation from England. At least four other members of the British team will be on hand along with a host of other professionals and possibly some leading amateurs. Henry Cotton, young British pro, who played through the last winter tournaments on the Pacific Coast, and a number of lesser lights, are among those expected to compete at Agua Caliente over the seventy-two-hole route.

Professionals of other European countries, Scotland, Ireland, France and Germany, have learned of the big money tournament and entires of leading golfers from these countries are also expected.

Many of the professionals holding winter time positions in Florida have been unable to appear for the winter tournaments on the coast in past seasons. Such a job kept Johnny Farrell, United States open champion then, away last winter along with Gene Sarazen, the little New York Italian. But they will both be on deck for the Agua Caliente "open,' they have informed Diegel.

Fred Morrison Off Tomorrow for Seattle

Fred Morrison, professional at the Midwick Country Club, will leave tomorrow morning for Seattle where he will play in the Pacific-Northwest open golf tournament. Morrison is flying north with Dwight Hamlin of the Midwick club.

They will leave here immediately after breakfast, eat lunch in San Francisco and expect to arrive in Seattle for dinner tomorrow night.

Morrison has been shooting great golf lately, having been mighty consistent right around the 71 mark. He will probably encounter his stiffest competition from Frank Dolph, Portland ace, who recently won the Pacific-Northwest amateur title, and Mortie Dutra, the Tacoma star. The tournament is scheduled for the Inglewood Country Club.

DANA BENNETT WINS IN LAKESIDE PLAY

Match play against par honors at the Lakeside Country Club yesterday went to Dana Bennett, who led Class A golfers, being 1 down to par. E. S. Browne was second, 2 down. In Class B, George Summerville was first, 3 down, and E. H. Calvert second, 4 down.

WOMEN PLAY TOMORROW AT RANCHO CLUB

Women of the Rancho Club will hold a candy tournament tomorrow, eighteen holes of medal play, according to an announcement made by Mrs. Ike Kentworth. Fourteen pounds of candy have been donated by Mrs. Wentworth and there will be five prizes, two for low gross and three for low net.

EARLY INSTRUCTION IS ESSENTIAL TO GOOD GOLF

[Mrs. A. E. D. Trabue, president emeritus of the Women's Auxiliary of the Southern California Golf Association, has been closely associated with golf in the Southland for the past twelve years. This is the fourth of a series of articles dealing with her brilliant career as a leader in women's golf activities.—Ed. Note.]

BY LOIS V. BARRY

"If you really want to learn to play golf, the thing to do, even before purchasing a single club, is to consult a good professional and arrange for at least a few lessons."

MRS. A. E. D. TRABUE.

Twelve years of being intimately associated with women's golf has given this firm conviction to Mrs. Anne Trabue, retiring president of the Women's Auxiliary of the Southern California Golf Association.

The conviction is not new, and is one shared by the majority of golfers, but in Mrs. Trabue's mind it looms as the one essential factor leading toward eventually good golf.

As has been previously stated, Mrs. Trabue's introduction to the game was knocking balls off ant hills with a borrowed club in Nashville, Tenn. Then upon her return to California, she selected her own set of clubs and went out on the links by herself for a considerable length of time.

Consequently, by the time she decided in favor of a few lessons she not only had to learn the right way to play, but she had to unlearn the form she had been using, which was all wrong. She had to work harder and concentrate more intently; she had to think not only how to do it, but how not to do it.

"One thing was in my favor, however," says Mrs. Trabue. "Back in Nashville, my brother-in-law showed me a correct grip. The Vardon overlapping grip came naturally to me that first day, and I have used it ever since. I don't wish to imply that the overlapping hold is any better than several others, but the fact that I still use it bears out my theory that it is quite as easy to learn something correctly as to learn it incorrectly."

The year of the formation of the Women's Auxiliary, 1922, Mrs. Trabue reached what later proved to be the height of her golfing career when she annexed the city championship at Griffith Park by defeating Mrs. P. S. Noon of Chicago, who played to a six handicap. Already she had been invited to compete in country club tournaments and she had made a good showing at the Southern California championship tournament held at Pasadena.

Interest in women's golf was picking up by then with 125 players entered in the Pasadena tournament and Mrs. Trabue seemed to be on her way. But then came the culmination of what had once been only a vague idea. In June of the same year the Women's Auxiliary was aborned, and with it came the death of any championship aspirations Mrs. Trabue might have had.

"I naturally turn to organization," she explained. "Where other women derive pleasure from trying to beat old man par, I derive pleasure from organizing and directing. My mind just functions that way. In my home and outside I love smooth-running, orderly arrangements.

"With the new interest of the auxiliary I gave less and less attention to my game. I played less frequently, and then solely for the joy of being out in the quiet restfulness of the course. The relaxation afforded me meant more than my score, though I always tried to do my best."

HAGEN BOOSTS PRO GOLFERS

Says They're Not Discouraged Over Jones's Win

Claims Men Playing as Good Golf as Ever

Quotes Figures to Show How Professionals Stand

BY WALTER HAGEN
British Open Golf Champion

(Copyright, 1929, by the North American Newspaper Alliance)

NEW YORK, July 6.—An opinion is abroad that this is the professional golfers' "darkest hour."

The opinion is based, of course, on Bobby Jones's fine victory in the open championship at Winged Foot, where he defeated all the professional golfers of America and raised the banner of the amateurs on the flagpole of the United States Golf Association.

WALTER HAGEN.

There seems to be a feeling of brotherhood among the amateur golfers which makes each one feel that when Bobby Jones beats the entire lot of professionals they, too, can step out and do it. They regard Jones's victory as a great achievement for amateur golf instead of what it really is—a great and individual triumph for Bobby.

BEST IN WORLD

It so happens that the greatest golfer in the world is an amateur, but professional golfers, who, I know, are now being fearfully razzed all over America, should take this in good grace and remember that even at Winged Foot the superiority of professional golf over amateur golf was overwhelming.

I have no idea of knowing how many golfers started in the open championship, but it was close to 1000, and included all of the players in the various sections, amateurs and professionals, who considered themselves good enough to enter such a competition.

From these qualifying tests and from the players excused from qualifying by the United States Golf Association, there came to Winged Foot 153 golfers and of this number eighteen were amateurs and the other 135 were professionals.

After the first two rounds at Winged Foot, sixty-six golfers remained in the field and of these, six were amateurs and the other sixty were professional golfers.

One of the six amateurs, Bobby Jones, finished first; another, George Von Elm of Detroit finished in a tie for fifth, and the next amateur to appear was George Dawson, who was tied for forty-fifth place.

To any fair-minded individual this should be sufficient indication of the superiority of professional golf and prevent any club members, who might be considering such a move, from canceling dates for instruction made with their local professional. After all, they cannot get Bobby Jones or George Von Elm to instruct them and, aside from these two, the evidence is very strong that the best information on how to play the game will come from the professionals, even if they did trail Bobby to the wire at Winged Foot.

There is no reason why the professionals should be discouraged. The standard of golf as played by professionals in America is very high. The American Ryder Cup team this spring made perhaps the greatest tour American athletes, amateur or professional, ever made in foreign lands. The professionals are conducting their games and themselves better than ever in the history of golf.

All things considered, I am inclined to think that the fact that the present genius of the game happens to be an amateur, is a good thing for the professionals, in that it stimulates interest in the game among the hundreds of thousands of amateur players who are served by the professionals.

There is no telling who will be the next genius of golf. But it is certain that that vast army of amateurs on both sides of the Atlantic, which outnumbers the professionals by about 300 to 1, has always produced and always will produce a few outstanding stars, although Bobby Jones outshines them all.

Perhaps the next genius of the game will be a professional. But one thing is certain—the next genius of the game will attain his high position, not because of his being an amateur or professional, but because of the gift within him to hit the ball.

BIT INACCURATE

Owing, probably to their enthusiasm over the playing of Jones, some writers have been a bit inaccurate in their summaries. Merely as a matter of record these should be straightened out. For example, I read in several reports that Jones has won nine national championships, three United States opens, two British opens and four United States amateurs. I am credited with six, four British and two United States opens, but get no credit for five United States professional championships.

It also should be noted that if the open championships had served as a qualifying test for thirty-two places in a match play championship, thirty professionals and two amateurs would have made the grade and furnished the competition. There were at least ten amateurs prominent in the match play rounds of the national amateur championships in recent years who started at Winged Foot and failed to be among the sixty-six to qualify for the final two rounds of play.

JONES'S 1928 FEAT RECALLE

Bobby's Famous Approach Shot on 72nd Hole in Year's Open Still Talked About; Pitched Mud Ball Out of Ditch for Remarkable Recovery

BY SOL METZGER

Nine holes and forty shots. That was Bobby Jones's holes from the finish at Olympia Fields last year in the United open. At noon he had holed out for a round of 73 that strokes in the lead of the pack. Everyone thought the attorney from Atlanta had another title in the bag. And to the short sixth that last afternoon.

He reached the tee of this 163-yard affair one under left its green one over. A hooked pitch had landed in bordering it on the left and Bobby had to lift and take Then holes began doing odd tricks to him. He took a 6 on Nine holes and 40 strokes, five more than any previous the outgoing nine during this championship. Jones was That much was certain and the news spread like wildfire the course. The unruffled calm became ruffled. People rumored that he was nervous. Who would not?

There were nine holes remaining. Bobby played them magnificent manner when an important match or title hangs in the balance. Shots that hooked on the first nine began line for the flag, chips that fell short before now rolled cup; Calamity Jane, the world-renowned putter, commenced music on the greens. So splendid was his recovery that reached the eighteenth tee, a birdie 4 would have given him for the eighteen and brought him the much desired as matters turned out.

Pressure was greatest here. Word had come that Hagen one of his unbelievable rampages and that flight, Farrell, after two days of mediocre golf, had turned in score. Such rumors, usually true, play no small part in leader from the sought-for throne of golf just as it for him to lose.

The par 5 eighteenth at Olympia Fields is a stiff 490-yard in that the last 100 yards are a steep upgrade from a Bobby wanted that birdie and, like most golfers desiring drive, pressed a bit and hooked his 250-yarder into the long the left perilously near the trees.

Jones strove tremendously on his second to reach the somewhere short of the green, but the long grasses, acting wheel brakes, caused his iron to turn in coming into the latter crossed the fairway and pounded itself into the side of a row ditch, 90 yards from home.

Jones faced real anxiety. By now he knew that he had house or be out of the running. The shot that followed was dramatic of the tournament. Jones set himself deep in the took a spade-mashie and smashed his clubhead into and its mud. His ball reached the near edge of the green and of applause. A faint smile was noticeable on Bobby's face. Jane, the old friend in need, laid his approach putt dead holed out for a par 5 to tie Farrell and force the play-off lost by a stroke the next day.

DeHate Faces Mahan Friday in Legion Ring

Paul DeHate, Compton fighter, and Dummy Mahan fight the main event at the Hollywood American Legion Stadium Friday night. Mahan is making his first appearance as a Hollywood attraction. He recently fought Mushy Callahan and lost after having Callahan on the floor twice.

The only deaf and dumb fighter in the game today is Mahan who is a full-blooded Mexican who was born in Sonora and reared in Tombstone, Ariz. He is managed by Fred Winsor.

The preliminaries are the kind that offers thrills and will introduce some new faces. Erwin Bige, a Nebraska boy, scored a knockout in his first start. He is matched with Charlie Cobb in the semi-wind-up. Matt Codan and Vearl Whitehead are rematched in the special event. The four-rounders are Tony Moreno fighting Jess Gabuco in the second spot and Johnny Gabuco battling Young Soort Guyado in the curtain raiser.

STRAIGHT FALLS

And now, ye mat morons, ye have the treat of your young and old lives in store for you when Joe Malcewicz attempts to vivisect Nick Lutze at the Olympic Auditorium next Wednesday night in what promises to be the most fiercely contested wrestling clash that has ever come off in Los Angeles. "Carnation" Lou Daro was so overwhelmed with requests for this tilt that he had to put it on, pronto—so there it is, ye bugs—now go to it. Joe's backward body slam is now the dread of all topnotch grapplers. He has a way of swinging it unexpectedly—something like Joe Stecher's body scissors—quickly putting his opponent out of business. He has improved wonderfully in his work in the last year, and, as he is right now in the pink, he should be hard pickings for the best of 'em. Joe will undoubtedly die hard before shouldering the canvas.

As for Lutze—his recent showings at the Olympic have simply been wonderful. He still has a large following in the local field, many of whom are outspoken in their belief that he is the hardest nut to crack of the present-day crop of pretzel twisters. As both gladiators are in the very best of condition, they will undoubtedly go at top speed all the way. The winner will surely be booked here for an early meeting with Champion Sonnenberg. Advance sale promises a cracking good house.

Hurrah for wrestling—Willie Hunnefeld, who promotes the boxing entertainment at Phoenix, Ariz., declares that the grapplers performing in Phoenix bouts are outdrawing the mitt men two to one. He says that Dick Daviscourt is a great favorite with the Arizonians. They like Dick's wild and fast action and get a great kick out of his work when he forgets himself at times and lands a right jolt or two to the jaw.

The fans keep crying—"we want Jimmy Londos, we want Jimmy Londos." What ho—Jimmy—where are you? Londos is undoubtedly the foxiest wrestler in the game today. Remember, boys—when he pretended he was so tired his head kept drooping on his chest—then—all of a sudden he would shoot forth with a succession of headlocks and quickly dump his man flat as a pancake on the canvas.

Lou Daro's referee is undoubtedly the most colorful in the game today. His work is worth the price of admission alone. He is always Johnny at the right spot, all the time. It is whispered he is some grappler himself, and that one night after the regular show when one of the big boys sassed him down in the dressing-room, he grabbed him and spun him on his head so fast that it made "Mr. Big Boy" look goofy.

Converts from the boxing to the wrestling game are multiplying fast. The latest to bob up is Aubrey Blair, one of the big doings on the Filmograph. He took in the Lutze-Stasiak tilt and was so worked up with enthusiasm that he turned to his side kick, Thornton, and fairly shouted—"say—how long has this been going on?"

One would be surprised at the big following Joe Stecher has in Los Angeles. Joe is not a colorful matman, but he has the rare knack of turning what looks like sure defeat into a quick victory, at times, that sets the yelping bugs crazy with delight. In a bout at the Olympic with Dick Daviscourt—the festive Richard applied about five straight, terrific headlocks on the apparently exhausted Joseph. In the sixth attempt, Daviscourt slipped and fell against the ropes. As he bounded backward and fell, his head—quicker than lightning—snapped into a Stecher head scissors and he lay stiff and motionless, with both shoulders touching the floor. It was indeed the prettiest and most decisive fall ever pulled off on the mat. Foxy Stecher.

MORGAN FACES TOUGH EVENING

Goldie Hess Fights His First Champion Tuesday

Style of "Young Paulino" is Puzzle to Fandom

Youngster's Reserve Power Worries Adversaries

BY KAY O..E

Goldie Hess, the young little Paulino from Ocean Park, fights his first champion Tuesday night at the Olympic when he faces Tod Morgan, junior lightweight champion of the world, in a ten-round bout.

GOLDIE HESS

The weight is 133 pounds and Morgan's title will not be at stake. This is probably an advantage to Hess more than Morgan.

Hess has difficulty in making 130 pounds. He made low weights for all his important bouts the last few months.

He made 127 pounds for Jimmy Watts. Later he did 128½ for Santiago Zorilla with the Panamanian at 127. In his last bout Hess was at 129 1-4 for Bud Taylor and the Terre Haute Terror was up to 128 3-4.

Hess has had a harder time to convince people he "rates" than a majority of youngsters. His name has been a synonym for the short end all the way.

Goldie is a bad gymnasium worker. He looks like he couldn't hold his hands up. But when the bell rings Hess becomes surcharged like a battery.

Zorilla was a 3-to-1 choice over Goldie and Taylor was 3½ and 4 to 1. Many smart boxing fans were fooled. They somehow couldn't connect the name of Hess with such fighters as Zorilla and Taylor.

SAME OLD ODDS

The odds on Morgan will be just about as large as they were for Zorilla and Taylor for this week's battle. But this makes no difference to the child prodigy from the ocean front.

The rugged style of Hess is to walk right in like he was battling a high surf wave with both arms hooking viciously. Like Paulino, he is hard to hit.

Zorilla was unable to outrally Goldie as the dope figured he would. The reserve of the youngster completely overwhelmed the speed of the flying little Panamanian.

It was the last five rounds that won for Hess over Zorilla—also over Taylor. And in each fight going into the tenth the fights were practically even. But in the final heat Goldie takes the bit in his teeth and flashes like a double barrel.

They said Hess wasn't ready for Zorilla and Taylor. They are saying the boy isn't ready for Morgan. But the results showed this little "Paulino" to be ready for anybody his size.

SAL HYPNOTIZED

There was no question but that Hess outfinished Zorilla and he was given the decision. The Taylor fight was called a draw, but this was giving Bud—not Goldie—the benefit of a doubt.

Morgan some way hypnotized Baby Sal Sorio into trying to outbox him, which was the biggest mistake the hard-socking Mexican ever made. Nobody in the world is going to outbox the clever junior lightweight champion.

Hess can't make the same mistake because he simply doesn't. Little "Paulino" slugs and clubs the entire route.

The reason his last five rounds are far better than his first five probably is that his opponents are fresh in the beginning and get out of the way. But while the veterans tire and sag in the last half Goldie generates new strength and begins to connect.

GOLD ALL WEIGHS THE SAME TO GOLDIE

Young Goldie Hess, 20, is no squatter. He has been prospecting for gold for the last year and hasn't missed a "load" yet. As a short-ender he beat Santiago Zorilla and drew with Bud Taylor. He boxes Tod Morgan Tuesday night in the Olympic.

DANIELS TO CLASH WITH OKUN AGAIN

Dick Daniels and Yale Okun, the two light-heavyweights who fought a sensational battle last Tuesday night, were rematched yesterday by the Olympic for the 23rd inst.

The first fight was stopped after four rounds when a cut opened on Daniels's mouth had to be treated. Dr. Lloyd R. Mace took eleven stitches in the wound.

While Daniels lost by a technical kayo the men were practically even at the time the fight was halted. It was one of the most spectacular affairs between big men seen here for a long time. Both fighters showed to advantage.

Eddie Mack, who took a decision from Tod Morgan in Denver last January, arrived here yesterday to start training for his ten-round bout with Baby Sal Sorio the 16th inst.

Sal's opponent graduated from Regis College, Denver, last week. He will enter Loyola University, Chicago, this fall to take up a law course. He is 22 years of age and is the greatest fighter Denver has produced since Young Corbett.

SWIMMING MEET NEXT

DEL MONTE, July 6.—The next aquatic event at Hotel Del Monte's Roman Pluunge will be a swimming meet limited to guests of the hotel and their children, Sunday, the 14th inst.

CAULIFLOWER ALLEY NOTES

Once more Col. Jack Doyle jumps from the big to the little fellows—and what a jump—Tod Morgan vs. Goldie Hess at the Olympic Auditorium next Tuesday night. Now here is a clash that should produce more speculation and arguments than any other of its class that has bobbed up in the local field in months. With one large bound, Hess, known as the "Pride of the Beach," leaped to the top-notch of fisticuffs when he outpointed Zorilla, one of the toughest boys in the world today. Recently he fought Bud Taylor toe to toe and clearly demonstrated that he is to be reckoned with a titular consideration. His has been a steady improvement. He has probably the most dangerous right in his class today and is a regular spitfire in action.

Unless all signs fail, he should be right on top of Morgan all the way, viciously whaling away with rights and lefts and seldom giving ground. His fierce aggressiveness is his one best bet. Gee, what a following he will have at the ringside! Tod will undoubtedly long range to check Goldie's persistent onset and chance a sharp shot now and then.

He may prove the beach boy's stumbling block—something Zorilla and Taylor failed to prove. However, Tod is an in-and-outer, and, unless he swings one of his best fights, he may find himself on the short end of the verdict. Special announcement—short enders are in the ascendency again and there may be weeping and wailing in Jerusalem Row outside the Auditorium after Billy Coe hammers the final gong. Advance sale presages a sell out.

It doth appear that Bert Colima is afflicted with low visibility and is prone at times to pitch his tent below the Mason and Dixon line. But what cares Bertie, old boy, who ('tis claimed) has pulled down 400,000 bucks in small heaps since caressing the padded mitts. In these circumstances the Whittier Wonder (when his health is threatened) can well afford to bust into the Sunny South for repairs.

Around the Main-street Athletic Club and the Manhattan it is commonly believed that Mastro will win with a greater margin over Fidel La Barba, should they clash again. The fans are still talking over that famous tenth round, and what makes it sparkle with a peculiar luster, was the surprise party. The round produced more leaping maniacs at the Olympic than have ever gone haywire at any other local scrap, and will go down in local fistic history as a wild-party record.

Keep your high spies on a duck named Hugh Shropshire, a light-heavyweight amateur boxer hailing from the jassed drenched precincts of Whittier. He is training at the Manhattan and has been drawing a lot of attention to himself. He is under the management of Ben Webb and recently turned professional. Hugh will get his first great tryout against Pat Hayward (Tom Kennedy's pet) in about two weeks at one of the local clubs.

Jimmy Rafferty has gone Samoa, and threatens to push his fortunes under the southern cross. In order to pick up the native language, Jimmy has taken over a cracking good Samoan scrapper named Satini Piralloa, a veritable bronze Apollo. Leave it to Rafferty to get his man quick action, for the southern islander is to meet Ray Garcia at Tom Gallery's stadium the 19th inst. Satini is setting the paid and unpaid customers wild at the Main-street Athletic Club by his fast-fire workouts. When he put on his street clothes the Samoan milted Jimmy for two smacks. Art Brae'han noticing the touch rumbled, "Gee, Rafferty, but you're a lucky bird." Imagine his surprise when Jimmy shot back, "Lucky, eh, but you don't know how often every day he swings the same way."

Introducing Willie Hunnefield, the gift of fistiana to sun-baked Phoenix, Ariz. Willie hikes over to Los Angeles every now and then to round out one of his cards and incidentally get a breath of pure ozone. He declares the game over in jungers paradise is a case of love me little and love me long. He frequently bumps into the old "Fighting Fireman" (Sam Langford took all the fight and fire out of him) Jim Flynn who is a taxicab Jehu shouting, "step right this way," at Phoenix's railway station. Willie says that Jim has settled down into a steady worker, so steady that he never runs in to do one of his shows. Say, boys, do you remember Jim Flynn. Put a pair of gloves on his lunch hooks and he'd go right out and tackle a flock of gigantic tanks.

When the Palestine Parliament was called to order (just outside the Olympic Auditorium) after the Murphy-Miller fight, the members bowed their heads to the gloomy rhythm of "Massltoff," the Yiddisher "Dead March From Saul." "Oy, yoi, soeris," moaned Phil Kessler, "if this keeps up it will make schnorrers out of us all." The geese at time not only quack but squawk.

Larry Murphy, the ruler of championship prospects, had a good laugh at the Main-street Athletic Club when two readers and writers told him he would meet a tough egg in Benny Miller, who grew overnight from a lightweight to a middleweight. "Say," snapped the wild Irish lad, "I'll make him do more steps than Charley Paddock every dreamed of," and it looks very much as if Murphy spoke by the card. Benny will be unable to swing his under jawbone at the Globe Dairy restaurant for at least a month. In the mean time he will draw his gefillte fish through straws.

Jimmy Burns adventured farther than any other boxing manager to pick out a star for his stable. He went up clear into Alaska and signed an Eskimo named Teddy Lewin. Imagine his shell shock when Lewin (whom Jimmy started to work at the Manhattan) lurched over to him shouting, "You'll have to postpone the bout. I have got the chills."

"Dynamite Young George," who was the boxing rage here some years ago at Jack Doyle's Black Hole of Calcutta, has right crossed himself into a steady job at one of the local movie camps. He is probably the best protege Annette Kellerman ever sponsored. His quick and graceful dives into tanks come natural and his motto is—"always be yourself."

SCHEDULE ARCHERY PLAY

DEL MONTE, July 6.—The first archery tournament to be held here in several years has been scheduled for Monterey Peninsula Country Club Sunday, the 21st inst.

BELATED FIREWORKS FOR WRESTLING FANS

Lutze, left, and Joe Malcewicz, right, clash in the finish feature event of Lou Daro's mat the Olympic Wednesday night, more spectacular and sensationally fast wrestling is looked for produced by any mat bout on the Coast. It is reported the winner of this bout may meet the here.

A WARM WELCOME THAT HAS NEVER WORN OUT

"The nation-wide acclaim with which the Chrysler is heralded is due to the quick appreciation of a motor-wise public that here at last is a car which is a marked departure from all earlier practice and performance. + + + In distinctive appearance, in performance ability, in economy of operation, in fine standards of manufacturing, in roadability, in driving convenience, in supreme quality, motor car experts give the Chrysler a place apart. + + + For the Chrysler is more than a great engineering feat—it is, literally, the culmination of all past engineering experience."

TRUE FIVE YEARS AGO AND STILL TRUE

Daring to go back five years when the first Chrysler appeared, Chrysler can read without apology every promise made then, for every promise has been fulfilled.

In 1924 Chrysler was new. Its claims for performance, economy and stamina had not been proved valid by the hundreds of thousands of cars and millions of miles of driving that support today's leadership.

True, the automotive industry was startled by the wealth of Chrysler innovations. The public trend was to Chrysler if only because Chrysler instantly out-moded other cars in appearance. Comprehensive and gruelling tests had convinced Chrysler engineers that they had built a superior product, but the public—ever reluctant, and wisely so, to take without question the manufacturer's word for it—was proving out those claims five years ago. Chrysler owners by strict trial discovered before long that the car upheld every promise made for it, and their eagerness—continuing to this day—to testify to its speed, its power and its strength resulted in the prevailing world-wide acceptance of Chrysler products.

Now, in 1929, the public's confidence in Chrysler is still unwavering. We invite you to discover in a test of your own selection, the good reasons for Chrysler's uninterrupted success—for this constant acceptance of Chrysler leadership in quality and value.

COLORADO TOUR DESCRIBED

Scenic Trip Outlined for Traveler Desiring to Make Return East by Different Route

DENVER, July 6. (Exclusive)—The motoring tourist has a happy faculty of solving the problem of how to see the greatest amount of America without backing up on his track. That has been proved many times, and now the tourist who has gone over southern routes to Los Angeles has found how he can make a circle trip of Colorado on his way home.

This trip through the Colorado Rockies is so arranged that he misses nothing in scenic grandeur, highway construction and historic ruins. One really has, figuratively speaking, to take off the hat to the motorist who first made known the trip.

Leaving Los Angeles the motorist takes the transcontinental highway to Gallup, N. M. Here he turns north, passing Shiprock and the Ute Indian reservations, and in the latter he is in Colorado. The road goes on into Cortez, then turns east to Mesa Verde National Park. Here are the ruins of a people that lived in their homes under the cliffs for possibly 1000 years before Columbus sailed. In the event the tourist is interested in the prehistoric, at Cortez he can make a short side trip that will include Hovenweep National Monument and its mysterious round towers, including a partly buried city, and near by, Yucca House, a National Monument, and possibly the first of the communal dwellings now so familiar in the Southwest.

From Mesa Verde the highway continues to Durango, the largest city in Southwest Colorado. From Durango the "Million-Dollar Highway" is taken via Silverton, famous mining camp at an elevation of 9302 feet, to Ouray, elevation 7800 feet above the level of the sea. This highway has been pronounced one of the most spectacular in the world and gains the "Million-Dollar" name because of its cost.

From Ouray, frequently called the "Gem of the Rockies," and a mining town, the highway continues to Montrose, in the valley of that name and where the elevation is 5820 feet. Turning west at Montrose, the State highway leads to Grand Junction, near which is Colorado National Monument, world famous for its fantastic rock formations caused by erosion, wind and rain for ages past.

Leaving Grand Junction and following the Colorado River east the motorist may take a side trip to the Grand Mesa. This is a tract of heavily forested land of some 45,000 acres, with innumerable lakes, but its feature is that it stands with its top a mile above the valley. This freak was, we are told by geologists, caused in the millions of past years by its lava-encrusted sides from volcanic eruptions preventing its erosion with the surrounding country. In early days the mesa was a favorite hunting-place of the Utes, for wild game born upon its summit never could come down. The Ute managed to work his way laboriously up its sides. Today a motor road takes the tourist to the top.

Continuing on the highway, and still along the Colorado River the tourist comes to Glenwood Springs, noted resort. Beyond is Wolcott. From this station there are two routes open to the motorist, each with fine roads.

However, should the motorist choose, at Buena Vista, elevation 7800 feet, and where a magnificent view is had of the Collegiate Range, the motorist may turn east and go on into Colorado Springs, or onward to Denver, this latter taking him along the old Leadville trail of miners and freighters in early days.

HANDKERCHIEF POOL WORKING

Yellowstone Ranger Acts as Plumber to Clear Out One of Park's Most Attractive Geysers; Brings Forth Beer Bottles, Coins and Foreign Rocks

YELLOWSTONE PARK, July 6. (Exclusive)—A soup ladle, a large spoon and temporary Ranger Carlos Davis, stationed at the Old Faithful ranger station, have solved the problem of the recent diminishing activity of Handkerchief Pool, in the near vicinity of Old Faithful geyser in the Yellowstone National Park. As a result the famous hot spring is again performing in its old manner, and tourists are watching again the successful completion of the "handkerchief act."

Anxiety was first shown regarding the pool early in the spring, when the convex currents ceased to function. Working on the assumption that the pool had been clogged, Ranger Davis set himself up as unofficial plumber and securing the above-mentioned instruments from the kitchen of Old Faithful Inn, went to work on the idle pool.

After laboring for several hours at the pool, Davis returned to the station with a portion of a broken beer bottle, part of a spark plug, more than 100 hair pins, nails and stovebolts, a small horseshoe from a tobacco plug, several badges, a pair of scissors, a beer check and $1.98 in coins.

COLORADO TOUR DESCRIBED

Scenic Trip Outlined for Traveler Desiring to Make Return East by Different Route

DENVER, July 6. (Exclusive)—The motoring tourist has a happy faculty of solving the problem of how to see the greatest amount of America without backing up on his track. That has been proved many times, and now the tourist who has gone over southern routes to Los Angeles has found how he can make a circle trip of Colorado on his way home.

This trip through the Colorado Rockies is so arranged that he misses nothing in scenic grandeur, highway construction and historic ruins. One really has, figuratively speaking, to take off the hat to the motorist who first made known the trip.

Leaving Los Angeles the motorist takes the transcontinental highway to Gallup, N. M. Here he turns north, passing Shiprock and the Ute Indian reservations, and in the latter he is in Colorado. The road goes on into Cortez, then turns east to Mesa Verde National Park. Here are the ruins of a people that lived in their homes under the cliffs for possibly 1000 years before Columbus sailed. In the event the tourist is interested in the prehistoric, at Cortez he can make a short side trip that will include Hovenweep National Monument and its mysterious round towers, including a partly buried city, and near by, Yucca House, a National Monument, and possibly the first of the communal dwellings now so familiar in the Southwest.

From Mesa Verde the highway continues to Durango, the largest city in Southwest Colorado. From Durango the "Million-Dollar Highway" is taken via Silverton, famous mining camp at an elevation of 9302 feet, to Ouray, elevation 7800 feet above the level of the sea. This highway has been pronounced one of the most spectacular in the world and gains the "Million-Dollar" name because of its cost.

From Ouray, frequently called the "Gem of the Rockies," and a mining town, the highway continues to Montrose, in the valley of that name and where the elevation is 5820 feet. Turning west at Montrose, the State highway leads to Grand Junction, near which is Colorado National Monument, world famous for its fantastic rock formations caused by erosion, wind and rain for ages past.

Leaving Grand Junction and following the Colorado River east the motorist may take a side trip to the Grand Mesa. This is a tract of heavily forested land of some 45,000 acres, with innumerable lakes, but its feature is that it stands with its top a mile above the valley. This freak was, we are told by geologists, caused in the millions of past years by its lava-encrusted sides from volcanic eruptions preventing its erosion with the surrounding country. In early days the mesa was a favorite hunting-place of the Utes, for wild game born upon its summit never could come down. The Ute managed to work his way laboriously up its sides. Today a motor road takes the tourist to the top.

Continuing on the highway, and still along the Colorado River the tourist comes to Glenwood Springs, noted resort. Beyond is Wolcott. From this station there are two routes open to the motorist, each with fine roads.

However, should the motorist choose, at Buena Vista, elevation 7800 feet, and where a magnificent view is had of the Collegiate Range, the motorist may turn east and go on into Colorado Springs, or onward to Denver, this latter taking him along the old Leadville trail of miners and freighters in early days.

HANDKERCHIEF POOL WORKING

Yellowstone Ranger Acts as Plumber to Clear Out One of Park's Most Attractive Geysers; Brings Forth Beer Bottles, Coins and Foreign Rocks

YELLOWSTONE PARK, July 6. (Exclusive)—A soup ladle, a large spoon and temporary Ranger Carlos Davis, stationed at the Old Faithful ranger station, have solved the problem of the recent diminishing activity of Handkerchief Pool, in the near vicinity of Old Faithful geyser in the Yellowstone National Park. As a result the famous hot spring is again performing in its old manner, and tourists are watching again the successful completion of the "handkerchief act."

Anxiety was first shown regarding the pool early in the spring, when the convex currents ceased to function. Working on the assumption that the pool had been clogged, Ranger Davis set himself up as unofficial plumber and securing the above-mentioned instruments from the kitchen of Old Faithful Inn, went to work on the idle pool.

After laboring for several hours at the pool, Davis returned to the station with a portion of a broken beer bottle, part of a spark plug, more than 100 hair pins, nails and stovebolts, a small horseshoe from a tobacco plug, several badges, a pair of scissors, a beer check and $1.98 in coins.

Coach Howard Jones of Southern California Returns Home Today Following Stay in Eas

TROJAN GRID MENTOR HERE —TO LEAD SUMMER SCHOOL

'Thundering Herd' Likely to Retain Power Play in Coming Campaign; Brilliant Backs to Return

With the return tonight of Coach Howard Jones of the University of Southern California football squad from the Middle West, talk of the chances of his Trojan team to win another [illegible] championship next fall and discussion of football in [illegible] will start to fill the air, continuing with a constant [illegible] until the populace works itself into a frenzy of excitement, wild predictions and bad guesses by the time the first local game will be staged at the Coliseum, September 28, when the Trojans will open the season with U.C.L.A.

HOWARD JONES

Jones has been away from his home in North Hollywood for nearly [illegible] months, having spent part of the time at his old home in Ohio with his famous brother Ted and his parents and having devoted the rest of it to conducting courses in how to coach football at the Kansas State Teachers' College and during the past two weeks at the University of Kansas.

The Trojan [illegible] will open the football division of the University of Southern California summer session course in [illegible] the 22nd inst., and will [illegible] his lectures and demonstrations on the fine points of the game until August 3. So [illegible] Jones held in the football [illegible] that one of the biggest [illegible] of high school and college [illegible] in the country is expected to attend his course on the Southern California campus.

[illegible] thing that student coaches [illegible] to know when the football [illegible] starts and a question that [illegible] answer in the class is [illegible] or not he will stick with [illegible] "power play" system. [illegible] critics of the game last [illegible] claimed that the Jones [illegible] play which swarmed through [illegible] for several years and [illegible] Southern Californians the [illegible] "Thundering Herd" was [illegible] stopped by Southern [illegible] opponents.

STOPPED PLAY

[illegible] claimed that rival [illegible] had at last solved the [illegible] of meeting the mass attacks [illegible] great numbers of interferers piled up by Jones ahead [illegible] ball carriers. Even in the face [illegible] Trojans' great 10-to-0 victory over Stanford and their winning of the Jack F. Rissman national intercollegiate football trophy [illegible] of the unofficial [illegible] championship under the [illegible] scoring system, they [illegible] the "power play" had [illegible].

[illegible] time Jones has been [illegible] if he contemplates any [illegible] in his system, and every [illegible] answered, "Oh, I don't [illegible] always likes to make [illegible] every year, you know. I've been considering a few changes, but I don't know yet whether I'll try them or not."

Those who know Jones believe that this means that in the main he will stick to his old system, making just enough changes over his past plays to keep his opponents guessing. The good old "power play" did not go so badly last year; in fact, it went just about as well as ever and perhaps a little better, those who followed the Trojans closely claim, asserting that there is no reason why Jones should adopt a new style of play.

There were just two teams last year against which the running attack of the Trojans was not overly successful. The first was California and fans who saw that game remember almost with tears the soaked, sloppy field that the Trojans had to play on that day. A power attack such as that made under the Jones system cannot go on a wet field because somewhere in the play one of the many interferers or even the ball carrier is sure to slip and ruin the whole works. A pass attack was impossible because of the wet ball and the soaked conditions kept the game from being a fair test as to whether or not the power play would work against the Bears under ordinary conditions.

PASSES WON

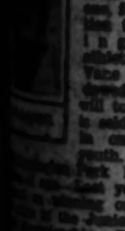
In the Stanford game the Cards stopped the Trojan running attack, but they beat themselves by doing it, for in order to stop Don Williams they pulled their secondary defense in close and left this territory wide open for passes. In that game, Williams used play after play at the Stanford line that he knew wouldn't work just to draw the Card secondary defense in and when it came in close waiting for another power attack a pass shot out to McCaslin or Tappaan or Thomas and the Palo Altoans found that stopping the power play had not done them much good.

Jones is going to be blessed with a great array of material next year despite the loss of All-American Jesse Hibs, Don Williams, Charley Boren, Lowry McCaslin and others. In addition to his many varsity performers who will be back, Jones will have a talented crew of sophomores, including Ernie Pinckert, Hammack, Mallory, Shaver, Musick, Jurick, Joslin, Williamson, Hall, Baker and one or two others, all of whom are certain to make energetic bids for regular berths.

VANE BAKER REMARKABLE BOY

[illegible] by Five Points for Trip East Last Year, He Started Training Immediately for 1929 Games and Made Highest Score Ever Rolled Up

BY BRAVEN DYER



Vane Baker, Huntington Park [illegible] who is now in the East [illegible] national Junior Olympic Games championship, is one of the most remarkable juvenile athletes ever produced in Los Angeles. Remarkable in more ways than one, for in addition to possessing unusual athletic ability, Vane is endowed with a will to win that is seldom found in one of his youth.

[illegible] Park kid is only [illegible] age. Last year he set [illegible] winning one of the [illegible] Junior Olympic [illegible]. By dint of [illegible] Vane annexed the Los [illegible] title with a score of [illegible] Deal was second [illegible] looked like a trip to [illegible] for Vane, but when [illegible] California championship [illegible] young Baker was [illegible] journey by the [illegible] points. Deal won [illegible] Hemp of San Bernardino second with 877, Baker [illegible] 872.

[illegible] broken-hearted as [illegible]. Victory had [illegible] within his grasp [illegible] was a tough break. [illegible] of lying down on [illegible] plucky little fighter [illegible] immediately to [illegible] this year's meet. Little [illegible] was heard of him [illegible] first spring days, but [illegible] or two began to [illegible] The Times office. You might just as well send my coach a set of Junior Olympic papers. He hasn't any. When do you think we can have the district meet? I am getting in a hurry. Will the Huntington Park High School be in charge of the district meet? They were last year. I will close and write me soon. And mail the papers to my house and I will take them to the principal.

Yours truly,
VANE BAKER.

March 28, 1929.

Dear Mr. Nuss and Mr. Comstock:

I will write you a little to let you know I want about five entry blanks. I am rounding up my fellows and helping them with the baseball just like you showed me and they got the whip into it. And the boy that was in with me last year has gained twenty feet already.

I have been getting fifteen and fourteen baskets out of twenty. I have one senior and about nine or ten juniors. We are practicing every night, Mr. Comstock. I hate to bother you so much about writing letters but I want to get all the boys I can for the Olympics. Answer real soon for I want to get the entries in as soon as possible.

Yours truly,
VANE BAKER.

Bell, Cal., March 25, 1929.

Dear Mr. Comstock:

Was glad to get your letter. I guess I will need about twenty-five pamphlets for my school and about three entry blanks. Mr. Comstock, I wish you would give me an idea when we have the school and district and county meets, so I will know. Do you think Mr. Squire will have charge of the district meet? He is at Huntington Park. I am planning on getting a letter Friday so be sure and write me.

Yours truly,
VANE BAKER.

June 29, 1929.
New Mexico.

Dear Mr. Dyer:

How are you today? I am just fine. Had a good rub down this morning and that makes me feel fine. How is everybody at The Times? Tell Sharp hello for me. I sure hope I win, as I am going to try hard. It rained a little this morning, but didn't amount to anything. I can't write very well while the train is going. We sure have a time with Jerry about him eating too much. He wants ham and eggs and oatmeal and nearly everything. We passed by the Indian school in New Mexico this morning, sure was a big one. And we stopped at Flagstaff and ran around for a while, which made us feel a little better. Well, Braven, I don't know much to write till I get to Chicago and then I will drop you a line so you write me and address it to the Strand Hotel, Atlantic City, New York. Write soon.

VANE.

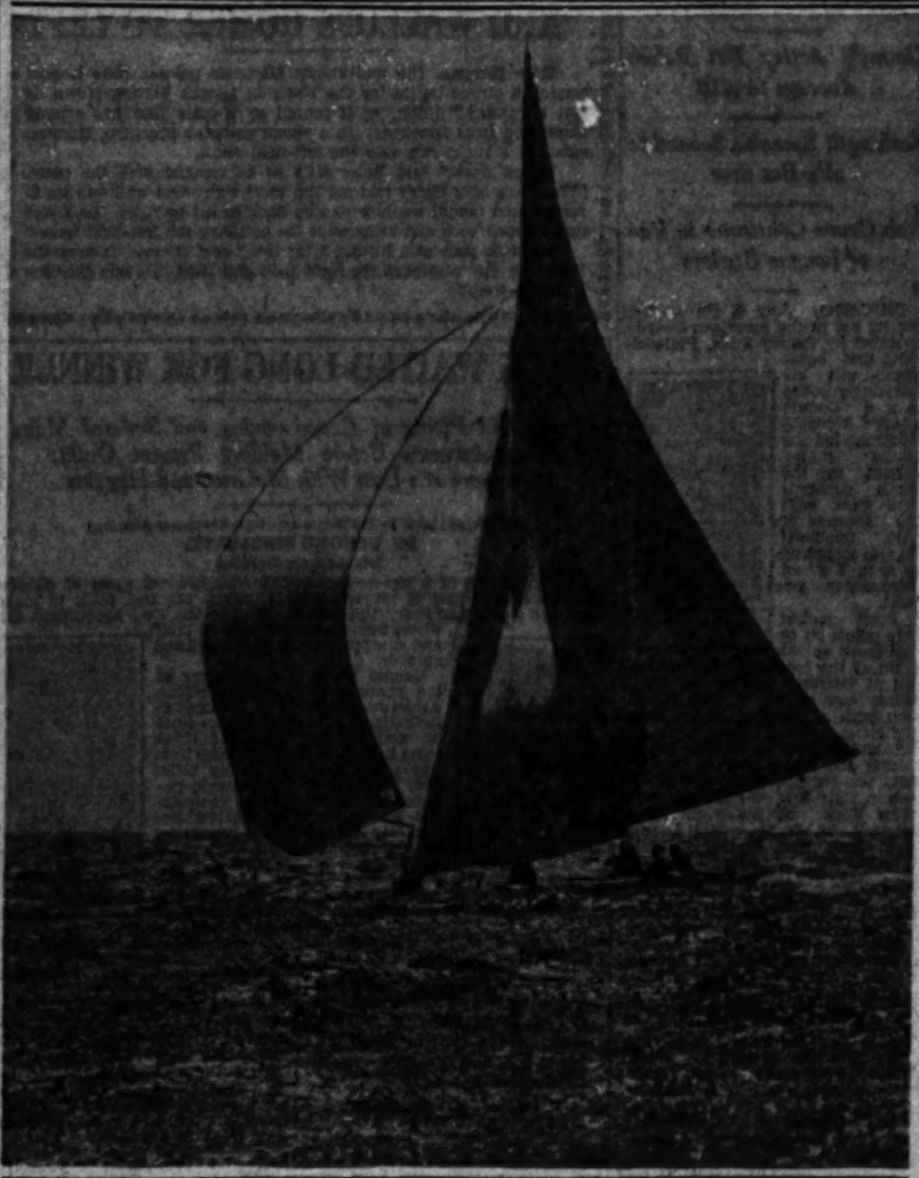
ARTILLERY POLOISTS TRIM PRIMROSE FOUR

BRYN MAWR (Pa.) July 6. (AP)—The Sixth Field Artillery polo team of Baltimore, today defeated the Primrose Four of Rumson, N. J., 15 goals to 8. It was the final match of the northern section of the southeastern circuit tournament.

The Sixth Field Artillery will meet the Sixteenth Field Artillery, of Fort Myers, Va., winner of the southern section of the southeastern circuit next week. The winner of that match will go to Chicago in September and engage in the intercircuit finals.

REACHING FOR NEW WINDS TO CONQUER

That's just about what the Babe, Owen Churchill's trim little racehorse of the sea, is doing these days. The Babe won the King of Spain trophy last March in the eight-meter class and she recently copped the honors in the two-day sail around San Clemente Island from boats that are almost twice her size. Ted Conant has skippered the Babe in her sea victories this year. The Babe will be one of the favorites in the Southern California Yachting Association regatta at Santa Barbara next month.



Thrills and Spills Mark Boat Events

LAKE ARROWHEAD, July 6.—Plenty of thrills prefaced the Lake Arrowhead mile-high outboard championships here this afternoon. Every ripple stirred by the strong wind made it rough riding for the lightweight craft.

Miss Hupmobile, owned by T. Tupman and driven by Joe Bendowski took one first and two third places making it a full afternoon. In Class C division Miss Hupmobile led Wild Oats to win this event. Miss Mildred Miles, one of two women pilot sin today's races, showed her ability to handle one of these light craft. Tupman's craft negotiated the two-and-one-half-mile course in 10m. 26s. Running in second place was Rupert Turnbull until he took one of the curves too sharply and swamped his boat.

The Class B event was won by Johnny Adams in his Crandall Comet. He covered the distance in 9m. 30s. Adams holds the world's record for Class B boats with an average speed of 40.11 miles per hour over a mile straightaway. Later in the afternoon Adams turned over on the northeast curve. He was uninjured, however, and he will be back in tomorrow's races.

In Division 2 Class C Al Thompson piloted Wild Oats to victory. His time was 9m. 29s. H. C. Ferguson's Blue Streak IV failed to show her speed today. Ferguson was working on her until late tonight and reports he will be ship shape for tomorrow.

STARS BOAT SERIES OPENS

Newport Harbor Yacht Club Stages First Round of Elimination Events Today

The Star fleet of the Newport Harbor Yacht Club will open its elimination series today in preparation for the international races to be sailed at New Orleans in September, according to Temple Ashbrook, secretary of the Southern California Forty-five-foot Sailboat Association.

Five new stars have been added to the Newport fleet and will receive their first baptismal race today. The finals of the two-day racing events in the summer program of the outboards will be held today at the mile-high resort, Lake Arrowhead. The success of this event will largely depend whether an annual summer race is staged here as part of the sports program.

OWEN CHURCHILL

With the sixth annual San Clemente race tucked away nicely in the locker, Owen Churchill's Babe proved her mettle for speed in most any kind of weather. Built in Germany, the Babe was entered in the last Olympic races at Amsterdam, but failed to show anything. She was put in the water but three days before the race and was in no condition for a just test.

The Babe was brought to this country and carefully tuned up. Last March she won the King of Spain trophy and proved all that her builders claimed for her. W. W. Pedder's devil ship Diablo was favored to show her stern to the field, making it four wins in this annual race. This victory by the Babe was a complete upset in yachting circles and marks her as a craft that must be reckoned with.

She is an eight-meter boat and as graceful as a gull. Skippered by Ted Conant in this San Clemente event, she showed that she has stamina and speed. A new winner in this event was needed; the Diablo had had things her own way. The Babe has given sailboat racing a stimulant that it has sorely needed. It is to be hoped that all does not become lethargic again.

O. K. Hunsaker has shipped his heavy weather R-boat Pirate east for the Larchmont races, Long Island. From Larchmont Hunsaker will ship her to Marblehead, Mass., where she will race. Matt Walsh will skipper her. Commodore Hunsaker will not be able to make the trip, according to present plans.

Abe Espinosa Defends Title

MILWAUKEE, July 6. (AP)—Abe Espinosa, western open golf champion, will defend his title in the western open tournament to be held on the Ozaukee Country Club links, August 21 to 24, next, it was learned here today.

Espinosa's entry blank was received today by C. Ben Johnson, tournament manager. George Von Elm has already signified his intention of entering the tournament, and Walter Hagen and Horton Smith are expected to compete. The tournament will be Milwaukee's first of major importance since Walter Hagen won the western open crown at the old Blue Mound course in 1916.

AMERICAN ROWERS WIN

Boys of Cambridge (Mass.) School Cop Honors in Historic Race at Henley, Eng.

HENLEY (Eng.) July 6. (AP)—The Thames Challenge Cup, prize of England's famous rowing tournament, was captured today by eight young oarsmen from the Browne and Nichols school of Cambridge, Mass., and their 16-year-old coxswain.

After eliminating first Trinity College of Cambridge in the semifinals this morning, the invaders triumphed over the Thames Rowing Club, defenders of the trophy, in the last contest this afternoon. They nosed out Trinity by a third of a length and trimmed the Thames eight in clean-cut fashion by one and one-quarter lengths.

The American boys, after each victory, gave a fine display of school spirit and overflowing "pep" which added to their already great popularity on the river. Their success was the more impressive when it is considered that the average age of the oarsmen is younger than the average of their defeated rivals. The boys will be received by the American Ambassador at London Monday and then will begin an educational tour of England.

The historic grand challenge cup was won by the Leander Rowing Club of England, in seven minutes flat, the Thames Rowing Club falling by two lengths. L. D. F. Gunther of Holland won the famous diamond sculls, from the champion, Joe Wright, Jr., of Canada. This made a three-way division of the honors of the river for the day, among Great Britain, Holland and the United States.

German Ring Champ Sails for America

YACHT RACING GAME OF SKILL

Handling Stick is Big Job Experts Point Out

Ted Conant Ranks With Best Davis Brothers Claim

Mat Walsh Leaves Tomorrow to Handle Pirate

BY THE SKIPPER

Skill required in handling the "stick" of a modern yacht in sailing races is as necessary as that required by champions in golf, polo and any other line of sport, according to Southern California yachtsmen. There are a number who claim that even more skill is required by a winning skipper than in any other line of sport.

Emmett Davis, member of the Corinthian crew of the eight-meter yacht Babe, and Pier Davis, his brother, also member of the crew of that famous craft, which has been "cleaning up" in local waters since she was brought over from Germany, contend that they have one of the most skillful skippers in Ted Conant, who also did great work with the sloop Friendship in last year's racing.

The Davis brothers point out that the skipper of a racing yacht has to be a marvel of cool-headedness. He must know how to steer to get the best out of the wind, while watching the trim of his sails, abide by the numerous rules of the game to keep from being disqualified, and at the same time keep his head clear to outthink the other skippers. Years of experience and much racing are required to obtain a clear idea of all the fine points and the skipper may have to utilize all he knows of the game at any moment during any race. In addition he must keep from fouling a rival craft, while thinking about half a dozen angles on which he must make an instant decision, and if this decision is erroneous, he might lose a lead which cannot be recovered.

There are a number of outstanding skippers on the Coast. One of the shrewdest, who is seldom beaten, is Ted Geary of Seattle. Another is Lester Stone of Oakland. Arthur Rousseau of San Francisco wins many races by consistent sailing and the faculty of having fast boats. Bennie Weston is another consistent skipper who has cleaned up many trophies in the R class. Tommy Lee, son of Don Lee, both of them great yachting enthusiasts and fine sportsmen, has a large collection of silverware to illustrate his prowess at the "stick." There is seldom a sailing race seen in local waters that Lee, the senior, does not attend with his fine big schooner, Invader, to give encouragement and to take a keen interest in the outcome.

During the 1926 Honolulu race, Don Lee won both going and coming with his big yacht. At the start of the 1928 Honolulu race he adhered to the time-honored custom of accompanying the fleet many miles out to sea to give the racing crews "bon voyage," a fine gesture and proof of his sportsmanship.

One of the strongest arguments being advanced to make the terminus of the next ocean race, in 1930, to some other point than Honolulu, is that only by changing the course will entries from San Francisco be made. When the course for 1928 was announced with Hilo as the terminus, four San Francisco yachts planned to enter the event. When the terminus was switched back to Honolulu, the San Franciscans lost interest, due to the fact that a prominent member of the San Francisco Yacht Club in 1926 was very shabbily treated by Honolulu prohibition officials. The San Francisco yachtsmen claim the Honolulu yachtsmen made no effort to mend matters and the former decided to give Honolulu a wide berth in future. Possibly the situation could be solved by making Papeete the next terminus, to get plenty of entries and to get a touch of the old South Sea life before it vanishes with approaching civilization.

Tomorrow, Matt Walsh and Fox Case will leave for the east coast to race the R-class sloop Pirate in New England regattas. The Pirate is an excellent boat, but the east coast is far in advance of the West in the matter of R-class craft, largely from the development of so many more and keener competition among designers. At first glance the venture seems to imitate Don Quixote and his battle against the windmills. However, all three yachtsmen claim that the invasion is chiefly a gesture of good sportsmanship from the west coast. They will do their best, not expecting to win, but hoping that they may. Needless to say the good wishes of all local yachtsmen goes with them.

One of the outstanding phases of the local yachting growth is the increase in the number of naval architects and their influence on the sport. Their work has resulted in the construction of a large number of fine craft in Southern California. They help to create rivalry that is good for the sport. In their good sportsmanship they always have high admiration for each other and boost each other's work.

ARRANGE GOLF TOURNEY

DEL MONTE, July 6.—Clifford Johnstone, secretary of the Pacific Coast Gas Association, made arrangements here today for a golf tournament in connection with the Pacific Gas Association convention at Hotel Del Monte, September 10-15. A diving exhibition by noted feminine springboard stars is also planned for the convention period.

HACK WILSON.

When Lewis (Hack) Wilson, slugger of the Cubs, attempted to slug Ray Kolp of the Reds, he started something in baseball. Kolp, who is called "Windy" by his teammates on account of his peculiar technic as a baseball jockey, one who rides fellow-players, so irritated Wilson that he left first base to attempt to offer a rebuttal with his fists. No blows landed.

WILSON FINED

President John A. Heydler tod imposed a fine of $100 and su pension of three days on Wils reprimanding the player by le ter, "whatever your provocati may have been, you were not jus fied in leaving your base during t game to take the law into yo own hands. Your actions mig easily have started a riot."

Wilson later in a railway stati found a player he could hit, in t person of Pete Donohue, Cinci nati pitcher. This incident had n influence on the presidential fi however. In the same series pr cipitating the Wilson-Kolp batt Riggs Stephenson was charged the Reds with inflicting an inte tional injury on Hughie Critz, h next-door neighbor, Critz hailin from Mississippi and Stephenso from Alabama.

News of the punishment ordered for Wilson met with disapproval as inadequate by th Cincinnati players, some of whom declared he "should have had a year."

Manager Jack Hendricks i sued a statement containing wh amounted to a threat when he sai "When the Cubs come here (Ci cinnati,) for a doubleheader Au ust 25, there will be something d ing for a certainty." The Red ma ager discounted the Cubs' chanc for the championship, suggesti "they will wilt under strong opp sition," strong words in baseb where reflection on a team's cou age is the most deadly of insult Battling on and off the field be tween pennant contenders has bee known in baseball, but this may the first time a tail-ender has d clared war on a one-two team.

HENDRICKS SAYS REDS OUT TO WHIP CUBS

CINCINNATI, July 6. (AP)—Before leaving for Pittsburgh, Jack Hendricks, Reds manager, referring to the Wilson-Kolp, Wilson-Donohue and Critz-Stephenson affairs, Chicago, said: "When the Cubs come here for a double-header August 25 there will be something doing for a certainty."

Hendricks had plenty to say about the Cubs' conduct with the Reds this week and said: "I have an idea the Reds series will keep the Cubs out of the championship.

"The gist of the matter is the Cubs are up in the air and we had them worried to death, even if we did lose three of the four games. Our boys were fighting them all the time and the Cubs, nervous over finding the tail-enders were no set-up for them, resorted to rough tactics. When a player will act as Wilson did, it is a pretty sure sign they will wilt under strong opposition."

Hendricks also made a lengthy criticism of Rigler's umpiring in the Cubs' series.

"The injury to Critz was inflicted intentionally by Stephenson," Hendricks declared. "We had the Cubs beaten and they were so worried that they were ready to go to extremes. Stephenson was on first when the next batter hit to Ford for a cinch double play. Stephenson was out by fifteen feet, but went off the line to jump into Hughie with his spikes in order to prevent the double play."

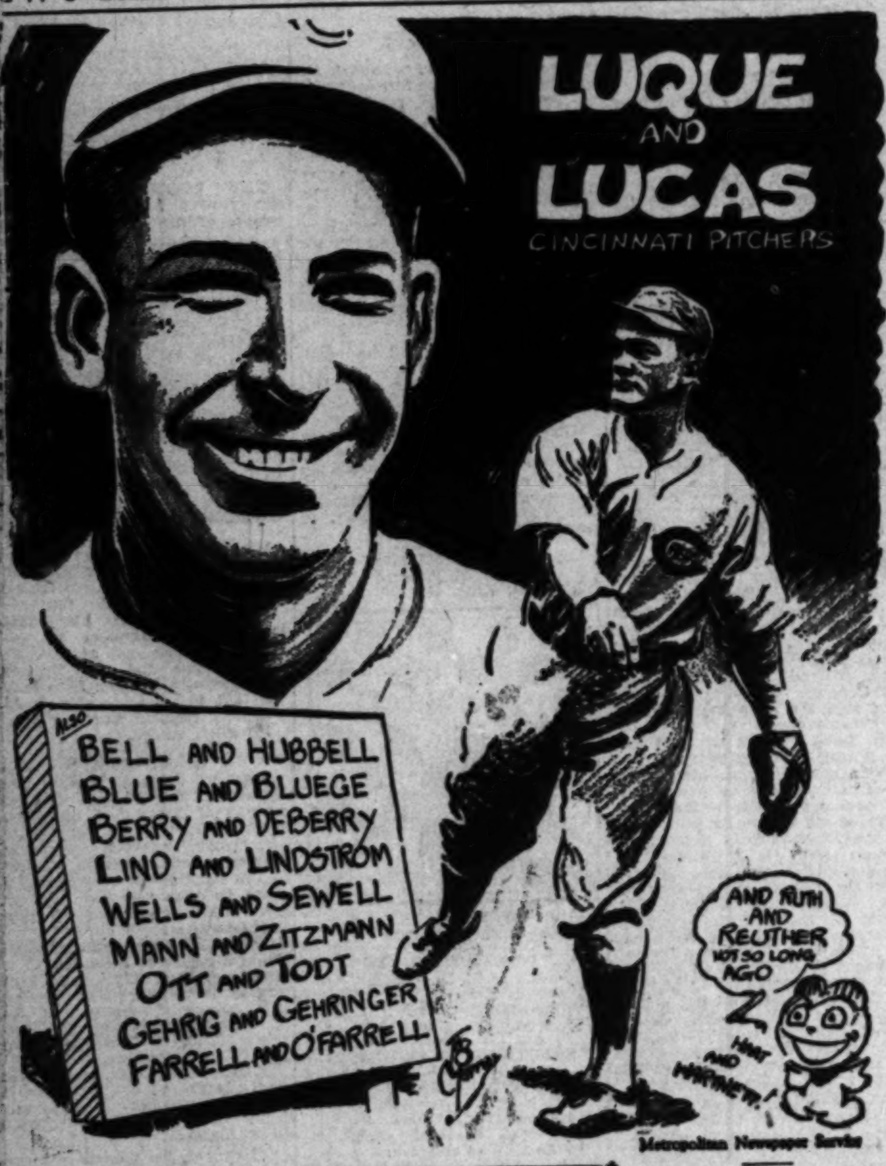
TWO RED STARS - - - By Feg Murray



Metropolitan Newspaper Service

LUQUE and Lucas aren't the only names in baseball that are phonetically alike (now, no dirty cracks about baseball players being phoney,) as the list in the accompanying cartoon will show. But Luque and Lucas are the only two "bits of alliteration," that I could find who are bracketed on the same team. Ruth and Ruether were good for a cartoon once, when "Dutch" pitched for the Yankees in 1926, and especially since the Babe, a great hitter, was formerly a fine pitcher, while Ruether, a great pitcher, was also a fine batter. But Ruether has passed along from the majors now, so we'll confine this discourse to the two Red pitchers.

Adolfo Luque is not one of the twelve apostles; he is a Cuban who can throw a baseball as well as Lindbergh can throw a dirty look at a reporter. With "Red" Lucas, Jakie May, and Pete Donohue, he makes up the Big Four of the Cincinnati Reds' pitching staff, which, no matter how you look at it, hasn't been much of a pitching staff this year. The fiery Cuban is now in his twelfth straight season with the Reds, and he will be 38 years of age next August. Six years ago he led his league in pitching, with a fine earned run average of 1.93, and a won and lost per centage of .771, compiled from twenty-seven victories and eight defeats. He pitched five innings in two games in the 1919 world series, but didn't do much. Ever since his big year in 1923 he has only been fairly successful. Do you think he's through, or do you think he needs a change of scenery? I bet that Bucky Harris could make a winner out of him.

Charles Fred Lucas, otherwise known as "Red," is now in his fourth season with the Rhinelanders, and has been having a better year of it, so far, than his team-mate Luque. "Red" is a made-over infielder and outfielder (usually they change from pitching to fly-chasing.) He is a good batter, and in three years with Cincinnati has won thirty-nine games and lost twenty-five. His home is in Tennessee.

KLING AND MEYERS COULD PUT 'EM OUT

Johnny Kling, rated one of baseball's greatest catchers, topped all players of his position in putouts five straight seasons while a member of the Chicago Cubs. His five-year record started in 1902. He was tied with Gibson of Pittsburgh for putout honors in 1907.

The twenty-nine year record for putouts by catchers was established by Meyers of the New York Giants in 1911 when he handled 729 putouts. Meyers was the leading catcher in putouts for five successive seasons from 1910 till 1914, inclusive.

James Wilson caught in 140 contests for the Philadelphia and St. Louis teams last season and handled 469 putouts to lead the league.

FOXX GAINS IN SLUGGING RACE

Jimmy's Active Bat Raises Average to .410

Fothergill Remains Second to A's Bat Star

Bob Grove Continues in Van of League Hurlers

CHICAGO, July 6. (AP) — The busiest bat in the American League, operated by Jimmy Foxx, Philadelphia first baseman, was increasingly active and Connie Mack's versatile workman led the junior major circuit for the sixth consecutive week with an average of .410, unofficial figures including games of Wednesday reveal.

JIMMY FOXX.

Foxx tacked five points on to his mark to remain at the top, while Bob Fothergill of Detroit picked up four points and stayed in second position with a mark of .397. Harry Heilmann, another Tiger, who figures on leading the American League during odd years, climbed into the first ten for the first time of the season with .351. Other leaders besides Foxx and Fothergill were: Manush, St. Louis, .389; Lazzeri, New York, .372; Simmons, Philadelphia, .367; Cochrane, Philadelphia, .361; Fonseca, Cleveland, .358; Gehringer, Detroit, .352; Heilmann, Detroit .351; Combs, New York, .351.

As a team the Athletics did not hit quite so hard during the week, but remained in the lead with an average of .312, a four-point drop. The Tigers improved by two points to .308, and remained in second position. The Athletics had scored a season total of 457 runs, while holding opponents to 272. The Yankees, due largely to the revival of Babe Ruth's activity, had collected sixty-eight home runs, to sixty-two for the Athletics.

Although Bob Grove lost his only start of the week he continued to set the pace for pitchers working in turn. The Athletics' southpaw had twelve victories and two defeats. His left-handed team-mate, Rube Walberg, ranked second with twelve wins and three defeats by winning two games. Eddie Rommel worked in two games, but failed to alter his season mark, which stood at six victories and no defeats.

Other leaders: Runs batted in, Simmons, Philadelphia, eighty-one; home runs, Gehrig, New York, twenty-one; runs scored, Gehringer, Detroit, seventy-two; triples, Miller, Philadelphia, nine; doubles, Heilmann, Detroit, twenty-eight; stolen bases, Gehringer, Detroit, thirteen; triple plays, Chicago and New York, one each; double plays, Cleveland, eighty-five; strikeouts, Grove, Philadelphia, eighty-eight.

Babe Herman, the well-known Glendale painter, who is now waging a strong battle for the National League batting crown, is just a "natural" hitter, as is proved by a story that has arrived about him from Brooklyn. In a recent game at Brooklyn, Herman smashed a home run over the left-field fence.

"Head work," said Babe gaily as he romped over the plate. "You know Max Carey told me the short right-field wall was made for me and taught me how to step back to hit to right. So I just now stepped back and away went the ball over the left-field fence."

"You do your own hitting after this," said Carey. "You're the kind of a guy who aims for right field and then hits one over the left-field wall."

MACK WAITED LONG FOR WINNER

Connie Did Plenty of Experimenting and Suffered Many Disappointments Before Molding Present Outfit; Compare A's Boss With McGraw and Huggins

[Copyright, 1929, by the North American Newspaper Alliance.]

BY GEORGE MORIARTY,
Big League Umpire

The building of a top-notch baseball club involves years of diligent selection and sorting of players, most of whom are cast aside to make room for those who carry the punch. During the long experiment the wisest manager must come to grief and disappointment times without number.

CONNIE MACK

JOHN McGRAW.

Connie Mack, wise manager of the pennant-seeking Philadelphia Athletics, furnishes a pointed illustration. It is fifteen years since he won his last flag, and those years have burdened him more than any other pilot. It is my belief that by virtue of his extreme patience he has taught the competitive sports world its greatest lesson. He has accepted a long series of pennantless defeats with grace and a spirit of the most amazing resignation.

Mack and McGraw of the Giants are close rivals in the business of winning championships over a long period of years. There is a vast difference between these two great baseball personalities.

While Mack pets and cajoles his crew, McGraw employs the high-pressure policy of forcing their talents. McGraw is feverish to win, and directs as much as possible the plays about to take place, particularly in regard to battery work.

Manager Huggins of the Yankees seems to fit in between Mack and McGraw. Huggins is a bundle of nervous energy, but is neither too forceful nor too indulgent in contact with his players. While Huggins "call the turn" as often as possible, he encourages his pitchers and catchers to use their own initiative. Mack and McGraw have nothing on the Yankees' pilot in the business of switching pitchers and sending in substitutes at dramatic moments. In the delicate matter of appraising rookies, Huggins also rates as high as Mack and McGraw.

There is one odd branch of the managing business in which Connie Mack excels. It is in mingling with his players. I believe Mack spends more time with his men off the field than any other major league manager. Mack finds this far more beneficial than the "skull-practice" meetings held before the games.

When the Athletics are on the road Mack is in the hotel lobbies every morning, ready to discuss unusual features of the preceding game or weigh the strength and flaws of the opponents for possible profit in the game at hand.

To the average outsider the present make-up of the Athletics is more or less unknown. The uncertainty of molding this powerful organization was touched upon by Mack in a chat I had with him the other day, when he said:

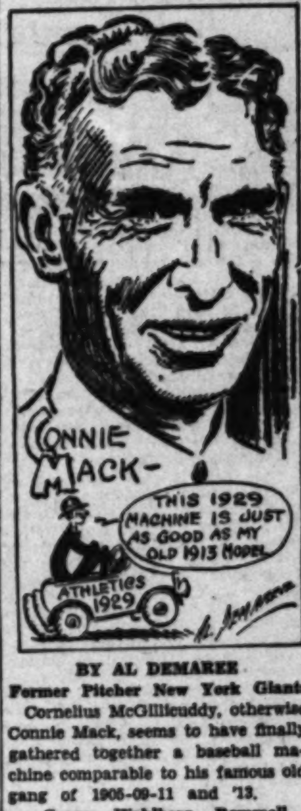
"Many people think our present winning combination was my conception all along. That is funny to me. Of course, there was little confusion in the selection of the outfield, but the infield was an entirely different problem.

"At our training camp last spring I decided that Sammy Hale had won the right to play third by a big margin. He played the best ball of his career but was injured after the season started, and now Dykes is going like hot cakes at third.

"Originally I thought Foxx might be our third baseman this year, and Orwoll was tentatively slated to play first. So, you see, baseball is a peculiar game, and one cannot figure very far ahead."

Mack admitted that he thought of buying Dale Alexander, first baseman of Detroit, from the Toronto club last fall. Mack offered $75,000 for the big slugger, but Detroit beat him to it. If the deal had gone through, Alexander might now be playing first for the Athletics, with Foxx at third.

Mack Machine Compares With Old-Time Club



CONNIE MACK-
THIS 1929 MACHINE IS JUST AS GOOD AS MY OLD 1913 MODEL
ATHLETICS 1929
Al Demaree

BY AL DEMAREE
Former Pitcher New York Giants

Cornelius McGillicuddy, otherwise Connie Mack, seems to have finally gathered together a baseball machine comparable to his famous old gang of 1905-09-11 and '13.

Grove, Wahlberg, Rommell, Quinn and Earnshaw do not suffer from comparison even when stacked up against Plank, Bender, Coombs and Bush.

Cochrane is probably superior to either Lapp or Schang, especially on the offensive.

Foxx, Bishop, Boley and Dykes are probably not as great as McInnis, Collins, Barry and Baker, but still are great enough to cause anguish among the opposition for several years.

Simmons, Haas and Miller hold their own with Strunk, Oldring and Murphy.

I would like to hear the fans' opinion as to the relative strength of the old Athletics and the 1929 machine. Drop me a line and I'll give the fans' ideas some publicity.

COOMBS SELECTS GROVE AS GREATEST SOUTHPAW

PHILADELPHIA, July 6. (Exclusive)—This season is unlikely to find Moses (Lefty) Grove setting up any new marks for strikeouts. He is not pitching that kind of baseball. No longer does he bear down unless it is absolutely necessary. Indeed, it is by no means probable that Grove will establish new marks in any curving department. He is not gunning for records; he is out for results, and he is getting them.

LEFTY GROVE

Jack Coombs, former "iron man" of the A.'s who drops into Shibe Park pretty regularly these days, opines that Grove is the greatest left-hand peakman the game has known. This is a broad statement coming from Jack, who was on the team which once boasted of two marvelous portsiders — Rube Waddell and Eddie Plank.

Coombs considers Grove the greatest, he says, because under present conditions where free swinging is the fancy, the Mack southpaw wins games without exerting himself and by resorting to his fireball only in time of peril.

PROMISING PITCHER

Frank Nekola, who recently joined the Yankees, worked in ninety-three innings for the Holy Cross team during the past season, allowing only forty-four hits and thirteen runs. He struck out 112 batters, gave twenty bases on balls and made but one wild pitch.

HOLLYWOOD AND SEAT OPEN SERIES TUES

Schedule Gives Sheiks Chan Get Big Jump in Second Ha Seraphs Tackle Senators

BY BOB RAY

Hollywood's hustling Stars, who got off to a good second half against Sacramento this week, return to Tuesday to open a series against Ernie Johnson's The Tribe, although it hasn't fared so well against far this week, is capable of giving the Sheiks quite local fans ought to be in for some interesting

The Stars, from their showing against Sacramento, are taking this split-season idea seriously and give promise of being up in the thick of the fight this half. The Sheiks, unsettled both in the infield and in the outfield, got off to a bad start last spring but now are functioning like a machine that is going some place.

MICKEY HEATH

With Mickey Heath, Cleo Carlyle, Bill Rumler, Eli Funk, Red Rollings and Rowdy Sypher all clicking the agate consistently, the Stars present quite an offense and Vitt's only worries arise over his pitching staff. If the Sheiks get good pitching they'll be mighty tough to beat.

The second half of the schedule gives the Stars an opportunity to get a jump on their rivals in the first month of play, Hollywood's first four series being against Sacramento, Seattle, Portland and then Seattle again. These three clubs rate as the weakest in the circuit and it's just up to the Stars to take advantage of the opportunity given them by the schedule.

The Angels, who get a new manager next week, also seem to have benefited by the split season. The Seraphs showed considerably more spirit against Portland this week. Fred Haney adds a lot of dash to the Angel attack, while Ray Jacobs's return to batting form also makes a difference in the showing of the local club.

Jack Lelivelt, the new Cherub skipper, takes charge next week at Sacramento, where the Angels tackle the skidding Solons. If the Angels can keep up their pepper and enjoy another good week, they'll be in position to stick in the race during the second half.

In the other series this week the Seals and Oaks hook up at Oakland in what should be an interesting series, while the Mission Reds, first-half winners, figure to profit in their clash with Portland at San Francisco.

SHEIKS HAVE BUDDING STAR IN CATINA AT TUCSON

According to baseball critics who have seen Infielder Catina of Tucson in action, the Hollywood Stars will get an athlete who should prove quite an attraction when he joins the Vittmen next spring. Catina plays third base and is proving a demon with the willow, his batting average now hovering around the .400 mark.

Catina is a Mexican and his presence on the Stars is quite likely to make baseball fans of hundreds of local Mexican sports followers next year. Mexican sports fans turn out in droves to support one of their athletes and Catina is liable to make baseball enthusiasts out of all the local Mexican boxing enthusiasts.

Now that Bert Colima is passing out of the fight picture, local Mexicans are ready for another idol and Catina figures to attract their support if he gets off well.

Catina's sparkling fielding and terrific batting have attracted the eyes of Yankee and Kansas City scouts, but Bill Lane has first pick of the Tucson athletes and is a cinch to claim the hard-hitting Mexican.

COAST LEAGUE CLUBS NEAR HOMER RECORD

Coast League clubs are on the road to new home-run records. In the first half of the season ending last Sunday, the eight teams clouted out 498 homers in 387 games, an average of 1.28 per game. There were 856 home runs batted out in the 766 contests in 1928. Only 824 home runs were made in 781 games in 1927. There were only 726 home runs in the 810 games in 1926. The clubs averaged 1.12 home runs per game last season. In 1927 the average was 1.05 and in 1926 the average was .90 per game. The home run total for the Coast League circuit reached 879 in 1925, the last season Salt Lake was in the league. The teams engaged in 801 games, making an average of 1.08 home runs per game.

BADGRO BROWN REGULAR

Morris "Red" Badgro, who used to do considerable starring on Trojan football and basketball teams, is now playing right field regularly for the St. Louis Browns.

While at U.S.C. Badgro was a brilliant end on the football team, thrilling grid fans with his spectacular catching of forward passes, and was also the leading forward on the Trojan cage squad. Red played on Sam Crawford's U.S.C. nine but his baseball ability was somewhat overlooked because of his prowess on the court and gridiron.

In the spring of 1928 Badgro was signed to a Brown contract by Jimmy Austin, St. Louis coach, who winters in Southern California. Last year Badgro was farmed to Tulsa in the Western League where he batted .334. Red got his chance as a regular in the Browns' outfield this season and seems to be more than making good.

JUST ANOTHER STOLEN BASE FOR HANEY

Although Fred Haney has been performing for the Angels but about six weeks, the flashy little infielder already has proved his supremacy among Coast League base stealers. Haney stole his twenty-first base since joining the Cherubs yesterday to take the league lead in this department of the game. Haney is a threat every time he gets on the baths and his brilliant base-running is largely responsible for the Angels' recent good showing. Photo shows Haney sliding safely into third to add another stolen base to his growing total.

REDS CONQUER PIRATES

Cincinnati Stages Two Rallies to Win Over Loop Leaders in One-Game Series

PITTSBURGH, July 6. (AP)—Jack Hendricks took a chance on helping his friends, the Cubs, by defeating the Pirates, 5 to 3, here today in a one-game series, but the Bruins saved the Cincinnati manager this embarrassment by themselves losing in Boston.

The Cincinnati victory here was achieved by rallies against the Messrs. Swetonic and Hill in the fifth and the eighth.

Ray Kolp was strong with men on bases, but gave way at the finish to Jakie May, who entered the game when the Pirates threatened and retired Lloyd Waner for the final out. Kolp allowed eleven hits. The defeat of both of the leaders left the Pirates on top in the standing by the same half-game margin. Score:

Mermaids Off List at Venice

VENICE, July 6. (Exclusive)—Since the withdrawal of Thelma Finn from competitive swimming this resort's mermaid colony has gradually dwindled to extinction.

When Thelma was in her prime she outpaddled the best on the Pacific Coast. She was heralded as the typical mermaid. Her favorite stroke was the overhand and her favorite distance fifty yards, although she also was very proficient in the 100-yard trial.

Thelma comes from an athletic family. Her brother, Charles, is still a water-polo player of wide reputation and one of the outstanding members of the Venice Plunge Swimming Association team which captured the Southern California A.A.U. championship. Thelma does a lot of swimming even now, but the conquests of high-school and post-prep days are gone forever.

Robins Again Crush Giants

NEW YORK, July 6. (AP)—The Robins defeated the Giants by 4 to 0 behind the fine pitching of Watson Clark here today in a one-day stand preliminary to the second western invasion of the Polo Grounds. The victory was the tenth for Brooklyn against New York in sixteen games this season. Clark allowed only three safeties.

A touch of the good old days was seen in the banishment of John McGraw by Umpire Magerkurth. The master mind seems to have been thinking out loud on the bench. Score:

LELIVELT NEW SERAPH PILOT

kee was languishing in the cellar when Lelivelt was handed his release. Lelivelt's dismissal was caused, so it was announced, because he was suffering from neuritis, which accounted for his inability to get along with the players. Lelivelt, though, is now over the attack of neuritis, which now apparently has Krug in its clutches.

However, Lelivelt is coming here with a contract good only for the remainder of the season and, if he fails to catch on with the fans, he can be given his walking papers by the Los Angeles management.

Krug, who was in his seventh season as manager of the Angels, was paid off in full for the remainder of the year.

Marty's statement concerning his release was brief and to the point. He only said, "I tried."

Krug's passing is regretted by the Angel players who were strong for Marty even though they apparently could not get going under his leadership. In fact, if anything, Krug was too good to the players for his own good.

All who know Krug personally like him. He knows baseball as well as anyone, but he hasn't the personality needed to inspire a club to heights that make it a pennant winner.

It is thought that Marty will soon catch on with some club as a scout or coach.

Until Lelivelt arrives on the job, Truck Hannah will be in charge of the Angels.

Big Six

By the Associated Press

If all of the Big Six members had played on the same team yesterday, they would have come close to turning in a no-hit game for some ambitious pitcher. The dignity of the heavy sluggers was maintained only by Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig, each of whom hit one thin single in St. Louis. Jimmy Foxx remained in the lead, but his average dropped to .407.

ST. LOUIS DROPS OPENER TO QUAKERS, SCORE, 10-6

Nightcap Finds St. Louis Players on Rampage; Phils Slaughtered Under Avalanche of Hits

PHILADELPHIA, July 6. (AP)—The St. Louis Cardinals' losing streak was broken with a vengeance here this afternoon. After dropping the first game of the double-header to the Phillies, 10-6, the Missourians turned about and crushed the Shottenmen under an avalanche of twenty-eight hits that chased a like amount of runs over the plate, thus defeating the Phillies, 28 to 6.

Willoughby, Miller, Roy and Green, who worked in that order in the second game, could not fool the Cardinals at any time.

SUNNY JIM BOTTOMLEY

Two big blows in this game were home-run blasts with the bases loaded, the first one by Jim Bottomley and the second by Chick Hafey. In the first game Bottomley hit two homers to make his record nineteen for the season. Klein of the Phillies hit his twenty-first homer of the season in the first game, and Hafey's blow was his twenty-first circuit drive.

Wildness on the part of the Phillies' pitchers started the 1928 champions off with ten runs in the first inning and the westerners had another big round, the fifth, which saw ten more tallies tabulated on the scoring sheet.

While the Cardinals were doing all this to the Phillies' pitchers, Hurler Frankhouse was coasting through to an easy victory in spite of being hit for seventeen safeties that included a home run by Denny Southern.

The Cardinals set a modern major league record by scoring twenty-eight runs in the night cap. The best previous mark for one club in a game, since 1900, was made by Cleveland, which ran up a score of twenty-seven against the Red Sox in 1923.

The highest all-time total for one club in a major league game remains with the Chicago Nations, who defeated Louisville, then a member of the old twelve-club circuit, by 36 to 7, in 1897. Scores:

Kinney Gets Four Hits to Help Hollywood Win Over Sacs, 6-3 to Rollings and Carlyle's base hit.

Kinney walked four men in the second inning, and yet Sacramento scored but one run and that was forced over the plate. Sacramento evened up the count at two up in the third when Severeid and O'Brien walked and Hoag doubled.

The Stars stepped out in front in the fifth and remained there when singles by Carlyle and Rehg, followed by a double play, allowed one run to score.

Again in the sixth, Bassler singled, Kinney doubled and Lee got a one-base hit for another run. Burkett's single in the eighth followed by a sacrifice hit and Kinney's fourth single, accounted for another. The final run came in the ninth when Carlyle cleared the left-field fence with a blow.

Kinney was removed from the box in the eighth when Backer singled and Monroe walked. McLaughlin singled off Wetzel to score Backer, but the rally ended there.

College Ball Lacks Interest

NEW HAVEN (Ct.) July 6. (AP)—College baseball has become "an increasingly vexed problem," says Prof. George H. Nettleton, chairman of the board of control of the Yale University Athletic Association, in his annual report, made available tonight.

"Even friends of college baseball frankly admit the considerable decline in general interest in the sport," said the report. "Doubtless the major reason for this is the greatly increased participation of students in all forms of outdoor sports, with the consequent multiplication of class and scrub teams and crews, and the increased opportunities for informal and individual recreation in such sports as tennis and golf.

"This change, amounting almost to revolution, in general student attitude has, in the spring, at least, largely emptied the grand stands and crowded all available playing fields of every kind.

"Yale's early addition and constant development of the policy of 'athletics for all,' are matters of common knowledge. The logical results have been most gratifying, even to those who find themselves intimately connected with the now recognized decline of interest in college baseball. No one would countenance for a moment a call 'back to the bleachers,' but especially to various colleges closely associated with Yale in athletics, the situation in baseball has become an increasingly vexed problem."

weary of Coast League baseball," Moreing said. "I must make some change to protect myself financially. It is beyond human or financial endurance to continue backing baseball here with such meager support.

"Stockton has been drawing far greater crowds to its early Sunday morning games than turn out for the Sunday afternoon contests in Sacramento. This leads to the consideration of moving the team to that city.

"We go on the road for three weeks after playing Los Angeles next week and I will be forced to make some drastic change after that trip if conditions do not improve. It may be that the Senators will be solely a road club or be transferred to another city."

California Has Large Share of National Parks Furnishing Recreation for Nat

MILLIONS OF VISITORS EXPECTED IN PARKS

Federal Government Prepared to Care for More Than 3,000,000 During Vacation Period

BY WILLIAM ULLMAN

Uncle Sam entertains more summer boarders than anyone else in the world and is now preparing for the descent upon his far-flung acres of millions of his nephews and nieces. He gains his title of champion summer boarder keeper by virtue of his ever-growing string of national parks and national monuments where last season more than 3,000,000 men, women and children, largely motor tourists, found health and recreation amid scenes of natural splendor unsurpassed anywhere on the globe.

MILLIONS EXPECTED

With the tremendous upswing of car-ownership and the never-ending road improvement crusade officials of the National Park Service, of the Department of the Interior, at Washington, estimate that a total of 4,000,000 visitors will be closely approached this summer and are planning accordingly. Only fifteen years ago, less than 200,000 visited the parks annually.

Since the season of 1928 there have been two important additions to Uncle Sam's great chain of national parks. The wonders of Bryce Canyon, Utah, and the Grand Teton, Wyoming, will be beheld by many tourists for the first time this summer. Bryce Canyon, formerly a national monument, is a box cleft in the earth's crust, an amphitheater filled to the brim with a countless array of vividly colored, fantastically eroded figures.

When former President Coolidge, near the end of his term, signed the act creating the Grand Teton National Park he brought to a successful conclusion a thirty-one year struggle to give this area national parkhood. This new park, situated twenty-five miles south of Yellowstone, is in the heart of one of the great "dude ranch" districts of Wyoming. The park includes the superb Teton Mountains, a granite uplift of unusual grandeur. The range was carved by glaciers and even today there are many glaciers still hanging in the rocky gorges. The park is about thirty-five miles long and from four to five miles wide, bordering the Jackson Hole country which in the days of the Old West was the hiding-place for cattle rustlers and other lawless characters.

SUFFICIENT TO CLIMB

The Grand Teton is one of the most difficult peaks in the country to climb. As early as 1843 its ascent was discussed by mountain-climbers but it was not until 1872 that the first recorded attempt was made. The first successful climb was made in August, 1898, and another ascent was not made for twenty-five years.

The nucleus of the nation's national park system came into being almost a century ago when, in 1832, the Hot Springs of Arkansas were created a national park. Its forty-six hot springs possessing curative properties cover an area of only one and one-half square miles but from this modest beginning the system has expanded to a total of twenty-one national parks having an area of more than 12,000 square miles, in addition to which there are thirty-two national monuments covering more than 3600 square miles. These latter reservations were created by an act of Congress in 1906 for the preservation of American antiquities—historic landmarks, prehistoric structures and other objects of historic or scientific interest situated upon the lands owned or controlled by the government.

The national parks of the United States are areas which Congress has made Federal reservations because of extraordinary scenic beauty, remarkable physical phenomena, or other unusual attributes for the use and enjoyment of the people for all time. They are not parks in the common understanding of the word, beautiful tracts of cultivated land with smooth lawns and paved winding paths. They are large areas which nature, and not man, has made lovely and which the hand of man alters only enough to provide roads by which they may be entered, trails penetrating their fastnesses, and hotels and camps to shelter visitors.

NATURAL GRANDEUR

Considered together, Uncle Sam's twenty-one national parks and thirty-two national monuments contain more elements of conspicuous natural grandeur than are readily accessible in all the rest of the world, while considered individually there are few, if any, celebrated scenic places within easy reach abroad which are not equalled or excelled in the United States. Even the world-renowned Swiss Alps are not superior, many travelers hold, to the scenery of several of the national parks in this country.

There are many features of American scenery which are not to be found anywhere else, or, if found, are unequaled. There are more geysers of large size in Yellowstone National Park, for instance, than in all the rest of the world put together, the nearest approach being the geyser fields of Iceland and New Zealand. It is conceded that there is no discovered valley so enchanting as the Yosemite, and nowhere else on the globe can be found a canyon of such stupendous dimensions and exquisite coloring as the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. In the Sequoia National Park grow trees so huge and old that none compare with them. Mt. McKinley, in Alaska, rises 17,000 feet from the surrounding terrain to its eternally ice-clad summit among the clouds.

One of the striking allurements of the national parks is the fact that each one is quite different from all the others; each has a marked personality all its own. Mt. Rainier in Washington, for example, is an extinct volcano, down the sides of which flow twenty-eight glaciers. Crater Lake, in Oregon, fills with water of astonishing blue the great hole left when the top of Mt. Mazama, another volcano of the same chain to which Mt. Rainier belonged, was swallowed up in some cataclysm of the far distant past.

Yosemite, in addition to its celebrated valley, and the loftiest waterfall in the world, has in its north portion a river called the Tuolumne, which spouts wheels of water twenty feet and more into the air. It has great expanses of snow-topped mountains. The combined height of the upper and lower Yosemite Falls, with intermediate cascades and rapids, is half a mile.

The gigantic redwoods of the Sequoia National Park are the largest and oldest living things in the world. The Gen. Sherman Tree is thirty-six and one-half feet in diameter and its topmost leaves are 280 feet above the ground. The George Washington Tree and the Dalton Tree are even more lofty. Comprehension of the enormous size of these trees is helped when it is known that a box large enough to contain one of the largest trans-Atlantic liners could be constructed out of the lumber from a single member of the notable forest, with enough boards left over to build several houses.

HOW ONE PARK WAS MADE

The Glacier National Park in Montana was made by the earth cracking in prehistoric age and one side thrusting up and overlapping the other. It has cliffs several thousand feet high and more than sixty glaciers feed its hundreds of lakes. One lake floats icebergs all summer.

In addition to its geysers Yellowstone has numerous hot springs, which build glistening plateaus of highly colored mineral deposits. It has a canyon gorgeous with all the colors of the rainbow and it is literally the greatest wild animal sanctuary. Boiling springs, mud volcanoes and petrified forests are among other natural phenomena in this reservation, which has been a mecca for tourists ever since its establishment in 1872 but today more than ever.

A tour of the hot water formations and spouting geysers is an experience never to be forgotten. Some of the geysers play at irregular intervals but the daddy of them all, Old Faithful, the tourists' friend, plays often and with regularity. It welcomed the first explorer and never since that day has it failed.

Yellowstone is one of the largest and most successful preserves of wild life in the world. Its 3300 square miles of mountains and valleys remain virtually as nature fashioned them, for the few hundred miles of roads and hotels and camps are as nothing in this great wilderness. No tree has been cut except when absolutely necessary for road or trail or camp. No rifle has been fired at a wild animal since 1894.

NEW ROAD OPENED ON MONTEREY PENINSULA

DEL MONTE, July 6. (Exclusive) A new and shorter route from Salinas and Monterey Peninsula points is now available. This is the Blanco-Moro Cojo Road which has just been opened. It is well surfaced and the long, straight stretches present excellent motoring facilities. This new route is several miles shorter than the Salinas-Castroville-Del Monte Road and does not pass through Castroville. Motorists wishing to take this route should turn west from Salinas, one block south of the Castroville Road intersection at Salinas.

STEEP GRADES FOUND ON ROAD TO LAKES

The new road between Huntington Lake and Florence Lake which has recently been opened to the public by the Edison Company is in generally good condition, although steep grades are encountered between Huntington Lake and the summit of Kaiser Pass. Motorists driving to this scenic area must be prepared to camp as there are no accommodations at Florence Lake, according to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

SPORT CHAMPIONS MOVE TO MONTEREY

DEL MONTE, July 6.—Monterey Peninsula now has the honor of including an unusually large number of champions among its residents. Among them are Miss Glenna Collett, women's national golf champion; Miss Marion Hollins, former holder of that title; Jack Neville, who recently won the California amateur golf championship for the sixth time; O. N. Ford, State trapshooting champion, and Dr. J. H. Bradfield, State handicap trapshooting titlist.

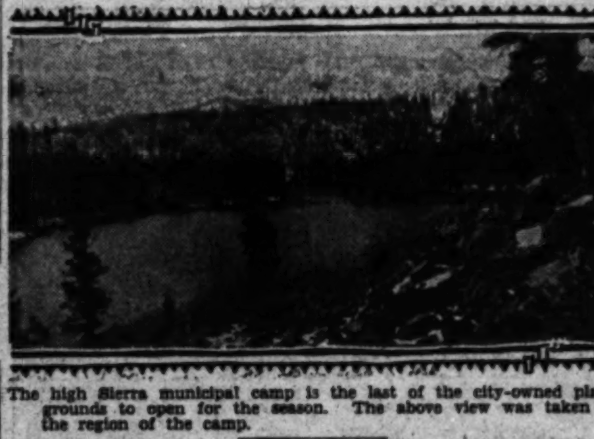
FIRE-MAKER FINED

TERRA BELLA, July 6. (Exclusive)—Frank Oliveras of Bakersfield has been fined $50 by Justice of the Peace A. J. Buckley of Terra Bella, when he pleaded guilty to a charge of burning a camp fire without a permit, adjoining the Sequoia National Park. The offense was committed in August of 1928 in the vicinity of the Jack ranch. The complaint was sworn to by Cecil Metcalf, State fire ranger.

SWORDFISH NEMESIS

Oliver C. Grinnell, who was the first man to catch a broadbill swordfish with regulation light tackle on the Atlantic seaboard, landed his fifth of this variety off the Fire Island Lightship recently. It was ten feet seven inches long and weighed 265 pounds.

Los Angeles Opens Summer Camp



The high Sierra municipal camp is the last of the city-owned playgrounds to open for the season. The above view was taken in the region of the camp.

MUNICIPAL CAMP OPENED

Recreational Playground in High Sierras Available for Summer Vacation at Low Cost

With the opening of Camp High Sierra last week, another of the municipal camps of Los Angeles is now in service, and hundreds of persons are signing up for the low-cost vacations offered by them, according to word from the city playground and recreation department.

Camp High Sierra is in the great, jagged ranges of the High Sierras, 335 miles north of Los Angeles. It is four miles from Mammoth Lakes, and in a country of numberless mountain lakes and streams. Mighty 13,000-foot peaks rear their heads above the clouds in the vicinity of the camp, and the whole region is famed for its magnificent scenery.

Within close range of the camp are the Devil's Post Pile (a national monument now,) the Earthquake Fault, boiling mud pots and other natural wonders. One or two weeks outings at cost may be had at this camp by anyone, by applying at the playground department offices in the City Hall.

Camp Seeley and Camp Radford, the other two municipal playground camps, are in the San Bernardino Mountains—the former seventy-five and the latter ninety-five miles from Los Angeles. Both of these are finely equipped with comfortable cabins, recreation lodges, swimming pools, and many other features. A unique feature of them is the fine spirit of comradeship which is promoted by the camp management among the guests from the very first day that the outing begins. This results in many community recreation activities, such as evening dances, camp-fire dramatics, community singing, and other pastimes that make the vacation more interesting.

Camp Seeley and Camp Radford are in heavily wooded sections of the San Bernardino National Forest and have an abundance of beautiful scenery. Radford stands on a mountain slope facing Mt. San Gorgonio (Old Grayback,) the highest peak in Southern California. Numerous hikes and horseback trips may be enjoyed from these mountain playgrounds. Outings at these camps are also offered at cost, appealing especially to families with children.

Reservations for outings of one or two weeks will be received throughout the summer at special camp offices set up by the playground and recreation department in the Main-street lobby of the City Hall.

Protection of Elk Provided by Commission

Provision for a game refuge in which Tule elk may be protected from natural ravages (they already are protected by law from hunters) is contemplated in a plan formulated by the Fish and Game Commission of the State of California with the co-operation of the officials of Kern county.

A commission report sets forth a recommendation that:

"Upon the tender to the State of the area of land suitable in size and location for an elk refuge by Kern county or its citizens either by deed or a lease for a long term of years, your committee recommends that there be expended out of funds available for game refuge purposes a sum not to exceed $25,000 for the erection of fences and for such other minor improvements as may be necessary upon the premises, provided further that there be no restrictions in any deed or lease which will prevent the State from fostering or propagating upon this refuge other species of game compatible with the welfare of the elk.

Whether the funds to be expended on the purchase of land for refuge purposes will be entirely public or or whther private contributions from citizens will also be involved we are not fully informed, but we are advised that the county officials will have some hesitation in making a large expenditure for land and immediately thereafter conveying it irrevocably to the State, and that in this position they are supported by popular opinion in the county. After successful operation and administration, full conveyance would be likely to follow but meanwhile we consider that the expenditure which we have recommended will be fully justified provided that a long term lease of not less than twenty-five years be granted."

FISH AND WHERE CAUGHT

The last week has been a week for anglers, both salt and fresh water. The seven days resulted in the opening of the golden trout season in certain lakes in the High Sierras, the showing of skipjacks in Santa Monica Bay waters, the appearance of a fish thousands of miles away from his native haunts. Barracuda, halibut and rock bass were being caught at the beaches and many limits of trout in the streams and lakes.

Capt. Bob Oefinger at Santa Monica dropped business long enough one day last week to show that he could fish as well as talk it. After hooking up with a monster black sea bass (Jewfish,) landed it in 36 minutes. The fish weighed 550 pounds, the largest Jewfish caught at Santa Monica this summer.

Capt. Max Watt also at Santa Monica, landed a 350-pound Jewfish. It took him 25 minutes to bring it to gaff.

Al Fogarty of Glendale is back from a fishing trip at Santa Monica. Fogarty caught mackerel, several halibut and a sack full of barracuda.

Amos J. Carr made a big catch at Santa Monica last week. He caught many halibut and small bass.

Gertrude May, one of the many women who have turned to salt-water fishing this season, tells of a tough struggle with a big fish at Santa Monica last week. She hooked into a 200-pound Jewfish and after 39 minutes, brought it to gaff.

According to Capt. Anderson at Hermosa Beach, not since 1924 have the barracuda schools been so numerous and fish running of such a size as they have in Santa Monica Bay this summer, some weigh six pounds.

Anglers fishing at Hermosa have become "back weary" from bringing in the "sea tigers."

Yellowtail, barracuda, halibut and small bass are being caught by anglers on the boats plying from Hermosa, declares Capt. Jack Bubeck. The yellowtail have been showing up daily, but only a few have been caught.

All along the coast from the Malibu to Redondo, the evenings during the last couple of weeks have found hundreds of anglers surf fishing. Only a few fish have been caught.

Redondo was favored last week with exceptionally good barracuda fishing. Yellowtail have been seen in those waters, but like the conditions at the other local beaches, only a few have been caught.

The next two weeks should see good fishing along the coast. The moon is now dark, the swell that had been running has now flattened out, there are many schools of fish around and an abundance of live bait, including sardines.

Some big catches of halibut, the fish running better than twenty pounds in many instances, have been made during the last week off Point Dume and the Malibu coast.

It is claimed for A. Hess at Santa Monica, that last Monday he brought in the largest individual catch for a day this season. He brought in 247 rock bass, one black sea bass weighing eighty-five pounds, sixty-three barracuda and fourteen halibut.

Miss Ludlow of Altadena, who claims the distinction of being the only lady fisheress who goes after black sea bass, landed one several days ago in the fast time of twenty-nine minutes. The fish weighed 249 pounds. At the time Miss Ludlow was fishing four other anglers were busy wearing out hooked black sea bass. It was Miss Ludlow who some months ago caught a monster black sea bass and sent it by air express to Arizona.

Free from clanging bells a number of members of the Glendale Fire Department took out a ship Colleen recently and took sacks of bass, halibut and barracuda. Headed by Capt. Van Trueren, members of the Los Angeles Fire Department also went out.

To liven things up for anglers at Santa Monica, a season pass is up for the angler who catches the first yellowtail of the season from the following boats: Kikuma, Freedom, Ameco, Palisades, and the barge Billings. The pass will be good on the craft from which the yellowtail is caught. A season pass also is up for the angler who catches the first Jewfish of the season from the barge Billings.

In word received from Capt. J. B. McNally at Balboa, albacore continue to be conspicuous by their absence. The skipper keeps a scout boat which he sends out about every other day to look for albacore.

"Kamp KK" Wilson is back from a trip into Oregon. He reports good runs of Chinook salmon in the Rogue River.

Ray Haslett of Glacier Lodge sent him word declaring that fishing in the lakes has been excellent near Glacier.

Andy Downs at June Lake, states that the weather is warm and pleasant and fishing excellent.

[illegible] Roberts, an educational moving-picture director, was the first to catch a steelhead in the Rogue this season—quite an honor in Oregon.

The new fish and game season cards and maps will be put out on the 15th inst., it is announced by Pete Peterson. He reports the following data:

Capt. W. G. Dare of the fishing boat Eagle, will leave next Sunday for [illegible], Alaska, where he will take a private party of sportsmen on a hunting and fishing trip. He will meet his party at Seattle and take the Inside Passage to Alaska.

Fishing is good as far as trout fishing is concerned and couldn't possibly get any better in the way Stewart Welsh puts it. Information obtained from Welsh follows:

The streams throughout the State are now in excellent condition, especially for fly fishing. Many limits have been taken from the streams and lakes in the High Sierras.

On the eastern slope of the High Sierras, anglers are having success with yellow body flies, gray wings and red tips. Farther north in this country, brown hackle and gray hackle flies are getting limits.

At what is known as the "Hell Hole" of the upper Kern, ten limits were taken out last Sunday, Welsh learned from Jim Cowan, a guide and packer in that district. The fish were black spotted Kern River trout, a sort of species of their own. Water in the upper Kern is clear to Fairview.

The season on golden trout which opened on the 1st inst., has been productive of many limits, especially in the Cottonwood Lakes. However, the fish are not taking flies, but are taking small spinners. The fish have been averaging twelve and fourteen inches in length. The larger fish have not yet come to the top.

Excellent fishing is being had by packing a few hours from Mineral King in Tulare county. A good road now goes to Mineral King, opening up a delightful district to the motoring trout fisherman.

Anglers at June Lake are now having the best fishing ever known at that body of water. Large trout are being caught trolling with spoons.

At Trumbull Lake in the Bridgeport district, big trout have come to the top and some excellent fishing has been had.

J. Homer Piscus, caretaker at Sweetwater Dam in San Diego county, wrote Welsh, declaring that bass fishing is exceptionally good. On one day the caretaker counted 544 bass caught, the fish averaging two and one-half pounds. Anglers have been averaging seven fish to the man for many days.

At Morena Dam, plenty of trout are now being caught, as well as bass. Trout, however, are not taking flies.

Big Bear Lake is now the lowest it has been in five years. The lake, however, is clear and more bass than ever before are being caught each evening for about an hour from Windy Point.

Fishing at Lake Arrowhead has been fair at times, and good. The expert angler, though, can always get fish. Salmon eggs have been luring the trout at Arrowhead. One of the largest catches made at Arrowhead this year was brought in by Bob Allen. The fish was thirty inches long and weighed nine and one-quarter pounds. Allen used salmon eggs on a No. 10 hook.

Trout weighing nine pounds are being taken at Hemet Lake. Anglers who would like to fish that body of water must first make arrangements with officials of the Hemet Land and Water Company.

CONFUSION LIES AHEAD OF HUNTERS

Changes Made in Posting Law by Legislature May Cause Consternation

BY R. D. MARX GREENE

Just a few words make a lot of difference. The hunters of California will find this out—probably to their dismay—when the deer season opens in August.

The former law of criminal trespass in this State provided that if a person wished to keep hunters off his ground it must be either cultivated or inclosed with a fence, and signs posted along the exterior boundaries, not less than three to the mile. If these conditions were met any person trespassing on the land could be charged with the commission of a misdemeanor.

The effect of the old trespass law was that all those portions of the State which were not valuable enough to fence from an agricultural or grazing standpoint were not withheld from the public for hunting. It discouraged the formation of private hunting clubs because the expense of fencing was usually prohibitive.

Under the amendments to the law adopted at the recent session of the Legislature, land need be neither fenced nor cultivated in order to withdraw it from public hunting and the only thing necessary to enforce the law of trespass is that the owner post signs along the exterior boundaries not less than three to the mile and at all roads and trails entering such land forbidding such trespass.

It can readily be seen where this leads. A person is, perhaps, hunting in a national forest and suddenly enters upon patented land either adjacent to or within its boundaries. While hunting he is not on any trail or road and it is perfectly possible and, in fact, most probable that he will not see any sign posted along the exterior boundaries. Unintentionally he has committed a trespass and is liable criminally for his action.

There has been much agitation about private gun clubs, which have practically all the good duck shooting, but usually these clubs are well fenced and posted or have natural boundaries so that people know where they are. Now, all marsh land heretofore impossible to fence can be withdrawn from the public, merely by posting notices.

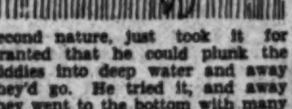
Swimming Easy by Lessons in "Times" Series

(This is the first of a series of swimming lessons that will appear in the Outdoor Section of The Times each week. The lessons start with the first rudiments of swimming and will take the beginner through all the stages to that of a finished swimmer.)

BY DOUG WAGGS

Dad and mother have made up their minds that Jack and Dot must learn to swim this summer. Other kiddies much smaller whirl around plunges, creeks and seashore like so many tad poles, but somehow Jack, aged eight, and Dot, six and one-half, never quite caught on.

The reason is simple. Dad, to whom swimming had always been second nature, just took it for granted that he could plunk the kiddies into deep water and away they'd go. He tried it, and away they went to the bottom with many a howl and gurgle. For a long time after that Jack and Dot were afraid of the water. They might never have learned to swim if Dad hadn't got wise to his own impatience.



So this year he's taking them to a mountain lake where the water is still and shallow. The rest will be easy.

He will take one kiddie at a time; explain that it is possible at all times, to hold the head safely above water. If you feel yourself sinking, he should explain, just throw your head backward as far as it will go, try to relax your muscles as much as possible, and your feet will automatically come to the surface. You will find yourself floating easily on top of the water. This goes for not only Jack and Dot, but anyone who feels a little bit shaky about the swimming strokes.

After learning this secret, you should have little fear of deep water. Try it.

Next, to become more proficient, the beginner should learn how to do the "jelly-fish float." This is a very simple and safe way to learn to get your face wet. You can't sink. Just get in water about four feet deep, inhale, and then put your face in the water. Now, draw your legs up under your chest with your arms, and you will float on top of the water. As long as you have your knees clasped under you, your back will stay above the surface of the water, resembling the jelly-fish. This is why they call it the "jelly-fish float."

If the beginner can master these two simple instructions, the art of swimming is practically within his grasp. The lessons to follow are then very simple.

Camp Fire Precautions Save Trouble

"You can always identify the 'tenderfoot' in the woods by looking at his camp fire," forest rangers state. "The experienced woodsman does not build a fire that has any of the three faults usually found in the tenderfoot's fire.

"The tenderfoot builds a fire too big for his need or for his convenience.

"He builds it where it is likely to spread—either in dry grass or brush, or against a dead log that may smoulder after his party departs, and then cause a destructive forest fire.

"The tenderfoot's fire does not ignite easily or burn satisfactorily because he uses poor judgment in selecting kindling material and fuel."

A good camp fire for cooking is not so large that it cooks the cook as well as the food. A bed of hot coals is preferable to a blaze for cooking. The wise camper collects a few dry needles and dead twigs and starts his fire small, adding larger sticks as it gains in size.

BY IVAN KELSO,

Chief Counsel Automobile Club of Southern Californ

For several years the law has required the owners of motor vehicles to have their vehicles equipped with brakes adequate to promptly check the speed of and stop the vehicles. Disputes have arisen from time to time concerning the exact meaning of this requirement. It has been difficult to enforce it because it is an indefinite standard. The Legislature has been urged at different times to put in the act a definite brake standard and it has finally done so.

Effective August 14, the Vehicle Act will make it unlawful for any person to operate a motor vehicle, or a combination of a motor vehicle, trailer or semi-trailer, unless the brakes are adequate to bring such vehicle to a complete stop within stated distances.

The test is to be applied upon a pavement or dry asphalt or concrete surface. The grade at the place of test is not to exceed 1 per cent. The standard for brake efficiency conditions is as follow

An Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

By Mabel Herbert Urner

Creator of the "Helen and Warren" Characters

"SEVEN-fifty! Seven-fifty I have!" the auctioneer's chant as they edged into the crowded hall. "Who'll make it eight?"

"Jove, that's cheap!" muttered Warren. "Want it? Got any place to put it?"

"Only the hall," Helen on tip-toe for a better view. "No, it's too small."

Standing back of the last row—all the seats taken. The air stifling with steam heat and perfume.

"Eight now! Any more? Who'll make it eight-fifty?"

"Bunch of pikers here," Warren's flourished catalog signalled the auctioneer. "Can't pass it up at that price."

"Dear, don' go over ten! We really don't need a small rug."

Now turning through her catalog. What lot was this? They had come only for No. 139—a large Sarabend. Just the size and coloring for their bedroom.

But Warren always irrepressible at an auction. Hard to curb his promiscuous bidding.

"Eight-fifty I have! Any advance? Nine may I say?"

"Shouldn't think they'd take a fifty-cent raise. Whew!" unbuttoning his overcoat. "Guess that's all they can squeeze out of this bunch."

"Sh-sh, dear, not so loud! Why, it seems an awfully good crowd."

"Saps to miss this one. Looks like the real thing. Golly, hot in here!"

"Nine! Gentleman in the corner bids nine. Are you all through?"

Helen glanced at the swarthy bidder. An Armenian—probably a rug merchant.

"Nine! Any more?" the monotonous drone. "Who'll make it nine-fifty?"

Again with easy nonchalance Warren raised his catalog.

"Nine-fifty! Going for nine-fifty! That your bid, sir?"

"Guess we get it," grinned Warren, nodding assent. "That was a snap."

"But what'll we do with it?" mentally rejecting various locations for the rug.

"Nine-fifty!" the hammer poised. "Who'll make it a thousand?"

"A thousand!" Helen gripped his arm.

"Last call at nine-fifty! Fair warning!" the irrevocable bang. "Sold to the gentleman in the rear for nine hundred and fifty dollars."

No, no, impossible! Just trying to be facetious—

But no trace of humor in the auctioneer's efficient stolidity.

A buzz of comments as the rug was taken from the velvet-draped platform. Replaced by a similar one.

"No.132! Another antique prayer rug. How much to start? Two hundred? One-fifty, then. One-fifty I have."

Helen staring straight ahead. Stunned, petrified.

The bidding in hundreds! They had missed the start—

A swift side glance. Warren's jaw grimly set.

"Tell him! Say you thought it was nine dollars!" her tense whisper. "They can't make you take it."

"Now I'll handle this," shaking her off. "I'm not reniging on my bids."

"But a thousand dollars! You can't—"

A colored attendant coming toward them. Giving Warren a blank slip. A deposit required—twenty per cent.

"Say it's a mistake—quick!" still pleading. "They can sell it over."

But with a silencing glare Warren jerked out his check-book and pen.

Helplessly she watched him fill out the slip and a check for two hundred.

Taken away by the languid youth—up to the eye-shaded clerk by the rostrum.

All so casual. In this great auction house a thousand-dollar sale a trifle.

"Four hundred fifty! Make it five!" an expectant glance at Warren.

"He thinks you'll bid on this one!" tremulous resentment. "Oh,, let's go!"

"How about that 139?" his don't-care pose. "What we came for—"

"Now?" flamingly. "After you've thrown away nine hundred and fifty dollars? Oh, I never want to see an auction again!"

"All right, if you've had enough," he shrugged. "Almost suffocated, anyway."

At last out in the reviving chill of the late afternoon.

"Now no hysterics!" his cane summoned a cruising taxi. "I was stung, all right—but you needn't set up a post mortem howl."

"You could have said it was a mistake," settling miserably in the cab.

"Yes, and made a fool of myself before that mob," viciously biting off his cigar. "Wasn't going to advertise our ignorance. Thought you knew so much about antiques? Your limit was ten bucks!"

"We were so far back—I couldn't see," gazing wretchedly out at the Saturday afternoon crowds.

"Well, that Armenian ran it up to nine hundred—must be worth that, anyway. They know rugs. What was the number? 131? Yep, here we are."

Helen reading over his shoulder.

131 GHIORDES PRAYER RUG 16th Century. The field of prayer arch shaded red; arch supported by columnar pillars with floriated curtains, Medallion borders of cream on dark blue.

Size, 4 feet x 2 feet, 3 inches.

"Sixteenth century!" he grunted. "No wonder—collector's piece."

"It ought to be at that price. Dear, you might sell it," a glimmer of hope.

"That's a bright idea!" explosively. "Since when am I peddlin' rugs?"

"If you'd only said it was a mistake! A thousand—just for your pride—"

"Aw, drop it!" he snarled. "Where's that book on Russia?"

"On the top shelf. If it were a bedroom rug—"

"Want to go back?" a sardonic grin. "Plenty of big ones left."

"I'll never get one now! Just have the old one mended and re-edged."

"Huh, needn't scrimp the rest of your life to make up. Get a bedroom rug at a regular shop," opening his book with a dismissing shrug. "Now forget it."

Forget it! Forget he had thrown away almost a thousand dollars? For weeks it would haunt her—pangs for what they could have bought.

In her own room, putting away her things. That crowded closet—every shelf packed. How she needed a high-boy! But no use thinking of it now—

Drawing the shade by her dressing table. Off the roller again! The house supposed to furnish new ones—but as always only promises. Warren had said to buy them—save time and temper. But now struggle on with the obdurate old ones.

Back through the dining-room and library. A measuring survey of the floor space. Pussy Purr-Mew bounding avidly after the trailing tape-line.

All their rugs carefully chosen. Really no place for another.

That Kashmir before the bookcase. Draw that over further? Make room there? But that tiny rug—out of proportion.

That Bokhara by the couch. Move that nearer the window? No, too crowded.

The wall? She never liked rugs on the wall. All right for a studio—but not with their Old-English furniture. Just her samplers and needlework pictures—anythng else would jar.

"Here, quit pacing around!" Warren glowered up. "Can't you be still a minute?"

"I'm trying to find a place for that rug," plaintively. "I suppose it should hang on the wall—but it wouldn't go with our things."

"Why the wall? Stick it on the floor where a rug belongs. How about dinner?" a yawning stretch. "Most ready?"

"She's setting the table," winding up the tape measure. "Dear, here's no floor space except the hall—and it'd get so much wear there—"

"Huh, lasted four hundred years—guess it'll survive your lifetime," unwrapping a gilt-foiled cigar. "Now when that rug comes slap it down in the hall."

"But it'll never be noticed out there! If you pay a thousand dollars for a rug—"

"Want to broadcast it, eh? Now see here, that's one thing you don't ram down everybody's throat," sparking his obstinate lighter. "Just you pull that thousand-buck line—and I'll spill what we thought I was paying!"

Helen's dispirited protest interrupted by the shrilling phone.

"Who? . . . Oh, yes! . . . This is Mrs. Curtis . . .. Yes . . . . Why, I—I hardly know what to say . . . I really, I . . . . Why—yes, I think—I'm sure that'll be all right . . ."

A gleeful bang of the receiver. Dancing over to Warren's chair.

"Dear, who do you think that was?" recklessly snatching his book.

"Here, what's struck you?" he thundered. "Come here—give me that book!"

"What if it were the auction house?" waltzing away from him.

"Eh? What the Sam Hill they want? Not sending that blamed rug tonight?"

"They're not sending it at all!" ecstatically.

"The devil they're not! Now what's up?"

"That Armenian was an agent—not authorized to bid over nine hundred," thrilled excitement. "But now his customer really wants it! A collector—"

"What a break!" jerking back his book. "So we wriggle out of our boner, eh?"

"They're returning your deposit," rapturously, perched on his chair arm. "And an advance besides! They offered ten per cent—ninety-five dollars. I was so dazed they thought I was hesitating—and they made it a hundred and fifty!"

"Huh, trust you to jack 'em up somehow! Well, now you can drop your economy campaign—blow the bedroom to a decent rug."

"Oh, I will!" effervescently. "Dinner ready, Emma? Yes, right away. But dear, now we're out of this—do be more careful at auctions. Don't just bid on anything! You have to know about these old things—and you don't!"

"Don't, eh?" he snorted. "How about you? Always press-agenting your flair for antiques—but ten berries was your limit on a sixteenth-century rug! That's a howl!" marking his page with the cigar wrapper. "I may not know such a heluva lot about antiques—but I picked a hot one that time!"

CARE OF THE BODY

teria and ptomaine poison are often found.

There is no guarantee, there is no certainty. You take a chance for your kick. The chance may be your life, your eyesight, or, as is more often the case, your stomach.

The rot gut is truly a rot gut. We are paying the price of ignorance for our insatiable desires.

If you are going to have your home brew, anyhow, then for the sake of your body, at least, avoid the terrible mistakes of ignorance and lack of technical training.

Midnight Diners

Have you ever had an after-the-theater snack? Perhaps not being interested in diet you did not make any observations as compared to a noon or early evening meal. The midnight lunch disobeys every sane ruel of modern dietetics.

The average business man or housewife dines reasonably, sensibly, for the noon meal. Fruits and vegetables are consumed in large quantities.

The business man very often has little more than a milk shake and a sandwich—a meal which excuses itself mainly because of its meagerness, but not because of its value.

The after-theater repast, however, a period when, if you do indulge, should be the most careful and frugal of any meal, is the time the average diner indulges most stupidly.

Steaks and chicken sandwiches are the general rule. Waffles, hot cakes and sandwiches of every description are taken.

So much is this true that the average high-grade cafe features the heavy foods for the midnight lunch.

Vegetables are seldom given as an auxiliary; salads are not quite au fait.

If you insist on having your after-theater snack, and social custom usually decrees it, try to make it as light as possible. If from the force of social circumstances you must have heavy foods, then at least consume little of them.

The bad taste of the morning after, the splitting headache during the night, the restless tired nightmarish sleep, the turbulent tossing, and the low ebb of spirits—all of these too often come from abuse of the midnight snack.

The Chicago Medical Scandals

Chicago has recently experienced a scandal in the medical profession that has left a sour taste in the ranks of the regulars, and has given the people a revealing glimpse of their doings.

To the evils in financing medical treatment few gave attention until they were sick. Then, under the whip hand of necessity, they merely cussed the high price of professional service, grumblingly got under the load, and slowly forgot their prejudices until the next sickness crisis.

The fact that a one-sided monopoly sought to maintain high fees was practically unknown to the public, except to the few on the inside.

The scandal roared around a Dr. Louis Schmidt, a venerable old practitioner, with a splendid record.

He founded an institution which cut prices under the medical monopoly.

Although they specialized mainly in venereal diseases, Dr. Schmidt's institution nevertheless cut a big slice in the Chicago doctors' income.

It hurt, and they let him know it hurt by dismissing him from the medical society.

This means ex-communication to the regular; ignominy and disgrace. It meant he became a medical outcast.

Behind Dr. Schmidt were some of the finest men and women of Illinois, social workers of Jane Addams's caliber, millionaires and many of the social elite. They stood firmly behind Dr. Schmidt.

The Chicago Tribune was especially active in his cause. The Star Chamber proceedings of the medical society were exposed. Their complete monopoly was probed.

Their violent hatred toward any measure which would reduce their incomes was shown. Public service and public health were of no importance where the dollar was at stake.

Any means of cutting profits were fought. Quasiphilanthropic institutions, such as churches, hospitals and philanthropic endowments, were bitterly attacked, because they gave reduced rates to the poor and middle classes.

It was a stinking mess that was unearthed. There was no idealism. There were none of the things for which we like to honor the doctor. It was me, I, myself, the dollars first, and then maybe the public service.

The public needs more of this enlightenment.

I am curious to know what stories our own city might tell when the expose comes, for sooner or later the very stress and force of economic competition is bound to produce the explosion. Chicago led the way. Which city will be next?

Secondary Anemias

Anemia is a common expression—we speak of a person as being "weak and anemic." We use the term carelessly though frequently.

Much of the time we are right, for anemia is closely allied with most of our other diseases.

In a limited sense every disease, in so far as it affects the blood, is productive of some form of anemia.

Basically considered, we cannot have any disease of the body, from constipation to cancer, without having the blood stream simultaneously affected. These are general causes.

There are others of more particular importance, one or two of which I want to consider in this article.

During the menopause period there are abnormalities of menstruation which account for a great deal of the anemic condition in thousands of women.

Usually a fibroid tumor is present. Such a tumor induces frequent and excessive hemorrhage.

Of the nature of the tumor itself, I have written at length repeatedly, the last article appearing but a few weeks ago. It is rather on the physiology of what occurs in the blood discharge associated with fibroid tumor that I desire to confine this article.

Ordinary menstruation is really the food blood which nature has stored in anticipation of the fertilized ovum.

Pregnancy not occurring, the body periodically discharges the accumulated food blood. This is normal menstruation. When to this quantity of blood is added the discharge contributed by a fibroid tumor, it is sometimes more than the woman can withstand.

She takes to her bed, becomes seriously anemic, and suffers greatly from loss of vitality, strength and resistance.

One of the primary objectives in all therapy for a fibroid tumor is to prevent the excessive loss of blood. Blood is life and we cannot afford to lose it.

The blood discharge in fibroid tumor is not exactly the same as that discharged in the normal menstrual process. Menstrual blood carries with it nutritional substances for the possible baby.

Fibroid blood usually carries some of the clots and pieces nature is seeking to disengorge.

An analysis of a fibroid tumor shows that it is composed of a fibrous type of tissue, thoroughly infiltrated and engorged with blood vessels. These discharge considerable blood, usually coincidental with menstruation.

This discharged blood also carries with it quantities of morbid poisons in the form of decomposed fibroid tumors ready for discharge.

I am presenting these phases of physiology because it is essential to understand the process that occurs, as well as those that are desired objectively.

We want the clots and pieces to come out. We also want a small quantity of blood to be lost. This, of course, is entirely different from a hemorrhage.

An examination before and after such blood discharge shows a distinct difference in size of the fibroid. I have seen as much as fifty per cent loss in size following a discharge, so you can see there is a beneficial phase to it. The discharge helps elimination.

Ample elimination prevents malignancy. This, after all, is what every sufferer wants.

When there is great loss of blood it generally implies that the fibroid is "going bad."

Watch out for malignancy. Beware that the diagnosis is not cancer. Presuming it is not, but that the sufferer merely suffers from loss of blood, a question of great importance as well, is to overcome the anemia.

Under such conditions the blood must be conserved. Fortunately, we are not helpless in this respect. Very much can be done of an alleviable character and also to help toward the cure.

When bleeding occurs in excessive manner, the main trouble is that the blood lacks its clotting power. This can be restored by diet, and diet alone.

Hypodermic injections of calcium are worse than useless and are certainly not to be recommended.

The main reason the blood lacks its clotting power is because of the toxemia of wrong diet. The blood is poisoned actually and literally.

You must get these poisons out. The first step is to stop putting more in. The old-fashioned meat, soup and potato diet must go. In its place must come the scientific diet arrangement, mainly of fruits and vegetables.

The diet must be augmented by positive measures of other kinds.

Sun baths, as in every other case of anemia, primarily or secondary, must be frequently taken.

If poisons must be discharged from the bowels, douches of any kind should not be taken, as they are never indicated for such purpose.

There should be little from other sources to exhaust the patient. Worry is detrimental. Fear is thoroughly destructive. There must be mental equanimity.

There are various electrical therapies which do very much in overcoming hemorrhage. Your doctor is more familiar with them than you are. I have seen these simple measures work innumerable times.

There is no necessity for any severe reaction from fibroid tumor bleeding. It is usually controllable and easily prevented.

To remove stumps and other irregularities of the surface of a new road in Western Australia, a team of twenty-three camels recently dragged two steel girders over the ground for 250 miles.

On a journey to the South we traveled in a rail-y train across the Great Desert on a starlit ght.

Train That Passed in the Night

In the heart of that vast loneliness, miles and miles distant from any other human habitation, we saw a little house from which shone the faint flicker of a lighted lamp. In the starlight we could also discern other signs life—a wagon and two horses in a corral, ashed clothes hanging on a line. These d other things we saw to tell us that some one d pitched a living place there.

Yet there was no evidence of farming or other tivity. And so we fell to pondering who these ople might be and why they were there in that solation. It could not be for reasons of health, cause they could have neighbors somewhere else d still be with the desert.

Maybe it was folk grown sick of this complex and lling civilization; a civilization that vexes rich an and poor man alike.

The picture haunted us, and we wondered if we, rself, if fate were to place us hard put, would ave the courage to seek the wilderness and dwell it?

For, the thing that makes men weak when their ly salvation is to be strong is that they have not e courage to cut themselves off from human con-ct and the petty little rounds of care and strife at go to make up the poor, brief spans of exist-nce.

Hard to Say What the Difference Is

"Ordered South," not by the doctors as poor Rob-t Louis Stevenson was, but by the editor of the reat newspaper to which we are attached, we saw uch on the journey to interest and delight us. It was springtime. The regions through which we journeyed were gorgeous with verdure. Wide rivers coursed through them on the way to the yellow gulf and the sea. We passed nto sections of our vast country our eyes had nev-r before beheld.

We remember vividly one whole day spent in fas-inated observation from the window of a railway oach. We struck out of Louisiana at break of day, raveling from New Orleans through Pensacola on o Jacksonville in Northern Florida.

It is a most beautiful region, luring with forests nd lakes and streams, with every now and then a illage pleasant to meet. Green corn fields around hem, smiling. Gently rolling lands upon which ew cotton plants and watermelon vines spread merald carpets; in the mysterious swamps, cypress nd magnolia trees, and many others; the tangled ines of the wild blackberry. Canaan was never airer.

Always skirting the villages were the homes of egroes who are still of the South and not yet tepped up to pace with their brethren who have earned new ways of life. These negro homes held orth a tireless fascination for us.

We found a strange peace in our soul as we be-eld habitation after habitation ready long ago to umble down but which couldn't apparently just muster up the energy to do so. Shacks that had never known the snobbery of paint. And what kept them from falling was something to set a man's mind at work upon another of the many useless theories of life.

Filled with children, joyous with the primal thrill of existence, were these grotesque homes. Little black and brown legs scampered all about them. Gleaming white teeth and shining eyes laughed out upon us from dusky faces. Negro men and women sat inert in the doorways and on the sagged porches.

It seemed to be a land where nobody ever did a lick of work, day or night. And yet, there were the smiling fields that someone had lovingly tilled with scrupulous toil. Clothes, washed white as snow, hung drying lazily in the winds. Somebody must have worked, sometime, but who and when? It was hard to figure out.

Now, if it were the negro inhabitants of that country who tilled the fields and did the washing—and we could see no one else in the premises to have done it—why were they too lazy and shiftless to prop up their collapsing houses? Certainly it could not be for lack of time. There they were sprawled out loafing. They seemed to have more time than anything else.

Now you might think that we railed at them and joined our fellow-travelers in belittlement of these dark dwellers in a fair country. But, happily, that was what we did not do, at all.

We really envied them. For, are we not entangled with many million other human beings in a crazy civilization that harries our very souls with its relentless demands? If our houses sag we must immediately set them in repair. We must quarrel with the repair man over the contract, and somehow get the money to pay him. A home in a white man's town is a care and a worry and a contant and ever-increasing expense.

But, here in the far South, we came upon people who let their houses sag any old way they have a mind to. They do not worry that their houses will fall down. And we did not see a single one that had actually fallen. We don't believe they do fall, ever. And what does it matter which way a house sags and leans so long as it doesn't fall? Nobody has found fault with the Leaning Tower of Pisa.

Happy folk, yonder in the far South.

It May Not Be for the Best

At the time of the last new moon when the regular meeting of the Millionaires' Club of Contentment and Happiness was held on the stone fence from which you can see the sunset on the Ventura Mountains and the lights of the foolish automobiles flitting like fireflies up and down the Calabasas Road, we ventured the remark that the club stood in danger of being regarded as old-fashioned and reactionary.

And the reason we made the remark was that the members of the club went on record as believing that the coming uses of the airship will prove detrimental to mankind.

This action was taken by the club after a full discussion of an authorized statement that within the next five years passengers in airships will make the transcontinental journey from the Atlantic to the Pacific in twenty-four hours.

There you have it, said the man who has the phonograph. This mania for speed can end in no other way than the complete nervous collapse of the human race, he said. And what difference does it make whether a man crosses the continent in twenty-four hours or twenty-four days? he asked.

The difference it makes, remarked the man who lives in the little gray house in the hollow, is that the man who takes twenty-four days to cross the continent sees something, while the man who crosses in twenty-four hours doesn't see a thing.

But, if he does it many times at the rate of twenty-four hours, he will have to see a doctor, pretty soon, said the man who plays the flute. His heart will bother him. Look at all the people dropping dead of weak hearts, even now. Why, he said, in the days of ox teams nobody's heart was a trouble.

The man who used to be a statistician stated that that statistics were plenty at hand to prove that folks are running to a fall in this crazy age. And to say that the Millionaires' Club is reactionary in putting its seal of disapproval on speed is only another way of saying that the members believe that God did a fine thing for us when he put us into this beautiful world and that we ought not to be in such a danged hurry to leave it behind us.

A man who sits under a sunny rafter of our far-flung Synogogue in Alabama, and who knows we like Gypsies, has sent us some interesting information concerning the life of the Romany in America.

A Good Word at Last for Them

This man of the Synagogue in Alabama says that there is in his town a Gypsy who nolonger wanders with the ancient tribes, having settled down to the prosaic business of running a drug store.

And that this drug store is like any other drug store in all respects except for the fact that it is a Gypsy clearinghouse, as well. An average of 7000 messages a year pass through this druggist's hands between the various nomadic clans. Among these messages are telegrams and cables, announcements of births, deaths and marriages, and, alas, often messages of distress.

"Buiness of Egypt." And this drug store Gypsy down in Alabama is deep in it.

Also, this drug store Gypsy who is of the Romany, flesh and bone, and who now stands well as a man of business in the community where he has settled, says his people "are the most completely misunderstood and maligned people in the world. As a rule," he says "Gypsies are straightforward, honest and moderately industrious. They are confused with road tramps or cross-country pilferers. The impression has become traditional that they are child-stealers, while, as a matter of fact few of them are. They have children enough of their own. Not all of them are poor; many of them are well-to-do and a few are even rich."

It is good to hear a good word spoken of those of whom the good word is seldom said, whether it be Romany or someone else.

Glad were we, therefore, in our little high house in the hills to get this good word of old friends. For, old friends of ours the Romany has been ever since the time we roamed the blue hills of Penn's Woods to which the Romany came often in the golden summers.

The worst we ever knew about them was that old men told us they were crooked as the dickens in horse trades. But, we knew church deacons who were also crooked as the dickens in horse trades. It does not seem to have been regarded as a crime to be crooked when swapping horses.

Then there was another time when the Gypsies invaded a wooded spot we loved—a wooded place through which ran a little river. We did not like them too much for that.

The Gypsies offered to take us with them, once in Penn's Woods—to take us with them to live their life.

We wonder would we be glad or sorry now if we had taken the offer up? "Business of Egypt"—how well or how badly would we have managed it?

FAITH

A handclasp stronger than the clasp of man,
A greeting spoken sweeter than human lips e'er can;
A smile far softer—more beautiful still
Than dreaming—eyes could ever gaze their fill.
A face—a vision wafted through a mist—a haze
Of years—as down life's path we gaze
To fill our souls with spirit pure—
Ever endless—spirit divine—o'er years endure.

CARE OF THE BODY

the body secretions have the opportunity to attack the stone formations. X-ray photographs will in many cases show continuous and often decided reductions in size of such stones following the fast. Of course it takes time but it is worth while.

The diet must be in accord with "Care of the Body" teachings—that is, a fruit and vegetable regime. The bowels must be made to move naturally three times a day. Large quantities of pure water must be drunk.

The acute attack should always be treated with a fast, water flushings and and hot hydrotherapy.

There is another element which must not be overlooked. The pain is caused by the pressure of the stone in or near the kidney. Although the kidney opening is small yet it has great power of expansion.

The tubes leading from the kidney to the bladder and outward, also have the power of great expansion and elasticity. Merely because the stone is temporarily stuck in the tube is not sufficient assumption to believe that it will remain stuck and thus compel the use of surgery to remove it.

The power of expansion of many of the organs of the body are far greater than our belief. For instance, it seems an almost incredible fact for a child of eight to ten pounds to emerge from a tightly closed uterus, yet we know that nature has this power.

The same is true of the intestines, and in the acute attack of stones, it is just as true of the gall bladder or kidney tubes.

Thus we can always hope that given the opportunity, the tissues will have the power of getting rid of a kidney or gall stone, whatever the case may be.

Skin Cancers

Q.: Are skin cancers curable?

A.: Where cancer is at all curable, the skin type of cancer responds much more readily than the internal one. However, it depends upon the development, the age, the resistance, the obedience with which one obeys orders, the complications and a number of other factors too numerous to mention, which could not be ascertained except as it pertained to the individual case rather than to a generalization which could be expressed in a health column.

Cookery

The old-fashioned idea that foods must be cooked and cooked and cooked is obsolete.

Today we have various devices on the market which thoroughly steam the food within very few minutes, conserving the vital principles which we know to be of paramount importance in the conservation of health.

There are pressure cookers and steamers of all kinds which serve to retain the vital principles in the food, yet at the same time leave the delicious flavors and essences inherently found in food.

Any of these devices, without being specific in mention, are thoroughly feasible in the modern health kitchen.

The next idea I want to give you on the subject of cooking deals with flavoring agents—condiments and spices.

It has been the custom for most housewives to use garnishes, spices, sauces, seasoning and so forth, to make the food delectable and appetizing. The modern, thoroughly up-to-date cook does not do this at all. She knows how to combine her foods intelligently in such a way that one seasons the other.

There are many seasoning vegetables. We can use everything from garlic to chili, from onions to apple sauce, and we get splendid seasoning reactions.

Again, on the subject of seasoning, salt is used in great quantities. The modern housewife has at least ten different substitutes for the old-fashioned, injurious, health-destroying table salt.

In the modern kitchen, I am opposed to the use of the frying-pan or any other cooking device which means that the food must be enveloped with grease.

When the food particles get into the digestive system, thoroughly mixed with grease, oil or fat, it makes digestion much more difficult and makes an already complicated digestive ailment much more complicated, and oftentimes, incurable.

The general axiom that fried foods—whether the foods are good ones or bad ones—are unfit for human consumption, should be followed by the average housewife or cook who is preparing food for the family.

As far as the cooking utensils are concerned, we have also seen a change in the type of material used.

In the old-fashioned household, we saw copper pots, iron skillets, steel frying-pans and similar cooking devices. Today, aluminum and glass are rapidly taking the place of the old agateware, copper and others, and it is as it should be.

It is my firm opinion that sooner or later the thoroughly up-to-date, modern kitchen will be equipped almost entirely with glass. Glass gives forth no chemical reaction when food is put into it. It also lends itself to a great variety of uses. It is used at the present time, to a considerable extent, in roasting and baking foods.

Incidentally, where heat must be applied to foods, it is a great deal better to roast or bake them than it is to boil or fry them.

This is a general axiom as far as health cooking, alone, is concerned, without, at the same time, dealing with specific recipes or formulas.

Complications of the "Kick"

The average home brewer is not a lawbreaker because he deliberately wants to break the law. He is rather a misdoer because he wants his liquor.

He has become accustomed to the kick of alcohol and he is going to have it, whether he patronizes the bootlegger or makes his own.

The social or legal phase of this question is not my concern. There is enough in the body discussion of this overdiscussed topic.

The home brewer should know something about the chemistry of his product, even though he cannot afford expensive laboratories or a chemistry education.

There are scores and scores of formulas for the manufacture of liquors. Some depend on putrefaction processes, others upon chemical changes.

It is of no importance to me what is done or how.

My attitude on the question is that if you want your bootleg, take it. It is your body, your life, and your funeral—I am not your keeper.

Personally, I value the cleanliness and health of my body too much to take it, but that still should not prevent you from understanding some of the chemistry involved.

The great mass of home brewers are rank amateurs of the first order. They lack experience, technical training and knowledge. They usually manufacture the stuff from labels, formulas or hearsay. Their product is more unreliable than they are.

There are many complications. Oftentimes where they expect fermentation, they secure putrefaction. Molds form and poisons generate with the alcohol. Fusel oil is one of many. Disease bac-

Physical Culture Performed at Home

I teach the most simple, rhythmical, easy exercises which build up symmetry, strength and health in body and mind, in young and old, of either sex. Exercises necessary for any person to get well and keep well; for retired people and for those who perform inside work.

These simple exercises can be easily executed at home, in the office, in the open . . . anywhere, in twenty minutes more or less, two or three times a day.

I especially recommend my easy head exercises and massage for elasticity and the prevention of ear and head troubles. They give great relief as they strengthen the nerves of the head. A splendid exercise for stiff necks.

I am a former instructor in Physical Culture in the German army and have had years of experience in this teaching.

poulticing, massage work, sun baths and so on. One can prevent the spread of the disease, but once the cartilage has degenerated into its hard, bone-like consistency, I have never seen a case where it softened and was restored to its original texture.

Before resorting to surgery, however, I would give the measures I have suggested a very thorough trial, indeed.

I have a special pamphlet on the subject of arthritis which is available to any of my followers who will send me a self-addressed, stamped envelope and a loose two-cent stamp to cover costs.

Prolapse of the Stomach or Uterus

By S. Wesley Martin

"Except through an accident or fall, prolapse of the stomach or uterus should be an impossibility.

"Nature provided us with lower abdominal muscles, which, if kept in use, will keep both the stomach and uterus in a state of suspension. It is only when these muscles become weak and flabby from lack of exercise that they refuse to function, and the consequence is that the internal organs drop.

"Few people have the stomach held as high as nature intended, and the result is indigestion, constipation and many other ailments.

"Female troubles are largely due to this weakness of the abdominal muscles. The ignorance of physical culture teachers regarding these muscles, and the training of the diaphragm, are responsible for more suffering than is commonly supposed.

"Any prolapse of the internal organs prevents perfect breathing, as I will proceed to prove. Try the experiment of lying flat on your back without a pillow, and cough violently. If the act of coughing causes you to contract the lowest abdominal muscles, your breathing is perfect, and it is certain your stomach is not prolapsed. But if the cough, in that position, causes you to push out the lowest abdominal muscles, your breathing is imperfect, and a prolapsed condition of the internal organs is more than probable, although it may be very slight.

"According to leading specialists and vocal teachers, perfect breathing enables you to breathe four times as much oxygen as the average civilized human being, and approximates the breathing capacity of a wild animal. Take care of the lowest abdominal muscles, and, as a rule, the rest of the body will take care of itself.

"Even if doctors understood right breathing, they would have to be extremely philanthropic to ruin their business by teaching it. Operations pay much better, and the patients seem to prefer them to scientific body training."

The above article expresses views exclusively along one direction. Prolapses are due to more than incorrect breathing—chronic constipation, the use of drugs, surgery, atrocious diet, both quantitatively and qualitively—all these are just as important.

I take issue with S. Wesley Martin that correct breathing is a cure-all. It isn't. It is but one of many measures which must be taken.

The physical culturist's art is as important as the breathing of vocal experts. Without corrective diet, all muscular training is comparatively useless. We see that with our overtrained athletes, who go in strong for muscular work, and ignore diet.

But we must get all sides of this important question. Mr. Martin presents but a limited cross-section.

Kidney Stones

My dear Dr. Lovell:

A friend has urged me to write you concerning my physical condition and to hear your suggestions.

After a very careful X-Ray it is discovered I have a good-sized stone, and a slight shadow which may indicate a second small one in my right kidney. So far as I can tell I have absolutely no suffering from it and was surprised to find it. I thought I had gall stones because of so many symptoms which I thought belonged to that ailment, so was examined for such, but find absolutely nothing. Occasionally I have rather severe pain which I called indigestion, very seldom, and always treat it as such and soon disappears. Then at times pain under right shoulder blade and sometimes left shoulder. These are gall symptoms but find no trouble.

Now is it possible to in any way dissolve a kidney stone or should it be operated upon, or just let it alone?

I am a strong and hearty woman, having good health all my life. My blood pressure is just about 20 too high, not much. I am over-weight but well and able to be very busy.

I shall appreciate hearing from you and thank you. Most respectfully,

It is always with a great deal of trepidation and dread that we confront the diagnosis of stones, either in the kidneys or gall bladder.

Somehow or other, through constant association of ideas, we parallel the diagnosis with operative procedure:

"There is a stone in the kidney—hence we must go to the surgeon."

This is a current idea founded upon the only course of action that ninety-nine out of every one hundred of the "regulars" will follow.

Let us supply some critical analysis to this reasoning and see if it bears merit.

It is undoubtedly true that the surgeon has the quickest method of getting rid of a stone. Likewise his is the most dangerous way. It is a problem for each individual to decide, whether he wants to experience the pain or take a chance with his life.

In the communication above there is direct reference to the fact that pain does not exist.

Although there are exceptions kidney stones evidence themselves in a very painful manner. They produce acute attacks of a very severe nature, disseminating the torture throughout the pelvis, front and back.

There is a possibility in cases such as that described above, that the Xray reading may either have been misinterpreted or that the shadowgraph may have been something else instead of a stone.

I would suggest that a new picture be taken at least thirty days later, and carefully checked up side by side with the old one. If marked changes are seen, there is a great likelihood that the entire X-Ray diagnosis is wrong. It is not that the X-Ray does not tell the truth. It is rather that those who read it don't always know their business.

If there is much change in the picture, I would also suggest that surgery be not attempted until eliminative measures have failed.

The stone has formed, crystal by crystal, from tiny particles of urinary sediment of an abnormal kind. The blood has been bad, the kidneys filtered the bad blood, the sediment, instead of loosely disintegrating, joined particle upon ticle.

particle.

a long time to get to the point where the pain becomes apparent. It may take several years before an acute attack is induced. In the same sense it may take a long time before the stone can be reduced by dietetic and eliminative measures, but it can be done.

The short frequent fast is the most effective measure of all. It is then that

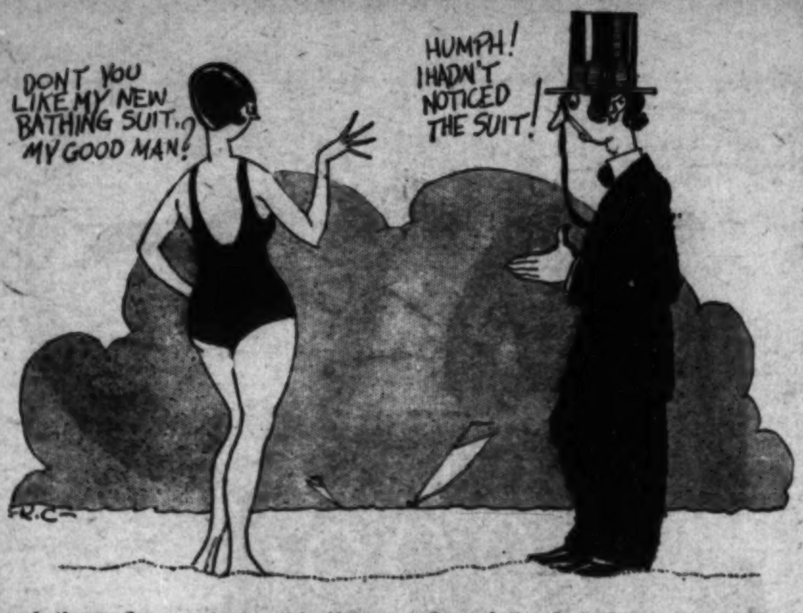
Righteous Raiment

By Alma Whitaker



DONT YOU LIKE MY NEW BATHING SUIT, MY GOOD MAN?
HUMPH! I HADN'T NOTICED THE SUIT!
R.C.

IT SEEMS that one of the most vital and important of ethical questions is clothing. Many pastors, especially one in Santa Monica, feel that righteousness is inexorably intertwined with raiment.

The pastor mentioned voiced a violent concern anent the dress—or undress—of bathers as favored by "the riff-raff" that he said frequents the beaches. He feels that "decent people" are forever being affronted by modern bathing attire, especially when it meets their vision on their way to and from church on the Sabbath.

But in the gospel of St. Matthew occurs this admonition: "Take no thought for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not life more than meat and the body more than raiment?"

Or again in the twenty-eighth verse: "And why take ye thought for raiment?" And again in the thirty-first verse, "Therefore take no thought saying What shall we eat? What shall we drink? Wherewithal shall we be clothed?"

Of course I am aware that it is peculiarly mean to quote Scripture in such a connection. But one cannot help recalling the small boy's essay in which he said "The scribes and the Pharisees were very mean people. One of them brought a penny to the Lord who said 'Whose subscription is this?' "

The scribes and Pharisees were particular about their raiment, too.

Now here is our lovely California summer in full swing. There is a perfectly sumptuous trade in bathing suits, less . . . er . . . Pharisaical than ever before. One can easily take no thought for a bathing suit, there is so little of it left to take thought of.

But bathing suits certainly do imply that "the body is more than raiment" and that more and more of us feel that way about it. I never could learn to swim until these joyous lesser bathing suits came in. The ocean has always seemed thrice as glorious ever since . . . and it is so important that we should all revel in the superior joys of the ocean in our sun-flooded California.

It always seems to me that people are infinitely more attractive, healthy, wholesome, natural, in their bathing suits than in any other attire—in mind, body and estate. After a swim and a sun-bath, even the least pleasant of people become happily normal. One cannot help feeling at times that even pastors need swims and sun-baths . . . and those close contacts with Nature and natural human beings who can be so happily unconscious of "raiment."

In fact, it is not until these "decent people" the pastor mentions, expose their affronted susceptibilities, and take so very much thought of raiment, that happy people, reveling in God's ocean and sunshine and the utterly delightful charms of such beach towns as Santa Monica, have any sense of embarrassment anent raiment at all.

It took a serpent to induce Adam and Eve to take thought of raiment, the poor dears . . . it was only Eden before clothes came in.

Yet we are always being told that "respect for American womanhood" can only be maintained by special kinds of raiment, lots of it. It is a subject that certain kinds of professional Christians harp on, take a frightful lot of thought upon, and oh, how ferociously they deny that "the body is more than raiment."

One of the first things the missionaries do when they are endeavoring to convert the heathen, is to dress them in raiment, teach them "shame" and explain how very unholy the body is. So many portions of the body have been dubbed unholy in our time. When I was a girl, "decent people" were affronted by the sight of a neck. A collarless blouse was shameful. As for ankles, Heavens, how unholy they were. Even unholier than knees are now. It was likewise an indecent thing for a woman to attend a temple of God without her head covered . . . and this is still true of some denominations. I used to wonder whether I would be admitted into Heaven if I were so unfortunate as to die without my hat on.

I recall reading a story for "nice" girls on modesty. It seemed the heroine was a superior example for me to follow, because, when she was caught by the tide and knew she must drown, her chief concern was to tie her skirts tight round her ankles. Young as I was, I cordially disliked that maiden and deplored that she did not take her skirt off instead and try swimming. I was seriously worried that her presumably nice mind should be taking so much thought of raiment in such a crisis. It was so essentially a case where "the body was more than raiment."

I have always loved the Gospels, and particularly the Gospel according to St. Matthew. There Christianity seems such a simple, wholesome thing, lacking all the dreadful complications of latter-day verbotens—and raiment. When the pastors start concentrating on clothes, I always remind myself that religion, Christianity, is not essentially, adamantly, a matter of churches and pastors, although such can, on occasion, add much precious spiritual guidance, when the pastor is that sort of a man. But oh, dear, it is dreadfully possible for some churches and some pastors to make Chritianity seem paltry, messy . . . alarmingly dependent upon "raiment" and all the trumpery side-issues that can imply.

President Hoover, bless him, selected Matthew v. and the Sermon on the Mount, upon which to take his oath of office. Of all the sweet, reasonable benedictions in that, there is not a single one for those who "Take thought of raiment" . . . not a word against "improprieties," not a blessing for affronted "decent people" . . . but there is one for the "pure in heart."

I find I can be purer in heart in a bathing suit—even a shrunken one that reveals several inches more of me than affronted decent people would approve—basking in the immensity of God's ocean and sunshine, than anywhere else on earth, not excepting a church, with my hat on. I simply cannot feel mean toward a soul there. "All God's chillun has wings" for me, on such days.

Curious how clothes became so sanctified, isn't it? Rags, rags, rags . . . white starched slithers of rag buttoned at the back, black cloth rags with special kinds of collars, large rags, with lots of folds, purple silk rags beneath lace surplices, stiffened rags made into hats, knitted rags to conceal legs . . . and every lacking inch replete with . . . indecency, and frightfully involved with "respect for American womanhood . . ."

FILBERT FIDDLE

A Timely Warning to the Eskimos

DEAR Mr. Editor: There has been so much talk here and of late about trips and expeditions to the South Pole that I have been making some very exhausting researches about the lands of ice and snow in hopes that I could get some ideas that might be good for people to know, which I did.

In the first place I learned a lot about the Eskimos, who are the people who live up in the cold Artic circles toward the North Pole instead of the South Pole, which doesn't make any difference as I have found out something which they ought to know and that is the reason for this opened letter, Mr. Editor.

Some people have the idea that the work of an efficiency expert such as I am is to study conditions and then tell the owner of a factory or something how to run his own business, which is true so far as that goes, but my Alma Matter always taught us to look around and about us for chances to help our fellow men and women with good ideas and then to speak right out without fear of favors. That is why I am penning this—i. e., to warn the beknighted Eskimos of some facts they have no chance of getting for themselves.

Many times past members of this misunderstood and interesting race have been brought to this country and other more temperance zones as curios or for more kindlier purposes by explorers and travelers only to find that they soon caught colds and quickly died of galloping consumption and tuberculosis. So, the kindliness of their bonyfactors who thought they were giving the Eskimos a swell chance to see the world, was a great disappointment and, to say the least, fatal to our visitors from the Northland.

Away up toward the North Pole, where the big, white bear rules the lonesome and vastly white plains of ice, our little darker brothers and sisters live in houses and huts built of ice blocks instead of bricks or wood and they are used to being out in the cold and fresh air because they wear heavy clothes and underwear made out of skins and fur. They eat blubber (fat) and a wax candle would be wasted if they burned it for they like such tidbits for their desert just as we eat ice cream and pie.

So, you can see, Mr. Editor, how different our land of the U. S. A. is from where the Eskimo lives and how fatal it is for them to come here to make their home in a milder climb, as the poets often say. It is like when they bring the polar bear here to live and have him in an animal zoo or a circus, it is essential to have a big pool of ice water and large cakes of ice always at his hand to help him keep cool or he will suffer and not be able to stand the wear and tear of our warm weather.

In some parts of our fair land where it seems very cold in winter time and we suffer terrible from chilblains and freezing, the Eskimos and polar bears could play around and about in the wintry blasts barefooted and never know it was cold at all, they are so used to weather that is so much worse. In the summer time they would just naturally pine away because of homesickness for their Artic sports and worry theirselves into a fatal case of lung trouble, which they are subjected to here.

These Eskimos do not have any public libraries where they can go to look up interesting and vital statics and so, they have no chance of finding out about the awful danger they are in if they come to some other country to live. It will be a great boom to these interesting people for this to appear in your valuable paper where it can be read by the Eskimos and, if they are planning to come to the good, old U. S. A., they can cancel their reservations and decide to stay up there amongst the icebergs where they are safe from the great white plague (consumption.)

As Old Adage once said: "An ounce of preventing is better than all the cures," and it's true in this case, Mr. Editor. Besides, our many readers will be glad to learn all these interesting datas about our little brothers and sisters of the Far North. Yours for saving the Eskimos person is clogged. Nature uses the opportunity to disengorge. The breath is bad. Mucus and slime line the entire digestive tube from the tongue inward.

A breakfast of hot-cakes or waffles, toast, coffee, eggs, ham and sausages is certainly not the type of breakfast to neutralize such toxic indications.

The body has done little work. The symptoms are toxic. The heavy breakfast is certainly not a good element under such conditions.

Yet, this is what we find in the average person.

The only exception would be in cases where one does hard, manual labor. Then one burns it up. The average housewife, office-worker or the person engaged in similar nervous and mental pursuits does not get sufficient activity to burn up a heavy meal of this sort.

A better breakfast would be made up of fruits and plenty of water. Then, if you are accustomed to your morning cup of coffee, try a coffee substitute sweetened with honey.

"Tummy In!"

So many suffer from prolapses and displacements of the abdominal structures from wrong posture.

Of all the unnecessary causes of disease, this seems to me, one of the worst!

It is so easy to assume correct carriage. The results are almost spectacular.

We spend many dollars buying supports, bandages and miscellaneous contraptions to hold in the abdominal and pelvic viscera. We build artificial "doojiggers" to do work for us mostly because we are too lazy or indifferent to do it for ourselves.

Of course, there are many defects which come from one organ pressing upon the other. But the remedy does not lie in a magic device for sale at so much per, but rather in the constant admonition and adherence to "tummy in."

Just bear that in mind. Hold that abdomen in. The rest of the postural correction will, more or less, take care of itself and with it there will be a correction of many other defects of a mild or serious nature.

The Milk Diet

Dear Dr. Lovell:

Will you please give your opinion in "Care of the Body," as to the value (if any) of the exclusive "Milk Diet" as advocated by Bernarr McFadden. We would greatly appreciate it.

Sometime ago, I wrote to you for advice in regards to constipation and general run-down condition. You kindly sent me information, which I have followed, and I want you to know that I am now a well woman, thanks to you, and proper diet and exercise.

It is a pleasure to tell my friends about your methods, and I only hope that they will benefit as I have. You have my best wishes in regard to the fine work you are doing toward helping suffering humanity.

Sincerely yours.

Although Bernarr McFadden was not the first, by any means, to advocate an exclusive milk diet in the treatment of disease, yet he has undoubtedly made the most converts.

Among his voluminous publications he has written a splendid treatise on the subject. Bernarr McFadden has done more on a large scale to popularize natural methods than perhaps any other living man.

His advocacy of the milk diet is but one of a large number of splendid measures that he has helped to put across in a big way.

The milk diet is of splendid value in many diseases yet comparatively worthless in others. It can be overused and wrongly used.

To prescribe a milk diet for a catarrhal condition, which has as its basic cause the overconsumption of the mucous producing foods, such as fish, eggs and milk, is obviously a wrong procedure.

To prescribe it where the liver is enlarged, the intestines constipated, or the system toxic, and elimination poor, is equally a mistake.

There are some doctors who use milk as a panacea for all physical ailments—a sort of hit-and-miss dietetic routine. If it works on some, fine. If it doesn't work well fine also, except that the patient who does not get such good results is merely a trifle unlucky.

Were you to read medical textbooks, authorized by so-called authorities, you would find in almost every instance, the refined and concentrated foods, such as custards, eggs, egg-nogs and milk for an ulcerated condition of the stomach. This notwithstanding the fact that in the average American diet these foods form a large proportion of the daily routine of living.

If an ulcerated condition requires such bland foods, and if the normal diet routine of a normal family life consists of most of such foods, with a smattering of lettuce and tomatoes, once in a while to constitute the roughage, and occasionally a bit of fruit, how, may I ask, can this bland diet eradicate the cause of gastric and duodenal ulcer and other conditions of this sort.

The milk diet is of some value in cases of extreme irritation, and in many cases where one becomes intolerant to other foods. It is also suitable at times to break a fast.

It may be used effectively as a transition food, when one wants to modify diet advocated by this department. soup, potatoes, and coffee variety to a diet advocated by this department.

Milk like all other foods used for therapy has its use and misuse—we should understand it intelligently.

Cartilage Disease

Coachella, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

I would greatly appreciate your advice.

My fingers seem to have a gristle growing in the first joint and are very sore when pressure is applied. Also, the bone at my wrist joint is enlarged. I have experienced pain in my wrists and a red streak always runs up my arm about several inches.

I am troubled with gas in my stomach.

I had my appendix removed about twelve years ago.

I am forty-five years of age. I am dependent upon myself and feel that I must not allow my hands to become useless if I can help it.

A READER

In the ordinary case of arthritis there is a degeneration of the oily fluid found between the joints. When this degeneration assumes a different nature, due, again, to the toxic poisoning of the blood stream, the cartilage between the joints is affected. It undergoes a form of hardening degeneration. It loses its elasticity and the joint develops a sort of gristle or semi-hard lump in its midst.

If it is near the surface and all dietetic and hygienic remedies I have suggested for the treatment of arthritis have failed, and if, at the same time, impairment is severe enough to destroy completely the functional use of the finger or joint affected, then I can see nothing that can be lost by having a skillful surgeon remove the clot.

The worst that he can do, provided he bungled the job, would be to immobilize function still further.

I have never seen a case of this "gristle" formation cured entirely. One can prevent new formations from developing. One can minimize the pain by

HORSE-SHOES ARE LUCKY!

By Lois V. Barry

SMILE if you will, and arch your brows in a most superior fashion. Say, with a little air of condescension that superstitions—well, my dear—NO ONE, that is, no one with any intelligence, believes in them any more. In which case your major premise will be found to contain a fallacy, because superstition has nothing to do with it.

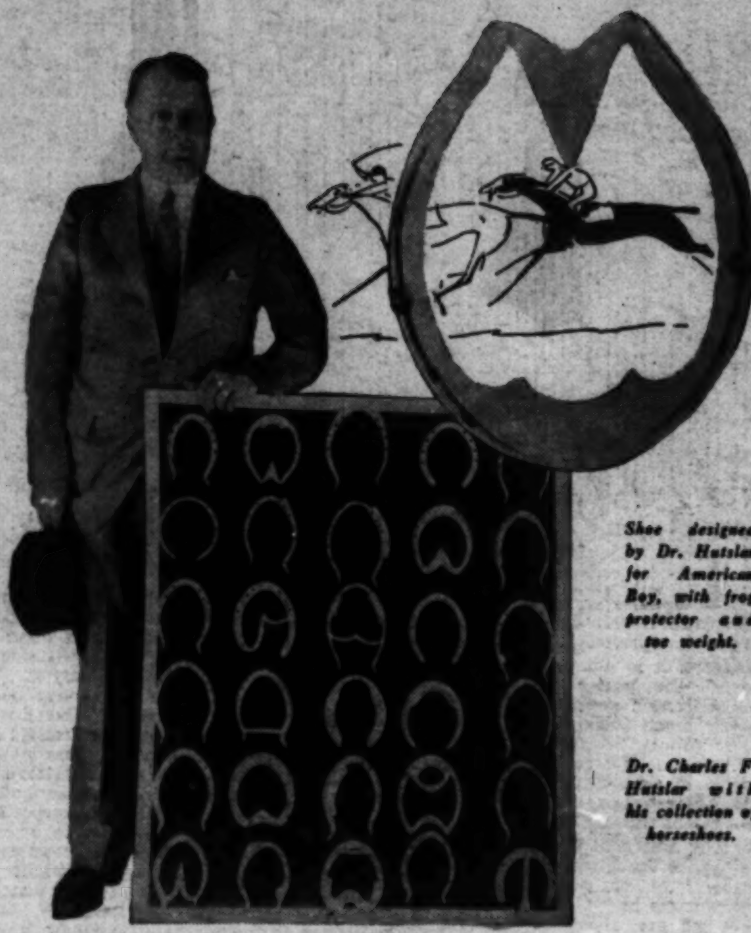
Horse-shoes are lucky; at least the horse is apt to think so and he should have the final say in the matter. If his shoes fit and are nicely adjusted to all his little pedal idiosyncrasies, he's not only lucky—he's on top of the world! For a lot of science is connected with the making of horse-shoes, and so very many things can be wrong about a horse's feet—or hoofs, if you prefer. And if the shoes aren't comfortable no number of excellent "points" are going to make a winner out of him. Just remember that the next time you are trying to figure out the "dope" on a race.

The whole matter was discussed—rather strangely, it may seem—by Dr. Charles F. Hutslar, pastor of the First Christian Church of Pomona. But not so strangely either, because his knowledge of horses and his ability to make comfortable shoes for them was, after all, only a means to an end. Thus was he enabled to study for the clergy, for as a boy still in his 'teens, living in Springfield, Ohio, it was not only his hobby but his means of livelihood.

"The goal of horse training is perfection of gaits," said Dr. Hutslar. "An absolute perfection based on the geometric theorum that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points.

'After you think the horse is trained to a perfect gait, perfection after all is only relative, and another person might find all sorts of things wrong about the gait. In fact, so far as I am aware, but one horse has approximated perfect gait in the estimation of the majority of observers, and that was Lou Dillon, the wonderful little trotter who broke her own world's record clad in shoes very light and as nearly perfect in form as skill could make them, and also wore her little white quartèr boots."

"Interfering" and "outward winding!" Dr. Hutslar's cheeks flushed just the least bit when he used the track terms which now may seem, to him at least, so lacking in grace and dignity. It seems that most horses possess either one fault or the other. In "interfering" the legs while moving from one point of earth contact to another describe a half circle in toward each other, often with the cutting of the hoof or knee of the opposite leg and retarded action. The only way of overcoming this fault is in making scientifically proper shoes, thicker on the outer side, with the thickened portion running toeward fairly straight, so that when the arc of the shoe meets it a slightly protruding angle occurs. This gives him resistence, however slight, so that in going through his paces he yields to a forced straightening of gait. The idea is much the same as with humans who run their heels over and kick their ankles while walking. If the horse "outward winds" which is the opposite of "interfering" the shoes are built with reverse resistance.



Shoe designed by Dr. Hutslar for American Boy, with frog protector and toe weight.

Dr. Charles F. Hutslar with his collection of horseshoes.

Most of the discussion, which took place rather incongruously in the prayer room of the church (being used as an office, however,) dealt with grand circuit horses. A comparison of pacers and trotters brought out the fact that pacers "break over" or complete their steps quicker than trotters. The pacer may "break over" too quickly and thus spoil his rhythm, in which case it is necessary to study the hoofs carefully with an eye to either lengthening the toe or shortening the heel or both.

Likewise if the "break-over" is tardy, the toe must be shortened, usually by either shortening the toe, lifting the heel, or giving the shoe a cut-off at the toe.

The faults just described are ordinarily manifest in the rear hoofs, the imperfections of the front feet usually being much more serious, dealing with inherited tendencies to disease. Theories and more theories trying to explain these diseases have been brought forward, but the one which seems to hold the most water is that the front legs, bearing their relative weight and doing little work aside from maintaining balance of the body, go into a decline. The driving force, the real muscular activity, is in the rear quarters, thus giving the rear feet more pressure and activity.

Split quarters, contracting heels with diseased frogs and painful corns are three leading ailments presenting problems to the shoer, as well as the veterinary. If you want to see a really fancy shoe observe one built for a horse suffering from all three of these ailments. If you think that all horse-shoes are just curved rims of steel you are due for an eye-opener!

But a trainer's work is never done! After being shod the horse must be taken to the track and observed. He must be studied on the straight-away and again on the turns, for in the two instances the horse is in a different position, and so does not handle his feet the same. It may be found that the horse is excellent on the straight stretches, but slow on the turns; he may be awkward or fearful. In this event he is fitted with shoes built up on one side to assist on the turns. Then he must be checked to see if the time gained on the turns, thus shod, more than makes up for the time inevitably lost on the straight, because a horse going full speed will yield to the slightest force, and the grabs for use on the turns will invariably throw him off on the straight course.

Sometimes a horse is too light on his feet, with no apparent sense of rhythm, or he lifts his hoofs too high in the air. Obviously the thing to do is to weight the shoes, as the horse always yields to weight. The problem is: how heavy? That's just another of the little things which brings the trainer and the shoes into a huddle.

Perhaps the best known horse actually shod for competition by Dr. Hutslar was American Boy, famous for the record of 2:09 over the half-mile track—a much more difficult course than the mile track. American Boy's weakness was in sensitive heels. Weight in the toes was essential with proper relief to the heels; yet the horse required very light shoes. The problem presented was one of many successfully met by a lad in his 'teens who was destined to become a doctor of divinity.

The building of shoes is not the simple task it looks to be from the finished products. One might readily assume they are cut from steel. Instead, an ordinary bar of steel is taken and must be scientifically turned and welded into the required shape. In the instance of a very fancy-looking shoe, the grabs, bracers, and all seeming adjuncts as well as the shoe itself must be welded from one bar of steel.

The final weight of the shoe, too, must be well considered. For instance, if a horse requires a five-ounce shoe similar to the ones March Gale wore on her front hoofs, a strip of steel weighing at least five and a half ounces is brought to white heat, after which it is pounded into shape. Usually in this process about a quarter of an ounce is lost. The shoe is still overweight up to the final adjustment, when it is brought down to specifications by a process of vise-filing. It is easier to cut down but it is impossible to build up without welding on weight or making a new shoe. Here is a challenge or test of the shoer's skill.

A horse's hoofs are constantly undergoing changes which necessitate adjustments, and a shoe must be accurate in every detail and absolutely suited to the one hoof for which it is made. After talking with Dr. Hutslar, one senses that a very ticklish blending of art, science and hope goes into the making of horse-shoes.

Eventually the discussion wound around to horses in general. A mention was made of a French trainer who recently stated that American horses had not progressed in the last twenty years,

Rest sitting chest expansion. The operator uses his knees for support, as illustrated in Figures 6 and 7. The patient clasps his hands behind his neck and inhales while taking the position of Figure 6. He exhales, returning to position of Figure 7. Either side can in that way be expanded separately very much confused in regard to this most vital phenomenon and the right way of executing it. Their muscular as well as nervous system is generally so unbalanced that they are unable to grasp even the simplest and most fundamental of these principles.

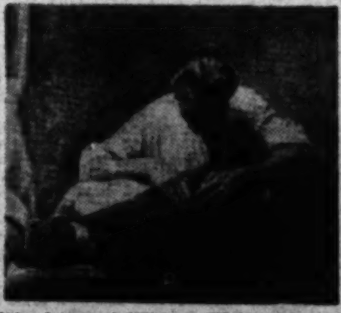
"People who have not yet been spoiled by the degenerating influence of our modern conventional habits breathe naturally in the manner here advocated.

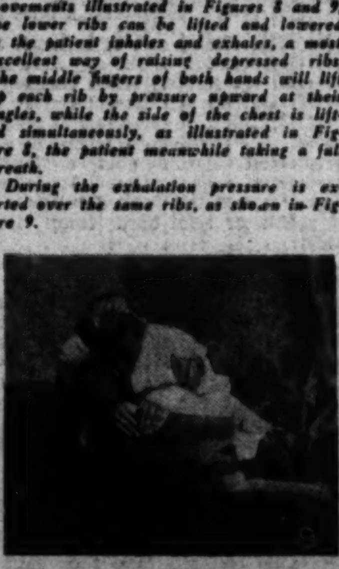
"Those people, however, who already have been deformed and crippled by habit need the most scientific training. First, the cause of the deformity has to be removed, if possible. The common mode of dress seems to be the most important cause.

"Next comes the incorrect sitting habit, lack of such work as will compel the system to take in an extra supply of oxygen, lack of poise in standing, walking, working, playing, etc. The joints between the vertebrae and ribs, as well as between the individual vertebrae, must be made more supple, if necessary, by the aid of manual movements.



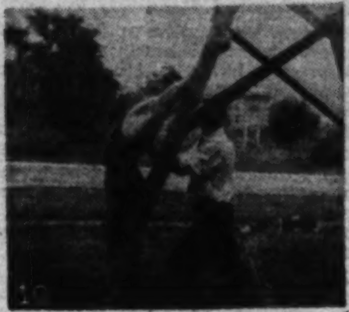
Side lying rib-lifting. While giving the movements illustrated in Figures 8 and 9, the lower ribs can be lifted and lowered as the patient inhales and exhales, a most excellent way of raising depressed ribs. The middle fingers of both hands will lift up each rib by pressure upward at their angles, while the side of the chest is lifted simultaneously, as illustrated in Figure 8, the patient meanwhile taking a full breath.

During the exhalation pressure is exerted over the same ribs, as shown in Figure 9.



"The tone of the trunk muscles, especially those of respiration, need to receive a thorough and systematic training; and spinal curvatures, as well as other deformities of the trunk, must be corrected.

"Breathing exercises are used in several of the Eastern countries—India, Tibet, China, etc.,—as a religious measure, to assist in the balancing of the higher faculties, as well as to harmonize the vital functions of the body. These different forms of breathing exercises, more simple and beneficial, others more or less fantastic and injurious, are generally advocated as an adjunct to other religious customs and practices."



Stretch grasp standing chest expansion. Figure 10 illustrates a movement of great value for expanding the chest. The operator placing his hands on the scapula presses forward and upward, while the patient takes a deep breath. The hands can then be moved one on each side of the lower chest and pressure exerted there while the patient exhalez.

A Hearty Breakfast

Among the questions in my question-box is one that asks why we should not have a hearty breakfast after a twelve-hour fast.

The writer states that the stomach is then empty and we need a heavy meal more at that time than at any other.

The argument would be reasonable enough if our food needs were determined by the emptiness or fullness of the stomach or intestines. But they are not.

The stomach is merely a receptacle for holding the food and not a determinant telling us how much we shall eat.

The body needs are rather to be considered than the fullness or emptiness of the stomach.

During the night the body is at rest. It uses very little energy—less than at any other period. It needs less recharging.

Why Good Food Poisons You!

Paralysis and Nervous disorders are built out of identically the same food substance that builds health and strength in millions of others. WHY? The answer is: You are literally "tuned" to attract discord and destructive elements from everything you contact—the food you eat, the air you breathe, the water you drink—all the forces of Nature are actually TURNED AGAINST YOU instead of aiding you.

Your VIBRATIONS ARE OUT OF HARMONY! That's the trouble. Normalize them and every cell in your body begins at once to attract life and health instead of disease and death. A marvelous medium for accomplishing this, called the TRI-CLAST, is restoring thousands to health. Let us prove it with free demonstrations either here or in your own home.

Come and be convinced or mail this ad for literature and full details. We have accomplished such wonderful results in the past eleven years that we do not hesitate to give you a WRITTEN GUARANTEE. Free demonstrations at our office or in your own home or you can rent one for home use.

The Cloven Hoof

By Fannie Hurst

A Man and the Two Worlds That Dominated His Life

SOMETIMES neither the management nor a large part of the audiences which crowded the kind of variety theaters where this attraction appeared, knew what Cloven Hoof meant.

But seldom did they miss its connotation. Even to the ignorant and the unenlightened, the term "cloven hoof" suggested the pagan, the fantastic, the unrestrained, the naughty and forbidden.

The Cloven Hoof act did not disappoint.

It consisted of a series of "Solo Ballets" as the programmes put it, performed by none other than The Faun himself, a role that had for years been successfully impersonated on vaudeville small-time circuits by Renold Renolds.

There was a stage name for you. Renold Renolds. It intrigued the fancy. It made girls who had stood on their feet all day in shops and factories thrill with surmise.

Renold Renolds did not fail them. He was as straight and as fleet as a young god; or, indeed, as the naughty faun he portrayed. It might be said that his face was moulded in the form of a satyr's. Lean, pointed, with leaping arches to his brows, a dipping, full-lipped mouth, quick eyes and hair that grew naturally into forelock and sideburns. Even his fingers were full of quick, high movements, as if they were about to lift a pipe of Pan. Renolds was an old timer of success.

It was said that his performance had once included a stirring trapeze act that had yielded him over twice the salary he now enjoyed, but that his bride of two weeks had fallen off the bar and broken her back and that, since then, the Cloven Hoof act had consisted merely of the Solo Ballet.

Be that as it may, the performance still retained sufficient vigor and novelty to insure Renolds steady and long-term bookings.

His scene consisted of a grotto, moss grown, lichen grown, woody, tropical and full of strange under-and-over-growths of fern, mosses, orchids and climbing plants. The effect of a waterfall was achieved by lighting. Birds of strange plumages sat in the trees, a red moon rose slowly out of a clump of jungle. Owls hooted. A nightingale fluted its half-finished notes. The beholder was transported from his consciousness of city streets, banging cars and day of moil-and-toil, into the curious, half-rank, half-fragrant mysteries of the jungle.

Renolds entered in a loin cloth of leopard skin, vine leaves in his hair, his strange pointed head thrown back and the pipes of Pan playing eerily along his lips.

He was god-like, all right. Tan were his limbs, lean and long, his torso full of flexuosities. His soft-soled sandals, made of finest kid, were fastened with thongs that wrapped around his legs and across the insteps and lent him silent-footed grace.

It was said that Renolds's "fan letters" amounted to hundreds a week. At any rate, every month he sent a packet of them to the headquarters of his management in New York, as evidence of the continuing and hardy success of his act.

There were those who said the success of that act was not Renolds himself, but his animals. During all three of his Solo Ballets, there appeared upon the stage birds, dogs, cats, a small trained leopard, a pair of trained marmosets.

Two love-birds lit on the faun's shoulders and picked cherries from his lips. A tiny poodle dog ran into the scene on rear legs, carrying a doll-baby in his fragile forepaws. The tame leopard walked out of a moonlit clump of trees and permitted Renolds to turn double somersaults across his beautiful back. The marmosets staged a chase up and down the long, slim flanks of the solo dancer. Three pale gold angora cats played ring-around-a-rosy. A flaming macaw flew across the scene and alighted on the branch of a tree.

It was quite an act, ending with Renolds surrounded by his menagerie, birds along his arms, the leopard at his side, the dog standing on the back of one of the angoras, the marmosets chittering, the macaw waving its tri-colored, wide-spread wings and the lights causing the waterfall to leap in glory.

There was an ecstatic sort of mystery about the man who can be wondered about. What was Renolds's life? Fantasy, indulged in by the meagre girls in their meagre rooms, ran wild.

Actually his life was this:

There was truth in the rumor that the two-weeks-old bride of Renolds had fallen from a flying trapeze. The short, blunt facts were that she had broken her back, cracked her skull and met with torturous internal injuries. She was a frail beauty of a girl who had danced before a row of footlights most of her life, and, with the sometimes astonishing endurance and vitality of tne frail, had weathered the horribleness of the accident and had at least won her life. Precious little more than that. The back healed, but kept her flat on it. The skull healed, but the mind could bend and flicker like a lamp in a gale. Internal displacements sometimes tore at Emadie and made her frantic with pain.

And yet the mystery of it! The eternal mystery of the will to live! Both Renolds and Emadie fought for that life, clung to it, struggled to keep it going.

There is an old Hindoo saying that "No one but God and I knows what is in my heart." Well, no one but God and Renolds could quite have known the quality of love, endurance and forbearance that Renolds poured into those long years that were aftermath to the night his crushed and broken bride had lain writhing at his feet after the hurl from the trapeze.

Renolds gave himself to the remnant of this life that had been left to him with a seal, with an intensity that was nothing short of fanatical, and with the sometime tendency of a mind that is tortured, to vent itself against the one most loved, Emadie literally pirated off the quality-of-mercy that was Renolds's. She was exacting, she was jealous, she was dictatorial and, in the frenzy of her pain, poor creature, was often abusive beyond the telling.

Even her doctors sometimes forgot forbearance, reminding her that there are limits even to the tyrannies of the afflicted. But not so Renolds. It was as if he bared his neck, bowed his head and said: "Strike, strike, strike."

And strike Emadie did. For fifteen years Renolds had carted the poor little ruin that was his wife from town to town with him. He had invented beds, carrying chairs, spine-rest devices, mattresses especially designed for berths, cold-water bottles, hot-water bottles traveling medicine kits, that might, if patented, have made a rich man. Not a step had Renolds taken in all those years without the litter that bore his wife, at his heels.

Between the demands of his menagerie and the demands of Emadie, Renolds's time was crammed to its limit. In a way his animals had come to depend upon him just as surely and just as exactingly as Emadie. The French poodle would only eat from Renolds's hand. The macaw would let no hand but his place him on his perch at night. The marmosets pined and would not eat until Renolds personally administered to them. Countless times he had sat up the night through with one of the orange angora cats which was subject to asthmatic smothering spells.

If ever a man had two worlds entirely dependent upon him, that man was Renolds. The world of his wife, the world of his animals. He was their sustenance, their all. His time was theirs, his life devoted to their creature comforts, and to the exacting task of keeping the rough places of life out of their sight.

And every night, as he bounded on stage into his jungle and the waterfall began to flow silver, and the shy, sweet sounds of the forest began to emerge, the rows of girls with the tired feet sat feasting their eyes and hearts on the beautiful pagan mysteries of the young god with the cloven hoof.

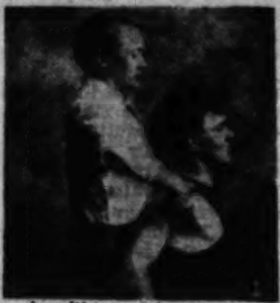
CARE OF THE BODY

By Philip M. Lovell, N. D.

Chest Expansion

Th Swedes have been the leading exponents of the art of physical culture in all its branches.

They have brought the science of exercise for therepeutic purposes to a higher degree of development than all of the rest of the nations combined.



Sitting chest-lifting with expansion. This is the mildest form of chest expansion taken in the sitting position. The operator stands behind and supports the patient's back, grasping the upper arms as in Fig. 1.

Swedish movement in massage work is internationally known and practiced.

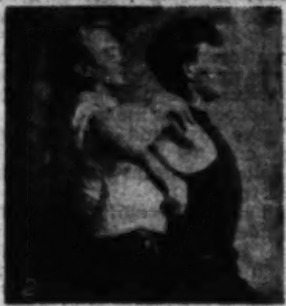
Resistive exercises have been scientifically arranged by them for many scores of diseases.

One of the finest written booklets that has come to my attention recently, was presented by Dr. Tell Berggren, M. D., the medical head of Jacumba Hot Springs, Calif.

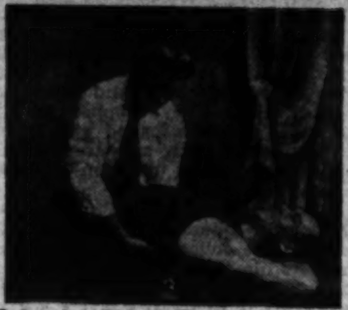
A Swede himself, he has made some very fine contributions to the art of exercise.

Many of you already possess the physical culture chart which I published last year. On the chart I presented a series of self-administered exercises.

In addition to the exercises one can take by oneself, there are very many, extremely valuable, that are taken with an assistant, who may be any adult in the home.



Sitting arm-circling with expansion. The operator takes hold of the patient's upper arms, drawing them in a direction backward and a little upward. The operator supports the patient's back with his own trunk, using a small cushion between to increase the expansion (Fig.2.) A moderate pressure over the false ribs can be exerted by the operator at the end of the expiration.



Lying chest lifting. The patient is declining. The operator stands as in Fig. 3, grasps the patient under the back with the fingers of his two hands meeting just below the shoulder blades. Gently arching the patient's spine by lifting with both arms, he vibrates the thorax or shakes it carefully from side to side, the patient in the meanwhile taking a full breath. While letting the patient down, he moves his hands slowly to the side of the lower chest, where he exerts gentle pressure so as to assist in the expiration. This is the gentlest, of the so-called chest expansions, and can be given to bedridden patients with great advantage.

Where the patient is weak or with extremely low vitality, it is advisable to have an assistant help with the exercises. Consequently the following contributions on the resistive exercises for chest expansion I consider exceedingly valuable for those who need the particular kind of work.

The photographs of Dr. Berggren and his subject are exceedingly good and we are grateful for them.

"The term chest expansion is applied to certain movements given for the purpose of loosening the chest and developing the respiratory apparatus. They are particularly effective in overcoming the chest-bound condition so common among all classes of people. No teacher of physical education can really succeed without a knowledge of at least the simplest of them.

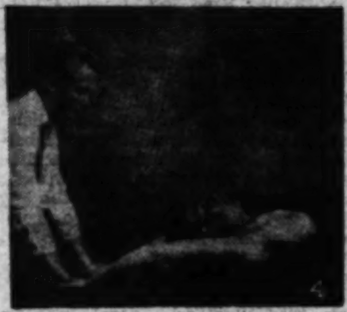
"Every gymnastic system should involve chest expansion, as the cardinal rule in rational gymnastics should be to keep the head up, the chin in, and shoulders down and back as much as possible during the execution of each movement.

"Allan Broman, writing on this subject, says: 'Every gymnastic exercise should be done under conditions of full and free breathing. An exercise which does not permit this is bad educationally, and should be eradicated. In fact, every gymnastic exercise rightly executed is a respiratory movement.

"This is of the greatest importance in medical gymnastics as well as in other branches of physical education. On the respiratory functions are dependent to a greater or lesser extent most vital phenomena. Consequently it would be difficult to pay too much attention to this very important procedure.

"The expansion in natural breathing should be principally at the waist. Nearly the entire trunk wall, as well as the organs within the trunk, should also take part in the movement. That the expansion takes place at the sides and behind, especially in the regions of the lower ribs, as well as in front, is not generally understood. The majority of adults breathe with the upper chest, the lower part of the abdomen, or both. Exclusive chest breathing as well as abdominal breathing is incorrect. The entire trunk wall should participate in the movement.

"The majority of people seem to be



Lying chest-lifting with arm-raising. The patient lies with slightly elevated trunk. The operator stands behind, grasps the patient's hands and lifts his arms forward to vertical (reach) position. He now draws the patient's arms backward to stretch position, lifting the arms well, so that he and not the patient carries them (Fig. 4.) During this movement the patient takes a deep inhalation, exhaling while the arms are brought back. Modgrate pressure over the false ribs can be exerted by the operator at the end of the expiration (Fig 5.) This is of great advantage in aiding the movement of the ribs, making the expiration more complete.

THE MAGNETIC IRON BATHS OF REDONDO BEACH—THEY HELP OTHERS AND WILL HELP YOU

Within sixty days of my application for a patent on my method of giving these baths I was granted a basic Patent by the United States Patent Office, there being nothing like it in the Library of Congress.

Not on account of its scientific discovery that cannot be described after using all the big words in the United States language, but a common sense method of restoring the circulation. A great surprise to all who will try this wonderful rejuvenating earth Magnetic Iron-Ore or Oxidulated Iron, the richest and most important Ores of Iron. The mineral that knows no death is a widely diffused metal occurring crystallized in Iron—black Octahedrons and Dodecahedrons in the form of sand iron is an essential constituent of the blood in all vertebrate animals. One part Iron to 230 parts of blood.

If you feel any unnatural interference with the natural movement of your body come at once to Magnetic-Iron Baths. Over 7000 baths given without one failure. We came from this earth and return to this earth, why shouldn't the earth restore our wonderful body. I could write many pages of what these baths have done or will do, but to me 99 times out of 100 it's just one thing—the circulation gone wrong and it's only in the way of its occurrence that we feel the interference of all these things we will call disease. During the coming vacation spend three days in Redondo, bringing with you your aches and pains. Take one or three Magnetic-Iron baths and the surprise of your life awaits you.

CITIES of FEAR

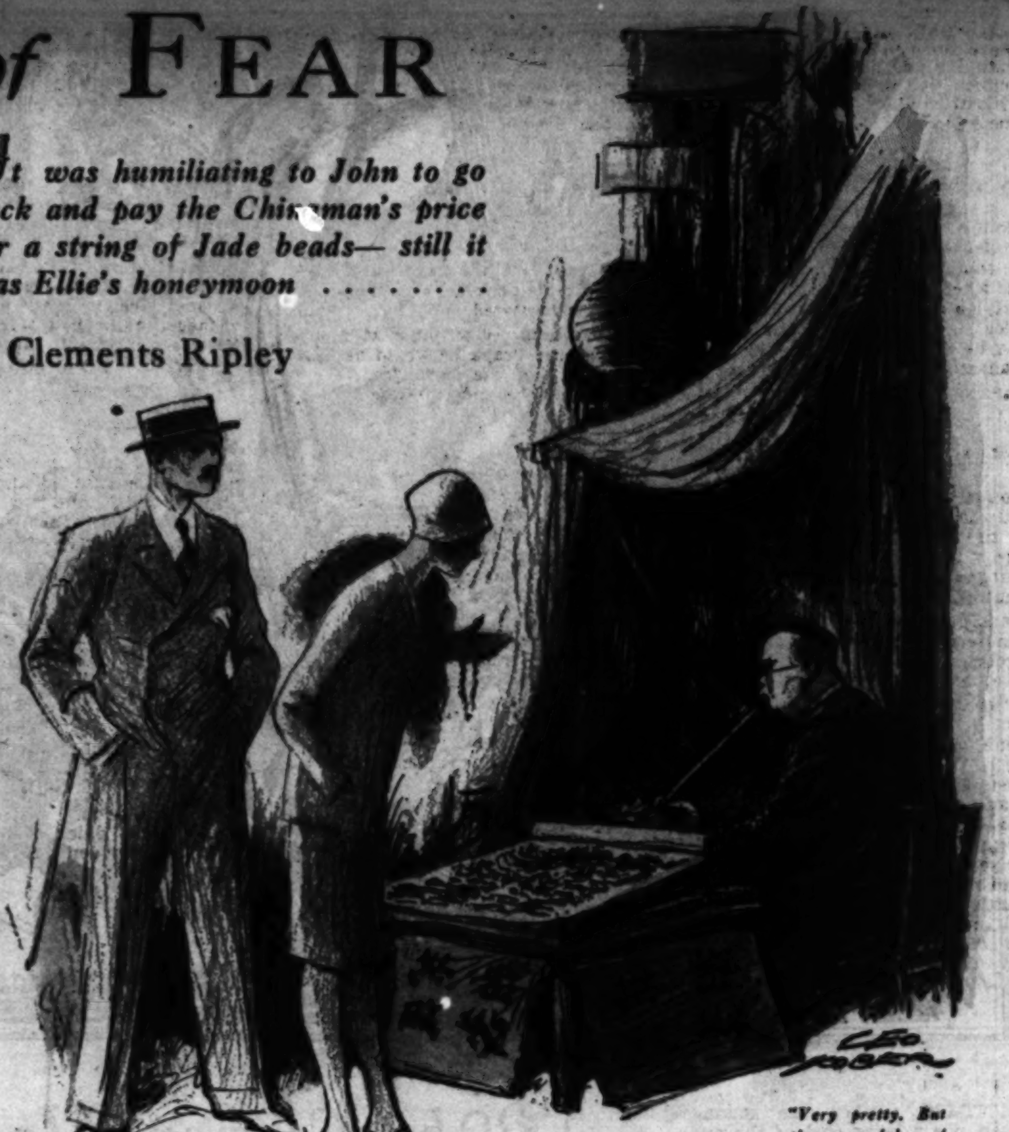
It was humiliating to John to go back and pay the Chinaman's price for a string of Jade beads— still it was Ellie's honeymoon . . . .

By Clements Ripley



"Very pretty. But they are fake, of course"

JOHN BASSET was disappointed in Macao. The red and blue, flat-roofed houses that had been so pretty from the passage had turned out to be rather ordinary places at close range; the European quarter was like any other European quarter; and the Chinese section, back from the Praya, was the usual maze of narrow, twisting alleys with the usual dirt and smells and hurrying yellow men who screamed and jostled and got in the way, and who obviously had no idea of sanitation or cleanliness.

Of course he might have known what to expect. When you had seen one place out here you had seen them all—heat, dirt, flies, smells, and Chinese or Malays or Filipinos or Japanese or whatever the local population happened to be.

The only surprising thing about it was how Ellie kept up her enthusiasm. Women, he decided, had a remarkable faculty for seeing, hearing and smelling only what they wanted to. Now here was Ellie, a miracle of daintiness who could hardly bear to have his old hunting clothes in the house at home, and she could stand rapt, in the midst of the filfth and nastiness of a Chinese street, breathing in the germs of heaven knew what loathsome diseases, and murmuring phrases like "the immemorial mystery of Asia" and "the cradle of civilization" and never turn a hair.

Just now she was standing in front of a trinket vender's stall, back a little way from the Praya, fingering a string of jade beads alternating with clusters of tiny seed pearls.

"Look, dear. Aren't they sweet?"

She held them against her throat as she spoke and smiled prettily.

John Basset was hot and tired and he had the beginnings of a headache, besides which the new shoes he had bought in Hongkong hurt him. He took the string and ran it over his hand in a careless scrutiny and tossed it back into the tray.

"Very pretty. But they're fake, of course." . . . He turned to the old, spectacled Chinese who squatted behind the lower counter.

"How much?"

The old man was contemplating the dragon banner on a balcony opposite and seemed not to have heard. But Ellie flushed uncomfortably.

"But, dearie, he says they're real."

The little rising inflection was a protest against this bald assault on the vender's feelings. Ellie was a gentle soul.

And ordinarily it was just this trustful gentleness that John Basset adored in her. But this afternoon with his shoes hurting him and half the yellow, screaming population in Macao bumping him and jostling and yelling in his ears, he gave way a little to his impatience. And besides all the rest of the party had gone back to the ship.

He said,"Oh, of course he does, dear. you mustn't believe everything anybody tells you. Why any one could see they're fakes."

He turned back to the old Chinese. . . . "Fakes, of course," he repeated. "How much?"

The old man's eyes continued fixed on the balcony. "Real jade," he insisted gently. "Hund'ed twenty-fi' dolla'."

"Not a chance," John Basset told him shortly, and to his wife, "come on, Ellie, let's get back to the ship. We'll get a real string in Hongkong at one of the English stores. You don't want people to laugh at you for getting stung with an imitation. Come on."

But Ellie lingered. She picked up the string again, hesitantly, and smiled a little, eager smile—propitiating.

"But they are lovely, darling, even if they are imitation. I don't mind. I know I'm foolish, but I do want them to go with my green velvet. I'll buy them out of my own money, dear."

John Basset shrugged. He turned to the jade merchant impatiently.

"Look here, I'll give you twenty-five and that's every cent I will give. Take it or leave it."

The old, wrinkled face was serene. "Real jade," he murmured. "Hund'ed twenty-fi' dolla'." He didn't even trouble to lower his gaze. John Basset found his total lack of emotion somehow insulting, as though the man didn't care enough about his opinion to resent it.

Perhaps if the dealer had admitted that the beads were imitation he might have ended by making the sale even at that price. Ellie wanted them, and a hundred and twenty-five dollars wasn't a great deal to John Basset. He didn't object to paying an outrageously high price occasionally to indulge a whim. But he did object to being thought an easy mark. And he had said the beads were imitation.

He muttered something that sounded like, "Go to hell, then," and seizing his wife by the arm he propelled her rapidly toward the Praya.

By the time they were clear of the Chinese quarter and could walk without having to thrust bodily through a wall of yellow, clamoring humanity he had cooled a little and was beginning to feel ashamed.

"I didn't mean to be unpleasant, honey," he justified himself as they strolled by the administration buildings. "But honestly that fellow got my goat. He was so sure of getting a sucker that he wouldn't look at my twenty-five—and I'll bet that's twice what they're worth."

Ellie smiled forgivingly. "It's all right, dear. But—you don't suppose they could have been real, and that's why he wouldn't take it?"

John Basset snorted. "My dear girl! Real jade in a filthy little hole-in-the-wall half the size of a Greek fruit stand? You'd be a pretty easy mark, wouldn't you, honey? You have to watch your step with 'em," he went on with the positiveness of a knowledge gained by three months in the East. "They aren't like folks at home. They're out for all they can get, and they'll have your eye-teeth if you give 'em a chance."

She gave his arm a little squeeze. "I'm afraid I'm foolish," she admitted. "But somehow it seems awful to come right out and call a man a cheat—right to his face. That old Chinaman—"

He laughed indulgently. That was one of the things about Ellie, her gentleness.

"Why, sweetheart," he told her reassuringly, "you needn't worry about that old bird's feelings. Somebody probably calls him a crook a dozen times a day. The thing that hurt his feelings was not getting your hundred and twenty-five dollars.

"That's just business with them," he went on, enlarging on his theme. "Cheat a man if you can, and then lose all respect for him. They—well, they're clever enough in a way I suppose. Imitators. They pick up the surface things, but no amount of teaching will ever convince a Chinaman that it isn't better to cheat a man and make an enemy of him than to satisfy him and make a good customer. And that's why they don't get anywhere—rotten with graft. They're like hand-organ monkeys. You can teach 'em to pick up the pennies, but you can't make 'em understand what it's all about.'

"But, John, dear, Prof. Parker says—"

He snorted again. Prof Parker was a ship acquaintance, who fed Ellie's enthusiasm for the Chinese. He was an authority on the Middle Kingdom—whatever that was. John Basset regarded him with the mixture of approbation and condescension with which an average American business man usually regards a savant—or a trick horse.

"I've heard him," he told her. "Marvelous civilization! Invented gun powder, or something didn't they— and then used it for making fire crackers . . . Good Lord, if they've got any civilization why don't they do something with it—clean up their towns, for instance?

"Look at this!" He swept his hand in a vague gesture that took in the magnificent curve of the Praya. "These buildings and all stuck up here in front for show. Go back there a block and you find a solid two miles of tumbledown rookeries— streets that you couldn't get a rickshaw through, let alone a car.

"Oh, I know," he forestalled her objection hastily, "the Portuguese are just as bad. But this Chinese civilization—why don't they use it to develop their own resources instead of expecting us to do it for 'em? Look at the American firms, the British—"

"But, dearie, isn't that just the trouble? If we didn't exploit them so—"

"My dear girl, doesn't that prove it? If they were capable of handling their own affairs they wouldn't let us exploit them."

"I suppose there is something in that," Ellie mused. "But I wonder—perhaps if we knew them better—"

John Basset's shoes began to hurt in a new place. He said, "Well, believe me, I know 'em as well as I want to. Talk about civilization. Monkeys is what they are, just monkeys. And not even funny ones after the first few days. I'm sick of the lot of 'em if you ask me"—

He stopped suddenly with an inward groan, and thought, "Oh, Lord, now I've done it!" for the face Ellie turned to him was startled and her eyes were troubled.

This was Ellie's trip, the honeymoon, seven years delayed, that they had planned ever since they were married and so far she was enjoying it with an almost childish enthusiasm. And John Basset would enjoy it too, to the last, or pretend to, rather than spoil her fun by letting her know that he wasn't having a good time. And so, for three solid months now, he had kept a smile on his face and a watch on his tongue—to the end, apparently, that a new pair of shoes and a little momentary irritation should upset the whole careful scheme.

Ellie's honeymoon . . .

"You utter fool," he almost groaned aloud, and turned the conversation hastily in the vain hope that perhaps she would forget it.

She followed his leads sweetly and pleasantly enough, and for a moment he thought he had fooled her, but when he looked again there was still that little troubled look far back in her eyes, and he knew that she had found him out.

By the time they had dressed and the bugle blew for dinner, he knew it in a the sentence unfinished, stumped by the difficulty of finding a tactful synonym for "murdered."

She stared across the roofs at the gleaming Praya and shrugged one shoulder. "Oh, that? 'E was my 'osban'," she said calmly. "I did nevaire like 'em moch—that one. An' when you came so quick out from the dark, I was frightened. I am like that when I am frightened," she added simply. "An' now I am sorree—a little."

It was her voice, not the amazing words, that caught John Basset's attention. It was low and a little husky, but with a peculiar vibrant quality—like herself, very much alive somehow. Vivid, was the word that came to him. It was not a word he was accustomed to use; he was even a little vague as to its meaning. But it seemed to express her, he thought. Vivid!

She was half lying against the wall, with her feet curled under her. Her face was in the shadow, but he caught the gleam of her bare arm and the white curve of her throat in the hot starlight. Somehow that swift instant under the street lamp was hard to realize.

It surprised him that he could feel this way about it. He wasn't condoning what she had done or defending her—it just didn't any of it seem important, somehow. It all seemed so long ago!

She was saying, pensively, "I was bad girl, I guess—made 'im verree angree—"

She broke off and got to her feet and smoothed her skirt with a gesture of decision . . . . "Well, any'ow we mos' not rimain 'ere. Come."

He was amazed to find how tired he was. The reaction from the strain he had undergone, he supposed. He hated to plunge into it again.

Then he thought, "Good Lord, I wonder what time it is?" and he pulled out his watch hastily, and clumsily because of the bandaged thumb.

Half past ten. That didn't seem possible. He shook it and held it to his ear and looked again. Half past ten, dim in the starlight.

He had hardly been gone from the ship an hour. He would have guessed at least three. He breathed easier after that. There was still plenty of time to get back, if nothing went wrong.

"Now where?" he asked with a certain jauntiness.

She considered. Then, with decision. "Come, I know a way, I think. But you mus' be verree quiet now, an' keep in the dark. People sleepin' all about, an' if some man see you 'e will think you 'ave come after 'is woman—an' 'e kill you firs' an' ask after."

He thought. "I suppose that's the Latin of it, or the Oriental." In Macao they didn't take you for a burglar, but a lover and they killed without waiting to find out. And then the full force of what he had let himself in for struck him.

Suppose something went wrong, and he were caught up here on the roof and killed. Would anyone ever understand that the whole thing had been an insane, fantastic accident . . . Americans—they didn't kill lightly, on suspicion. They waited for proof—and what better proof was there than the killing. Would anyone believe that he would have been killed if he hadn't been guilty? . . . He thought he was beginning to understand how innocent men accused of crime sometimes go mad.

"S-st!"

She had stopped with her hand on his arm. He could feel her shoulder rise and fall to her quickened breathing.

The man was standing thirty or forty feet away beside some sort of a screened enclosure. He had not seen them yet, evidently, for he yawned and stretched as though he had been asleep and had just waked up. And then he came toward them, aimlessly, with uncertain steps that seemed to be still drugged with sleep.

John Basset felt a tremor in the hand on his arm, and he held his breath. Once the man stopped and seemed of two minds whether to go back, but he yawned again and came on. A big bull of a man in a striped sleeping suit. He was only five steps away now, four, three.

John Basset straightened suddenly and hit him with all his strength. The man swayed once and dropped loosely on his back with a jarring thud.

A low, excited laugh came from behind him, a murmur, "Ah! you are strong!" He had time to wonder grimly if she would ever guess what pure terror had backed that smash.

A sleepy voice called out from the screen inclosure, and then again—frightened and urgent this time. He crouched back into the shadow.

"Quick now! They will come out to see."

Then they were off, running along the wall, doubling around chimneys, racing across the open. A swift rush through the hot dark with the roofs rising behind them. He scrambled to the top of a six-foot wall like a cat and swung her up after him. They dropped on the other side. A bench loaded with flower pots went over with a rousing crash. Startled yells went up from a dozen places at once.

"This way, come this way."

He saw her flit across to the cover of a chimney. He followed. A white form sprang at him. He stooped and met it with the body-check of football days, heard a grunt, and saw a flying sprawl of arms and legs. Then he heard her call and saw her vanish and plunged after her down a steep flight of stairs that seemed never ending, and brought up sweating in a steamy blackness.

He could hear her feeling about in the dark. "It should be 'ere—it should be 'ere!" pantingly. Then a breathless muttering in Portuguese and then, triumphantly, "Listen!"

Somewhere near at hand there was a muffled gabble of talk and the click and clatter of knives and forks and dishes.

He heard her fumbling again. "It should be 'ere—the door. Ah!" There was a click and a vertical streak of light. The sounds from the next room were suddenly clear. Then, with a breathless, "Come—sit down quicklee!" she opened the door and slipped through, dragging him after her by the sleeve.

He blinked in the sudden glare. She shut the door behind them, and then, swiftly, but with no appearance of haste, she crossed to a vacant table and slipped into a chair.

He followed, still a little blinded and bewildered. They were in a room full of little tables, most of them occupied. One or two people looked up curiously, but for the most part they paid no attention.

He straightened his tie automatically and passed a hand over his hair. She leaned across the table, resting her chin on her hand, smiling with bold, provocative eyes. She was whispering . . . "Do not turn. They are looking for us at the door there. Talk—laugh—"

John Basset stiffened. Out of the corner of his eye he could just see the door they had come in by. It had opened again and a yellow-white face peered around the jamb, searching the room swiftly.

"Do not turn!" She slapped the tabletop with her bare forearm and hand. She threw back her head with a quick toss and laughed.

Even through the tension of the moment he caught it and recognized it for a consummate piece of acting. The laugh, the whole gesture, established them as certainly as a printed label—the casual tourist from one of the ships, seeing a bit of life and manifestly out of place in his surroundings, and the Portuguese girl he had picked up, and who was earning her money by being vivacious and amusing.

Out of the corner of his eye he saw the door close softly.

"Ah, Maria." It was a soft, relaxing sigh, hardly a sound at all. John Basset breathed again and glanced over the room.

It was an ugly little place. The low, white ceiling, and the walls were streaked and grimy. The two windows on one side were closed and shuttered and the unshaded electric lights burned blue through a hot haze of cigarette smoke and much-breathed air and kitchen smells. The room was filled with a steady, high-pitched gabble and the clatter of dishes, and in one corner there was a click and rattle of dice, table poundings, and the occasional clink of coins.

The people at the tables seemed to be chiefly Portuguese, with here and there the sallow yellow of the Eurasian (mostly women, these) and in one corner a group of American sailors, noisily drunk. He could have hugged them. He remembered seeing a warship in the passage this morning, coming in.

That made him think of the ship and he looked at his watch uneasily.

She shook her head. "Mos' wait," she told him quickly. "Drink something. We can not go without."

There was reason in that. He nodded. "I could use a drink myself—whew!" It was amazing. Only ten minutes gone since he had looked at his watch in the starlight, back by the cupola, and already those happenings were beginning to be dim and unreal.

It was the first chance John Basset had had to see her in the light. She looked young, amazingly young; a slim little thing with dark, sultry eyes and a vivid, scarlet mouth. Her hair was blue-black against the screamy pallor of her skin and a loop of it had tumbled loosely across her forehead.

Even in repose there was about her a sense of life, unquenchable, vibrant. He tried telling himself deliberately, "Less than an hour ago I saw that girl murder her husband," and the words seemed utterly meaningless. She looked like an impudent child who had been experimenting with her mother's lip-stick. She had no more to do with the ethics of murder than an English sparrow.

But the thing was there in all its ugliness. He leaned forward on an impulse. "Look here—we'll have to find some way to get you out of this mess."

"Oh, that!" She dismissed it with a flick of her thumb. "That is aw-right. I 'ave plentee frands to 'ide me. One month, two month, all is forgot. 'E was bad man. 'E is daid. 'Oo cares?"

"Yes, but the police won't look at it that way."

The child said, quite calmly, "I am bad girl. I am frand wit' all thee police."

She grinned impudently and put her hand over his where it lay on the table. Instinctly he looked around, embarrassed, to see if any one had noticed. His uneasiness seemed to amuse her.

She said mockingly. "My frand, 'ere in Macao we can laugh aneething off. An' besides nobodee saw me but you."

She gave his hand a little familiar squeeze, and her look said that there was a delightful secret that they shared between them.

It was a very uncomfortable thing to be reminded of. He took his hand away hastily. "But see here. I'd feel better if you could get out of the country for a little anyway. If you need money—"

"But why? Her eyes were wide with innocence.

"Good Lord, if you can't see—suppose something did happen. I'd be held as a witness—"

"Ah! An' your wife would 'ave a fit. She would—no, she would not kill you—she is American. But she would 'ave revenge. She would divorce you alive. An' all your frands would laugh at you. 'Orrible! But it will not 'appen."

John Basset went a dull red. The terrible child smiled calmly and said, "Ah! Now you are angree—like—Portuguese man. 'Ave you a cigarette?"

For the moment he had no retort ready. He extended his case stiffly, and she pounced on it with a little cry of delight. "Oh, thee American cigarette! I do like them. But America I did not like," she added reflectively as she lit one. "But si—in your New York I did spend two years."

"You did? And you didn't like it?" For the moment John Basset was jarred out of his irritation.

"Like it! My God, it is a prizzon—a gray, 'orrible prizzon. 'Thee land of thee free', you say. 'Thee 'ome of thee brave!' Ah! An' in those streets, the streets the people own, if you fight, gamble wit' dize, drink—if you dance or make love or sing bicos you are 'appy—what 'appen? Policeman will put you in thee jail. No! When you do such things you mos' lock thee door, pull thee shutters—'ide, you brave Americans, bicos soch things are of living, and of everything that is of living you are afraid."

John Basset was recovering his poise again. He smiled tolerantly. "But New York—" he was beginning, when she expelled a scornful puff of smoke and cut him short.

"Ah! You will speak now of bigness, of those 'igh buildings, will you not? Are they 'igher than our mountain? Than 'Ongkonk? Your 'orrible subway, is it more beautiful, more comfortable than a rickshaw on the Praya? Ah—an' you Americans! You mos' not wear straw 'at in October, bicos sombodee might laugh at you. You mos' not wear ol' coat bicos sombodee might think you are poor. You mos' not be 'appy on thee street—laugh—be gay—bicos sombodee will think you are fool or dronk. You 'ave 'igh building—yess, but you mos' not look up at it bicos sombodee will think you 'ave not seen it bifor. You are afraid, afraid, alwiz afraid what sombodee will think—afraid of your neighbor—afraid of policeman—afraid of your wife."

She paused thoughtfully, while John Basset stared at her, indignant and incredulous. He gulped. "You didn't think so in 1918, you foreigners—you didn't think we were afraid then."

She smiled. "No. When you went to thee war you did fight like 'ell. But I guess," she added, "that is bicos you are afraid if you do not die you will 'ave to go back to America. Come along, brave man, I show you the way to go back to your ship."

He opened the door of their stateroom, the cool, comfortable stateroom, on C deck, with its two beautifully neat white beds, mathematically placed, with the reading lamp between, its long mirrors, its nickel water carafe, its electric fan.

Ellie was sitting in the long chair, reading. He recognized the book as she put it down with a smile. It was "Chats on early Chinese Porcelains."

Then, as he stood in the doorway, the look on her face changed slowly. Her mouth opened a little. Her eyes grew round.

"Oh!" she said, and "Oh! John, dearest! What on earth—"

He caught a glimpse of himself in one of the long mirrors. His tie was awry. His face was streaked with sweat and grime, and one lock of hair was plastered across his forehead. And the bloodstained bandage about his thumb.

"Why, darling—oh, Ellie, darling—"

Then he was on his knees beside her chair and her cool, sane arms were around his neck, drawing his head down close, and there was a little mixture of tears and laughter in her voice.

"Oh, John—John! You funny, silly, little boy—and I didn't understand. I thought you weren't having a good time, when all the time all you wanted was to go out and have your own kind of fun. And get drunk—and have a fight, you silly darling—like the time you and Rummy Stevens went to the Yale-Harvard game. Oh, and the jade beads! Oh, John—John!" There was a moment while she rocked with clear, tender laughter. "Oh, and you brought me home the beads I wanted so I wouldn't scold. You funny, funny little boy—"

So the trip was saved. And in the starry silence that followed John Basset was so happy that he never once thought of the last thing the Portuguese girl had said before he stepped out of the hot blackness into the lighted Praya.

"—afraid alwiz you will not do the thing all the others do—Monkeys, you Americans—jus' monkeys."

thousand little ways that he would not have explained to save his life, although she had not said a word. She wouldn't, of course. She would never let him see that his attempt to make her trip a happy one had broken down. Ellie was like that.

But it was there, and it caused an indefinable constraint between them that made him unhappy and uncomfortable so that he was vaguely moody and abstracted all through dinner. He knew that she saw that, too, and afterward, when some of the men made up a party to go ashore for a discreet peep at vice in the shape of the gambling rooms he refused to go on the plea of a headache.

When she urged him to go he made things worse by saying that he really didn't care anything about it, but that he would take her if she wanted him to.

"You're so sweet, dear," she told him quickly in answer to that. "But I'm a little tired and I'm going to play some bridge with the Cummingses and Prof. Barker . . . Really, dear, I'd rather do than than go ashore."

She kissed him and he went back to the state-room to lie down and to see her refusing to let him take her on any number of little trips from now on because she was afraid he would be bored.

Alone, with his shoes off, flat on his back, he became the lowest thing that walked He had spoiled her afternoon; he had taken the fun out of her trip (he thought of the yellowed pile of steamship folders that had grown, year after year, in the corner of her desk;) he had kicked the props out from under her little, innocent thrill over the Chinese—and he hadn't even let her get the beads that she wanted. A little string of jade beads that Ellie wanted and that would have cost about what he would have lost if he had gone to the Casino tonight.

That brought him to a sudden decision. There was one thing he could do. Having ruined her trip he might in decency salvage that much for her—and he would. He would surprise her with them when she came in. And she would be so appreciative. Ellie always made any little thing of that sort so much fun to do.

It was humiliating, of course, to go back and pay that Chinaman's price after all that had been said this afternoon, but, well he deserved to eat crow, anyway.

It took a minute to slip into a suit of tweeds. He stopped at the purser's office to get some money, but he purposely didn't tell any one that he was going ashore because Ellie might miss him and make inquiries and he wanted it to be a surprise. He would come right back, anyway, and they didn't sail until midnight.

The streets of the Chinese quarter do not lend themselves to rickshaw travel. He drove up the Praya until he was opposite the street of the shop and left his rickshaw there and went on on foot.

If the old Chinese recognised him this time he said nothing. He laid out half a dozen strings and fixed his eyes on the dragon banner on the balcony while John Basset made his selection.

"How much this one?" . . . He was relieved that the old man had evidently forgotten him.

"That one real jade . . . Hund'ed twenty-fi' dolla.'"

He paid out the notes and put the string in his pocket. And then, turning to go he hesitated.

It had occurred to him that if he went back by the Praya he would be likely to meet some of the party from the ship. That would be embarrassing in view of the fact that he had refused to go with them earlier in the evening. He would have to think up some excuse, and more than likely there would be some heavy-handed joking about his wandering around a town like Macao alone at night. Some idiot might even get the idea that he had taken the chance while his wife was playing bridge to slip away and go on the loose.

He decided that if he went back through the Chinese quarter there wouldn't be much chance of meeting anyone. He knew the general direction and he could keep parallel to the Praya.

Thrusting through the crowd that milled and jostled in the flicker of the smoky oil flares, he thought of a phrase he had heard Ellie use, "the mysterious currents of the East," and he snorted. Mysterious, huh? Dirt and noise and crowding and shiftlessness, and a smell like rotten fish! If you could find anything mysterious in that—

He shouldered aside to avoid a beggar with sore, streaming eyes, and his distaste for the Orient became acute . . . Rambling firetraps of houses, propped with flimsy, bamboo poles. Apparently when a thing was ready to fall out here they jacked it up with something else and trusted to luck . . . Rank, garlicky smells . . . Dim, paper lanterns, and the flicker of torchlight on yellow faces. Yellow men everywhere, underfoot, trampling, jostling, screaming in his ears.

The Lord only knew what diseases might be loose in this crowd. He began to wish he had stuck to the Praya and risked meeting people.

There was a cross street with a feeble light a couple of hundred yards down. It seemed to be deserted, and he wondered if it wouldn't lead to some other street that would take him back to the Praya by a way less crowded.

He hesitated with the yellow sea swirling around him and decided to try it. The first turn to the left should bring him out somewhere near the landing stage, he thought.

It was a dark little alley, and the dirt underfoot, trodden hard by thousands of bare feet, felt greasy even through his shoe soles. By spreading his arms he could have touched the walls on either hand. Twice he stood aside while some one padded by him on felt shoes, and once when a door opened he saw a littered room and heard a gabble of speech that was neither English nor Chinese . . . He supposed it was Portuguese and that he was in some poorer Portuguese quarter.

He had a feeling of sweating, teeming life, packed behind the dark walls on either side. The air was sticky with it, suffocating, like sleeping with your head under the bedclothes. It seemed to him that those houses gave off a faint, steady whisper, like the rustle of an anthill. He wished that he had stuck to the Praya. He was not afraid, exactly, but he was glad of the light ahead.

As he came nearer he saw that there were two people, a man and a woman, standing just inside the circle of light He thought they were quarrelling, for the man's voice sounded angry and he was gripping her by the wrist. He was thickset and looked rather powerful, and his face, in the light, was fat and oily, with a heavy mustache. John Basset could not see the woman very well, but she gave an impression of youth and a certain lithe slimness.

He was about a dozen steps away when she threw back her head and laughed insolently, whereupon the man slapped her heavily across the mouth—twice so that she half fell against the wall.

It was probably the first time that John Basset had ever seen a man hit a woman, and the effect on him was instant and curious.

He drew a quick, shuddering breath, like a man suddenly plunged into a cold bath. He could actually feel the blows on his own face. Without stopping to think he drove in and his attack was so swift and so savage that the man had only time to throw up an arm to his head before he hit him.

It was a matter of ten years since John Basset had played end for Yale, but golf and the gymnasium had kept him in reasonably good shape, and in addition to the cold rage that that backed his arm there was several hours' concentrated irritation with Macao and everything connected with it. He hit hard, and with the smack of his fist the sane, ordered world that he knew crumbled into swift ruin.

The man's head snapped back and he took a couple of stumbling, backward steps, dragging the girl by the wrist. She fell against him, and as she did it seemed to John Basset that she struck him in the chest with a curious gesture.

The man let go of her wrist and straightened, slowly, with his hands above his head and the fingers curved like talons. Then he let out a long breath, "e-e-e-e!" horribly like the squeal of a pig, and toppled over stiffly under the light.

John Basset saw her stoop and wipe a knife on his coat and return it to the bosom of her dress. Then he understood.

Everything seemd to move very slowly. He said, "Now you've done it," in a strange, flat voice. He wet his lips, his body felt perfectly numb . . . The man's hands were fat, with black hairy backs. They twitched once or twice and were still.

Everything was still. The girl looked down at the body and touched it experimentally with her foot.

He said, "Don't do that!" sharply. He had the same feeling about touching it that he would have had about touching a snake.

A window banged open somewhere in the darkness and a voice called out excitedly. The girl started. She caught hold of his sleeve and drew him swiftly out of the circle of light.

They stood there a moment, listening. Another window opened. A woman screamed out some question. There was a pounding of running feet in the direction from which he had come.

She tugged at his sleeve. "Be still," she whispered. "Come wit' me." She was pulling him down the alley. He was still too dazed to do anything but obey.

And then, with amazing suddenness the little, dark place was filled with life. People shouted from the windows, lights flared. A yellow shaft cut the blackness just in front of them, and as they pressed back against the wall a man ran out of the open door. He was in trousers and undershirt, with flopping slippers and his suspenders down. He charged past without seeing them.

John Basset looked back. There was a little, black knot of people under the light, now, shrill, excited, all talking at once. He saw the gold lace and cocked hat of a Portuguese policeman.

It was the girl who checked his first, blind impulse to run and brought him to a standstill with her clutch on his arm.

"Be still! . . . Listen!" she cautioned.

It was a moment before he understood. Then he heard it—hurrying feet in the darkness ahead—coming toward them.

"Come quicklee!"

Almost before he knew how it happened she had drawn him into the doorway, the one from which he had seen the man in the undershirt come.

A single oil lamp in a wall bracket at the foot of a flight of stairs showed a narrow hallway with doors opening from each side. He saw this much before she pulled him back in and blew the lamp out.

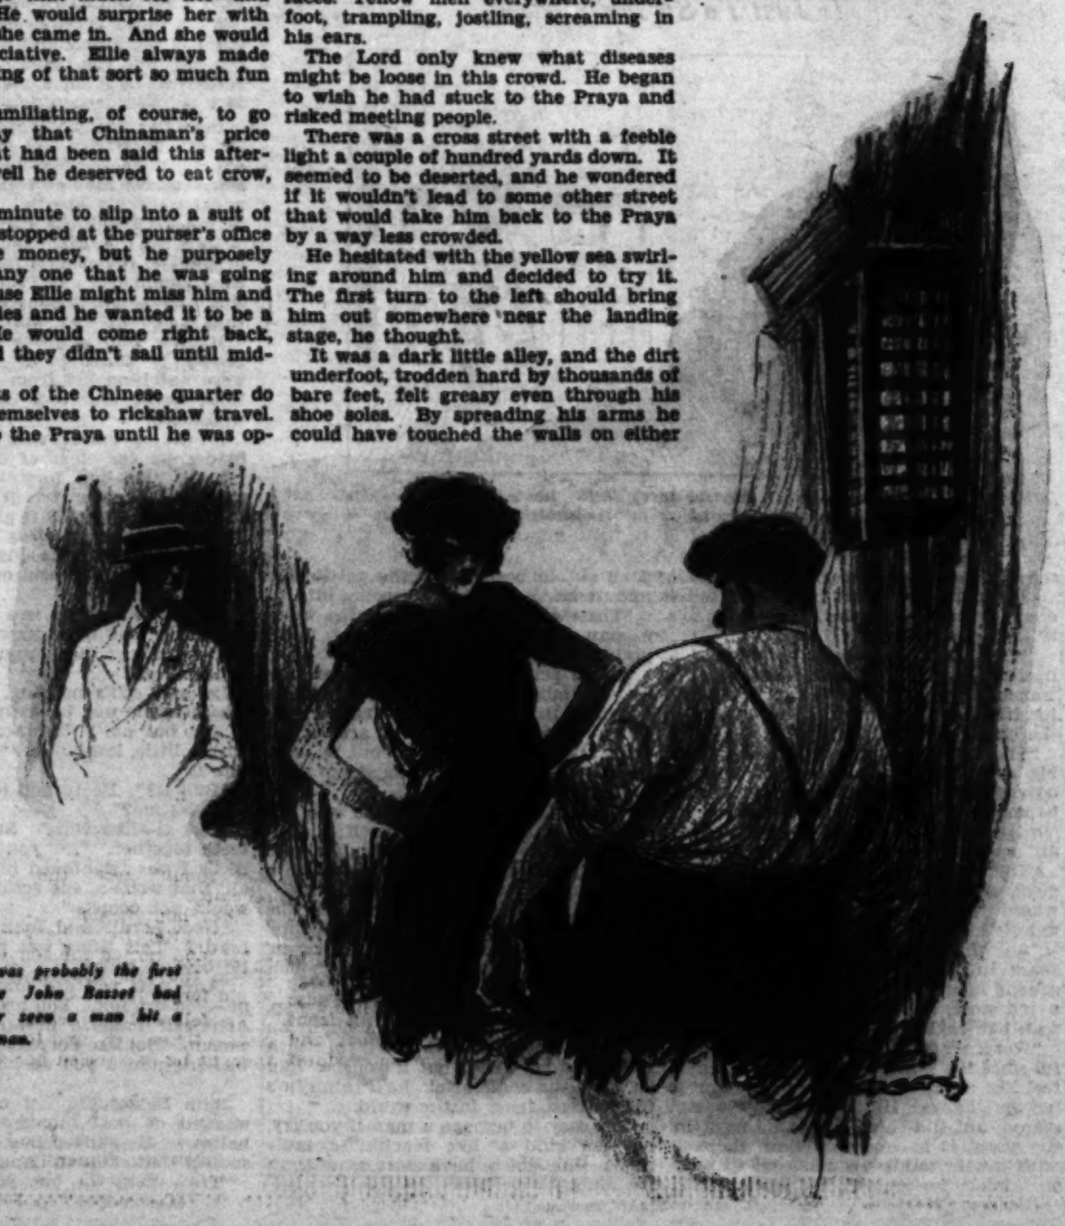
Standing there in the dark he had a great many confused thoughts out of which two stood clearly; that he had just seen a murder and that he must get clear just as quickly and quietly as he could.

But not yet. He couldn't go out until things quieted down outside.

The hall was furry with the thick smell of unwashed bodies. He caught his breath, chokingly, and the girl cautioned, "Quiet! Be still!" She was holding onto his hand now with little, nervous squeezings of her fingers. He could feel the rise and fall of her breast, close to his shoulder.

Then it came to him that very probably he was an accessory before the fact, and for a moment he had a sensation as of fine, cold sand trickling between his shoulder blades. But that wasn't possible—it simply wasn't possible. He was John Basset, President of the Basset Paper Box Company. He was an American. He couldn't be mixed up in a thing like this. He must get out of here, of course.

He thought, "But the police—" and then he thought that if he simply told the policeman the facts the man would thank him and salute, and he would go



It was probably the first time John Basset had ever seen a man hit a woman.

Ray Lyman (Rex) Wilbur, the California man in the Hoover Cabinet, was a classmate of Hoover's at Stanford. Will Irwin, the noted writer, was also in Stanford at the time and recalls the Wilbur of those days in amusing anecdotes.

Says Mr. Irwin: "Rex Wilbur was one of those slight, skinny chaps who looked just the way Lincoln did at that same age. I was a big husky on the football squad and rather over-fancied my own strength. One night, in a dormitory mix-up, I thoughtlessly tackled Wilbur. He threw me on my back with consummate ease.

"For a whole semester I tried to retrieve that disgrace. It came to be that whenever we met in suitable circumstances we flew at each other.

"I can still hear Wilbur's battle cry: 'You low-down dog of a freshman.'

"It seems to me that until a leg broken in football rendered me unfair game, Wilbur and I had it out every day and I cannot remember that I ever threw him once."

Politics

Partisans may argue the claim that Andrew W. Mellon is the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton, but when it comes to tact, dignity and gallantry to the gentler sex, few will deny that the venerable head of the Treasury is a modern Chesterfield.

Not long ago, a well-known Washington hostess assigned Mr. Mellon the duty of escorting to dinner the charming wife of Senator Couzens of Michigan. Some of the other guests, more conversant with the personal and political relations existing between Mr. Mellon and Senator Couzens, gasped at the sight of the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Couzens walking into the dining-room arm in arm.

It is said that Secretary Mellon was as gallant as a knight of old and Mrs. Couzens as gracious as if her husband and the Secretary were both directors in the aluminum trust.

The appalling divorce record set up by the country in 1928 caused John Latham, the statistician, to remark:

"The time has arrived when young people are not concerned so much with what they will do when married as what they will do after marriage. Indeed, it is getting customary to make arrangements for the divorce settlement at the same time the marriage dowry is fixed.

"'Yes dear, I do love you,' said the sweet young thing, 'but marriage is a serious thing, for a girl. Suppose we couldn't get along?'

"'You have nothing to worry about darling,' protested the ardent young man, 'I'll promise to pay you alimony more promptly than any other man in the world.'"

"Glad to've seen you, Al, and tell 'em back home you saw me, and I was very much in the public eye."

Bob Allison, Hollywood's business specialist, was on the trail of a good secretary and was questioning an applicant who declared that she had been employed by a friend of his. Bob called up the friend and said:

"A Miss Jones is here in my office applying for a position. Did she ever work for you?"

"No," said the friend.

"Why, she named you as her last employer," exclaimed Bob in surprise.

"I was," admitted the friend. "She was on my pay roll but she never worked for me."

Croaker

Mrs. Daniel Chester French, wife of the sculptor, quotes this comment by a Concord farmer on the great naturalist of that classic Massachusetts town:

"Henry D. Thoreau? His name ain't no more Henry D. Thoreau than mine is. And everybody knows it and he knows it. His name's Da-a-vid Henry.

"Why, one morning I went out into my field, there by the river and there, beside the little old mud pond was standin' Da-a-vid Henry and he wa'n't doin' nuthin but just standin' there lookin' into the pond.

"And when I came back, he was still standin' there an' still gazin' into the pond and I says to him: 'Da-a-vid Henry, Henry, what air you a-doin'?

"He never turned his head but kept lookin' down into the pond, but he answers, as if he was thinkin' about the stars in heaven.

"'Mr. Murray, I'm studyin' the habits of frogs.'

"And there that darn fool had been standin' the whole livelong day, a-studyin' the habits of bullfrogs."

Action

It is said that the courts of Minnesota are not as cluttered with cases as are those of California. They have a better system.

A prisoner was brought before a new Swedish Justice of the Peace.

"Guilty or not guilty?" demanded His Honor.

"Not guilty!" asserted the prisoner defiantly.

"Den w'at you do here? V'at you vant? Yo' bane get out an' go about your business by jimminy!"

Revenge

"Motion pictures," declared Will Hays, "have finally achieved the social level where all workers in the industry may be proud of their profession. The task now is to keep up this standard and raise it even higher if possible.

"But there was a time when this could not be said; a time when to be a member of the motion-picture industry was looked upon askance by the rest of the world, even the so-called legitimate stage.

"A young lady once tripped daintily into a casting director's office and treating him to a rare smile, asked for a job.

"'Ever have any picture experience?' he asked.

"'Oh no!' exclaimed the fair visitor, with a horrified expression on her pretty face. 'I've never been in a studio in my life, but I've just had an awful row with my narrow-minded father and so I decided it would be a good idea to go into pictures so that he will be thoroughly embarrassed whenever my name is mentioned.'"

Suspicious

Sam Clement, the Glendale realtor, met a friend the other day, literally staggering under a load of small bundles. "Birthday presents for the wife," he explained and added:

"Her birthday's tomorrow and I'm going to surprise her with all these things and a great big kiss."

"How long have you been married?" asked Clem.

"About fifteen years."

"My goodness! Then you're either taking an awful chance or are trying to cover up something."

Too Bad

The auditor of one of the big picture companies had come out from New York to give the studio pay roll its annual pruning. He went down the list, department by department, noting with a smile the names of his many friends. Finally he hit one department which boasted two unfamiliar names.

"What are these two names doing on your pay roll?" he asked the head of the department, poising his blue pencil in air.

"'Them two?' repeated the head of the department. 'Oh, them are the guys what do the work.'"

Real Folks

On his first trip to Europe, James J. Jeffries, former heavyweight champion of the world, found that the majority of people were inclined to look down upon a fighter—"all except the really important people."

"I met the Prince of Wales and Lord Beresford, then an admiral, and they were not like that at all. In fact, we became good friends and went around together.

"I was with Gene Corri, the famous London sporting leader, when I was introduced to Admiral Beresford. Gene and I were in evening clothes and you can easily imagine that a dress suit is a mighty uncomfortable thing for a man of my size and my big, overdeveloped muscles.

"I felt uncomfortable and I must have looked like a fish out of water for the Admiral, after we had shaken hands, began to chuckle and then said:

"'Jim, you look like a waiter in that outfit. In fact, it isn't any kind of a fit. You and I have no use for dress suits or clergymen's robes. Get into something comfortable so that we can enjoy ourselves.'"

Cautious

Senator Heflin said at a Birmingham banquet:

"One reason why I favor prohibition is that there are so many Americans who only drink to get drunk. The Latin races, with their light wines, drink temperately; they only get drunk on high days and holidays; but heaven forbid the return of the American saloon.

"A colored man went into a Birmingham saloon one day and asked for a drink of Old Squirrel whisky.

"'Sorry, Sam,' the bartender said, 'but we ain't got no Old Squirrel. We got the smoothest, richest Old Crow you ever got outside of, though. Will you have a shot?'

"'No, boss,' said the colored man, and as he turned to leave the saloon he exclaimed:

"'Ah doan wanter fly. Ah jes wants to hop around a little.'"

Stuck

In a moment of abstraction, Angus McArdle put a half dollar into the collection plate at the church. As soon as he got home, he discovered the disaster and for three weeks went about asking all his friends the best way of making up for it, but no solution was forthcoming until finally one old cronie suggested a possible plan.

"Ye miche stay awa' fra the kirk till the sum is made up," he suggested.

Angus pondered this a moment.

"Losh! That's no guid!" he replied disgustedly. "Do ye no ken I wad be payin' pew rent a' the time an' gettin' nae guid o' it?"

Urgent

Al Jolson, basking in the California sunshine between "talkies," has turned historian, though he has not taken the sunkist State for his subject. Instead, he has selected the bleak and plaid Scotland.

In his study of the colorful Highlander, Mr. Jolson makes this important contribution to history:

He declares that Scotchmen first learned to swim when they began building toll bridges.

Moran and Mack, the Two Black Crows, were discussing the hectic days of their careers.

Moran: I never will forget the first job I got after landing in Chicago. It was six weeks after I got there.

Mack: What was you, the head man?

Moran: I got a part playing an actor out of work.

Mack: And boy, HOW you could play it.

on his way to the ship. After all he had nothing to do with these, these monkeys.

The feeling was strong on him that this was all a sort of play in which he had, by some accident, managed to stray upon the stage . . . He had only to explain who he was and some one would show him back to his seat. They must see that he was an outsider, that he couldn't have anything to do with the show . . . That wouldn't be possible.

And all the while in another part of his mind another process of thought was going on, a series of frantic pictures.

He saw himself being hauled off to the police station—questioned—held as a witness. He saw the courtroom, the newspaper headlines. People, his friends, talking. "Got mixed up in a killing somewhere in the Orient . . . Portuguese girl hooked up in it some way . . . Hard on his wife—"

It was a very bad five minutes or so that he spent before he became aware of the pressure of his companion's hand, guiding him toward the street door, and drew a long breath of relief.

It seemed to him that if he could only once get out of this house and back to Ellie and her cool, gentle sanity nothing could ever touch him again. The hall seemed incredibly long when they had to move so cautiously.

They had gone perhaps half a dozen steps when he felt her shrink back against him with a little gasp of dismay, and at the same instant he heard the flip-flop of slippers and saw the loom of a figure in the vague rectangle of the street door. The man who had run past them a few minutes ago had come back.

John Basset caught his breath and flattened himself against the wall. The man came in, his slippers flip-flopping, and stood for a moment almost within reach of his arm. He was evidently surprised at finding the light out for he hesitated and grumbled something in Portuguese. Then he reached for the street door and slammed it.

There was a moment of fumbling after that, and then the grating of a key turned in a lock. John Basset felt the grip on his hand tighten with a sudden, frightened tensity and went weak in the legs.

They were locked in.

They heard him grunting and feeling around in the dark for a little and then one of the doors in the hall opened and closed again, and there were muffled stumblings and an oath from one of the adjoining rooms. Then there was the scratch of a match and a crack of light showed.

John Basset's fingers, already feeling swiftly in the dark, touched the metal plate of the street door lock and found the keyhole. The key was gone.

There was a moment when he came very near to crying out like an animal in a trap and battering at the door. He steadied himself and tried to think what to do.

He tried the knob, very cautiously, and put his knee against the casing and pulled. It stood fast. He dropped his hands and drew a long breath and let it out again. The thing was unbelievable, impossible. Things like this simply didn't happen. He was John Basset, President of the Basset Paper Box Company, with a home on Oak avenue and—these things didn't happen to people of his sort. They simply didn't happen.

He was conscious that his companion was pulling at his wrist, trying to drag him back toward the stairs. He gave way a step or two. Here, this wouldn't do! He mustn't get any deeper into this. The thing to do was to get out of here.

He stopped. "Listen, you wait here. I'll get the key from that fellow—"

She clutched suddenly at his arms. "No! No. I say——no! You do not 'onstan'." Then, " 'E will kill you!"

He caught his breath. Then he remembered that he was John Basset of the Basset Paper Box Company, with a home on Oak avenue, and holding fast to a world where things were ordered and secure, he smiled.

"Oh, nonsense!" There was a comfortable substantialness to the word, even whispered in the darkness. He stood solidly on his heels, balking her efforts to pull him toward the stairs. "Nonsense! I'll simply tell him we were locked in by mistake and ask him—"

"No, I say—oh, be quiet!" She thrust close up to him and stood on tip-toe so that her breath tickled his ear. There was a hint of a nervous giggle in her whisper. " 'E will kill you, I say. 'E will think you 'ave come after 'is wife!"

Nothing could have been more real than the sincerity of her alarm. And suddenly John Basset realised that the world he knew was far away. His shoulders sagged, he let her draw him down the hall toward the stairs.

"We mos' get out this way. Come now—verree quiet!"

She went up first and he followed, feeling cautiously for each step as he put his weight on it. He knew it was insane, absurd, but he bent his will to going up without making a sound.

The dark seemed to shut in closer and denser as they went up. He twitched his shoulders as if he could throw it off like a tangible thing. The ship and Ellie and all the safe, familiar things seemed to have been removed to another planet. Everything he knew was swept away and there remained only the dark and the stealthy creak of floor boards.

His foot, feeling for the next step, found none, and he knew they had come to the second floor. The rail turned, and he followed it along another little, dark hallway, just touching it with his fingertips. There was a greasy, scummy feel to it that set his teeth on edge.

He could hear the girl moving just ahead, and he hoped she knew where they were going. Once, in something like panic at the idea of being left alone in this sticky blackness he reached out and touched her, and she gave his arm a little reassuring pat.

They came to a second flight of stairs. This must be the last, he thought, for the houses of Macao as he remembered them from this afternoon were low, three stories at most. Low, square houses, jammed up together—crawling with packed, sweating life . . . Like maggots—

And just then he stumbled noisily, tried to catch himself, and went headlong with a crash that seemed to shake the whole building.

There was a startled gasp from the girl. He scrambled to his feet and felt her hand, groping, clutching at him.

"Oh Maria! Come now, come quick! Oh—!"

A door had banged open somewhere below and a voice called out a startled question. Another answered.

"This way. Oh, be quick!"

He stumbled up behind her, half thrown off his balance by her frightened straining at his hand, while the house quickened into life below.

Doors banged. Bare feet padded in the halls. A light flared on the street floor. Voices rose in an excited babble. They were feeling their way along the upper landing now, rapidly, cautiously. He heard her whisper, "Quick now—oh, hurree, hurree."

Then, quite suddenly and right at hand, a woman screamed.

It was as hideously unexpected as a striking snake. John Basset stopped dead. And the woman kept on screaming, shriek after shriek that cut through the dark in red, jagged streaks.

"Shut up! Shut up, you—damn' fool! Oh, shut up—shut up!" He was stumbling around in the dark, hands outstretched. If he could have reached her in that moment he would have strangled her in sheer terror.

A sudden pain shot through his thumb and through his wrist and up into his elbow. That cleared his brain with a snap, and he became aware that his companion was pulling at him—tugging at his arms and shoulders, straining frantically. He stumbled after, she half dragging him, panting with the effort, until, right above him, he saw a square of clear starlight.

It was a trap door to the roof she had brought him to and there was a ladder by his hand. She was pushing at him now—beating at him with her fists. "Go up! Go up!" And the woman behind them still screamed. And the pain in his thumb had numbed his arm to the elbow.

"Go up! Go up quick!"

He heard the rush of feet on the stairs. His panic had gone, and in its place there was a queer, cold thrill. He picked her up in the crook of his arm and half lifted, half flung her against the ladder.

"Go on up yourself," he commanded, and she went in a swirl of skirts, with a little, sobbing cry that was half surprise and half relief.

He followed with a rush. There was a crash and a spurt of flame in the hall behind him, and as he flung himself over the top he realized, quite calmly, but with some amazement, that some one had shot at him.

Below, the screams redoubled. He scrambled up and they darted around a chimney and raced across a flat roof and swung over a low coping. Behind them were shouts and startled, sleepy outcries as the tumult stirred up the neighboring roofs.

"This way—verree quiet!"

They were crouched behind a coping. She touched his arm and beckoned, and he followed her, creeping along its shadow, until they came to what seemed to be a small cupola. There she stopped, listening.

The noise of pursuit had ceased by now, and presently the sleepers began to settle down again. She sank down against the wall, and John Basset dropped beside her and wiped his forehead on his coat sleeve.

"Ah! They 'ave not seen us. 'Ere then we are safe I think, for a little time."

He drew a breath of relief and relaxed. From below came the yellow glow of the city, and above were the stars. Up here the noise of the streets was a faint, steady hum, and the air was warm and steamy, with a half imagined, spicy tang that reminded him vaguely of tea.

Away to the right swung the glittering curve of the Praya, and beyond, the harbor mirrored the lights of the shipping. He looked at it for a moment or so before startled recognition broke on him.

It was as near as that, and that cluster of lights with the blue one at the end must be the President Pierce! He stared across the hot, teeming roofs with a catch at his breath. Why he could almost pick out the card-room! Ellie, sitting at the card table, col in the draught of the electric fans, sitting with the Cummingses and Prof. Parker, chatting the small, inconsequential things that made up her world.

It gave him a queer feeling of unreality to think of it—as though he were watching her from another world. Ellie, sweet and cool and gentle and well-loved.

He sat up quickly and the movement made him conscious of the pain in his thumb. He had forgotten it for the moment, but now it began to ache and throb again. He felt it gingerly and his fingers came away sticky.

He wrapped it with his handkerchief, absently, his eyes fixed on the lights of the ship.

Beside him there was a little, sympathizing hiss of indrawn breath. He heard her say. "Oh—your 'and! . . . I 'ad forgot."

He said, "It's nothing. I must have hurt it some way back there."

"Ah, but no!" She hesitated. Then, with a little, low laugh. "It is me—I did bite it."

"Bite it?" He turned to stare at her. "You bit me?"

"But si—like this." She clicked her teeth together. "An' you did not know? Bicos I was frightened in the dark. Oh, an' that woman, she scrimmed—an' you would not come—"

"Good Lord!" said John Basset. "Good Lord!" This thing was getting fantastic beyond belief.

"And now you are angree? Ah, but no—you are not. You are American an' American man is nevaire angree wit' woman. Not like Portuguese man. An' I was frightened you do not know—"

John Basset did not care to be reminded of that moment in the dark hallway. He shifted hastily to the first subject that came to hand.

"That man, the one you—" He left

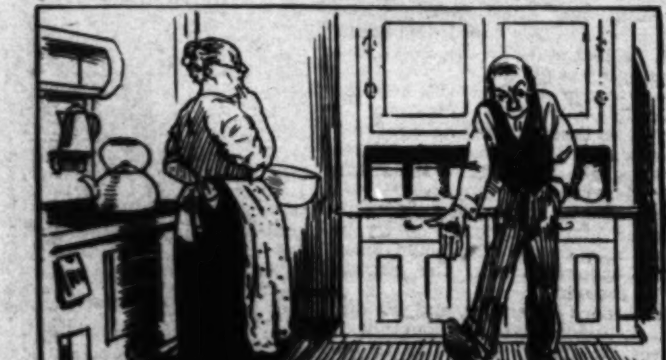
"The Easiest Way To Keep a Husband Happy Is Just To Sit An' Listen"



"Keepin' a husband happy after the honeymoon is just a matter o' furnishin' him a audience an' askin' his advice an' sympathizin' with him when he feels abused.

"MY NOTION is a lot o' divorces is caused by wives not havin' sense enough to manage their husbands so's to keep 'em satisfied.

"When the honeymoon is over an' a husband begins to come out of his trance, he's likely goin' to get lonesome for his men friends an' begin to notice the chains o' matrimony.

"That's when most wives make their big mistake. They've got used to bein' courted an' petted, an' when their husbands start goin' to work without kissin' 'em good-by, they begin to feel abused an' neglected.

"There ain't nothin' in the world more gloomy an' depressin' than a home where the wife feels sorry for herself—unless it's a cold fried egg.

"An' when a wife begins droppin' salty tears in the biscuit dough an' goin' around home with a reproachful look an' a red nose, the sight of her affects a man like takin' hold of a dead fish.

"Weepin' ain't never kept a man faithful since the world begun. It makes him feel like a old bachelor does a-holdin' a howlin' baby. He feels helpless an' scared, an' the thing he wants most in the world is to get away from there.

"If a wife wants her husband to keep on thinkin' he couldn't live without her, she's got to begin doin' the pettin' the minute he shows signs o' coolin' off.

"There's just two things in the world a man never gets tired of, an' that's praise and motherin'.

"If he acts uneasy after supper, like he was itchin' to go down town an' yet ashamed to give some lyin' excuse, the thing to do is to set on the arm of his chair an' tell him how wore out he must be an' get him to talkin' about his troubles.

"Nothin' keeps a husband so well entertained as talkin' about hisself; an' his wife can give him a wonderful evenin' just by pretendin' to listen an' once in a while sayin': 'You poor dear.'

"Keepin' a husband happy after the honeymoon is just a matter o' furnishin' him a audience an' askin' his advice an' sympathizin' with him when he feels abused.

"A husband is a good deal like a pup. You let him know he's got a chain on an' he'll choke hisself most to death frettin' to get loose; but if you pet him an' keep the chain slack, he'll think he's the luckiest feller in the world.

"It's easy to manage a man if you try, but it's kind o' like teachin' a mule tricks. You got to have more sense than the mule."

me, and Beatrice had certainly ceased to be the indifferent chatelaine of Breezeley Mansion. She looked at me with anger in her eyes.

"Maj. Owston has been engaged for some time," Joseph explained, "in a quixotic search for you."

"He might have spared himself the trouble," she laughed, with a very distinct note of scorn in her tone.

Joseph held out his hands in protest.

"My dear Beatrice," he expostulated, "hear my confession. Maj. Owston did not desert you on that memorable night at the Blue Skies. He was in my way, and I removed him."

She looked from one to the other of us. Leopold wheeled up a chair, but she ignored it.

"You removed him?"

"Precisely," he continued smoothly. "You were told, I think, that he joined some friends in a carouse. You read the report of the proceedings in the police court next morning. All wrong, my dear Beatrice. All, believe me, part of one of those little schemes to which I sometimes have to resort. The idea of that angers you, perhaps, but see how ready I am to put things right when it is possible. Maj. Owston has devoted all his time since that unfortunate affair to hunting us down; he has neglected all his other duties, he has run greater risks than he knows of. He joined in no carouse that night. His comparative silence in the police court was a very clever move on his part, I am sorry to say, to deceive and take advantage of our friend, Leopold. Against you, he is blameless. He touched no drink in the club."

She looked at me, and I saw in her changing expression the turmoil into which Joseph's words had thrown her.

"Is this true?" she asked me.

"It is true that I am blameless, except that I ought to have known better than to have accepted Leopold's invitation at all," I answered, looking her in the eyes. "I went into the secretary's office merely to sign the book. The world came to an end with me there in a second. I woke in a police cell. They engineered everything that happened between."

The rush of relief to my heart as I watched her was one of the happiest sensations of my life. I saw something more human shining out of her eyes.

"But I am ashamed," she acknowledged.

I raised her fingers to my lips. I refused to allow it place, but notwithstanding the joy of this meeting, something of that haunting and terrible fear still lingered in my heart. I had not the courage to put it into words, and she did nothing to help me. Our moment had passed, and I felt that I had failed to take full advantage of it.

"My dear Beatrice," Joseph continued, "I want you to use your influence with Maj. Owston. I have already told you that Joseph is on the point of disappearing forever. Before I go, I want one half-hour with your uncle."

She shook her head.

"He would never see you, and besides—"

"Besides what?"

"I don't think it would be good for either of you. You would quarrel."

"On my part, there would be no quarrel, I can assure you, Joseph declared. "There are a few words long overdue between us. They should be spoken. I have come to the conclusion that the only person who has any influence over your uncle is Maj. Owston. Why should he not persuade him to see me?"

Beatrice shook her head.

"My uncle will never consent to see you," she declared.

"Why not?"

"He is far too frightened of you, for one thing. His nerve has been giving way for years. I do not believe that there is any person who could induce my uncle to let you inside the house."

For a single moment I fancied that I saw something of the old dangerous light flash in Joseph's eyes. His manner, however, remained unchanged. He shrugged his shoulders.

"Then, since you will not back me up here, Beatrice," he said, "I will ask you to spare us another ten minutes while I finish my business with Maj. Owston. Where shall we find you?"

"I shall be in the billiard room," she said.

I never could understand why everyone obeyed Joseph without hesitation. Beatrice rose, and, rather avoiding than seeking my eyes, she left the room. The disturbing question remained unasked. That terrible uncertainty still existed. Joseph came back to his place. He stood looking at me grimly and doubtfully.

"The world is no place," he said, his eyes watching my face all the time, "the world is no place nowadays for poor men."

"Isn't it? I seem to have rubbed along in it somehow."

"Uncomfortably, my dear enemy. You were in the direst straits when Martin Hewes took you into his employ."

"Quite true," I admitted, "but I had kept something worth having."

"Melodrama," Joseph sighed. "A soldier of honor! You're warning me off, Owston."

"I'm hoping you're not going to offer me a bribe," I admitted. "It's hard enough as it is to remember my parole."

"I was thinking about it," he acknowledged. "If money does not tempt you, something else might. What about Beatrice?"

Something in his manner of speech, his icy insolence, maddened me.

"What is she to you that you should dare to dispose of her?" I demanded. "Answer me. I insist upon it."

Again he smiled, but this time there was a measure of contempt in his gesture.

"You poor simpleton!" he scoffed. "I could see what you were thinking; so could she. Beatrice is my sister. Haven't you yet discovered that?"

CHAPTER XXX

I AM not ashamed to confess that, for a few moments, relief almost overwhelmed me. Joseph patted me on the shoulder in unexpectedly human fashion.

"Go and make your peace with Beatrice, if you can. Leopold will show you the way."

Leopold piloted me across the hall.

"You needn't hurry," he whispered, as he indicated the door. "He won't turn in until three or four o'clock in the morning, and he and I have a great deal to talk about. I'll take you back to town in my car—let you know as soon as I'm ready."

I turned the handle of the door and entered. Beatrice looked startled at my coming. I fancied that she had been crying.

"Beatrice, I am the clumsiest beast!" I exclaimed.

Her eyes told me that I was forgiven.

"You are," she admitted, "but you are rather a dear!"

We talked until the fire was nearly burnt out, and then we sat, silent for a time. Finally Beatrice said, with a half-scared little laugh:

"Henry, what time do you suppose it is? You don't think Mr. Leopold's forgotten about us, do you?"

I glanced at my watch. It was past two o'clock. I opened the door and looked out. The whole place was in darkness.

"Beatrice," I ventured fearfully, "you don't suppose he's gone to Breezeley?"

She looked at me, terrified. Then she rang a bell. Its echo resounded through the house. Very soon the butler made his appearance.

"Mr. Leopold was to have taken Maj. Owston back to London with him," Beatrice explained. "I am afraid he must have forgotten all about it."

"I am sure he did, miss," the man replied. "Mr. Leopold left with Sir Bruce soon after eleven o'clock."

We looked at each other in fear.

"Harding, is there another car in the garage?" Beatrice asked.

The man shook his head.

"How does one get away from here?" I inquired. How far is the railway station, or any place where one can hire a car?"

"The railway station's two and a half miles away, sir," he confided, "and I never heard of any night trains. The only thing I can think of is for you to walk to the main road and try to get a lift to Finchley. One of the garages might be open there."

"Can't we telephone?" Beatrice suggested.

"Most unfortunate, miss," the man regretted. "Sir Bruce was trying to telephone himself. It is because he failed to get the exchange that he thought it best to go up to town. The instrument is evidently out of order."

"Wait for me five minutes," she begged. "We'll do as Harding suggests——get on to the main road."

As we drew near Martin Hews's home, Beatrice gripped my arm suddenly.

"The car!" she exclaimed. "There, in the shadow of the house. Joseph is here!"

"You can get into the house?" I asked.

She nodded.

"Through the servants' quarters. Minchin and I have keys; no one else."

We were within a few feet of the library when we stopped short. She gripped my arm and looked at me in horror. We could hear little tremulous cries, each one linked with a sob.

"I can't stand this," I cried. "Come!"

We heard a cracking sound and a gibing voice—Joseph's —a hoarse laugh, and again the cry. I pushed open the door, and stood there, absolutely without power of movement. It was a sight so extraordinary that the utter loathsomeness of it only really gripped me afterwards. Joseph, with a whip in his hand, stood in the middle of an open space, and hobbling round in a circle was an object I scarcely recognized. Then it all came to me. I saw and I understood.

Martin Hews, his wig torn off, as bald as man could be, his clothes disarranged, was lumbering round in grotesque little jumps, while Joseph cracked his whip. His body was just as we had always seen it, but beneath were the most distorted, strange little legs, about a foot and a half in length. Martin Hews was a monstrosity. While we hesitated upon the threshold, he staggered and fell. Joseph mocked him.

"Up, my brave little man!" he shouted. "Up, and round the course! Up you get!"

Crack went the whip again. Martin Hews, his body writhing in pain, made a pitiful effort to struggle to his feet.

"Minchin!" he sobbed out.

Then I saw for the first time that Minchin was also there, lounging in a chair, smoking a pipe—an interested and applauding spectator. He put his head back and laughed.

"Don't cut it too short, Guv'nor," he begged. "Twice more round, eh? Twice—"

He broke off. Turning slowly round, he saw us. Suddenly the numbness left my limbs. I reached Minchin first. I flung him into a corner of the room, and then I went for Joseph. He saw me coming, flicked at me with his whip, a cruel gash. I saw his eyes harden, his mouth set. If he was armed, he made no effort to draw. He came toward me, and we crashed into each other, well away from the sobbing little object upon the floor. It was a fight of a sort, I suppose. I remember nothing of it—nothing until I felt Beatrice's arms around my neck, pulling at me until my hands upon his throat slackened.

"Henry!" she cried. "You've killed him!"

Joseph opened his eyes. He raised himself with the help of his hand.

"Not he," he muttered, with the ghost of his old smile. "I give in, though, Beatrice. Your man is the better—muscularly."

He staggered to his feet and sat on a chair. I looked around. Martin Hews was in his little carriage—I learned afterward that Beatrice had placed him there. Minchin had crept stealthily away. Joseph leaned forward.

"That man," he said, pointing to Martin Hews, "has escaped death at my hands, because death means no suffering. He will never forget this afternoon. Your mistake, Owston, is in thinking of him as a human being. He is the devil incarnate. He starved my mother to death. He would have starved us, had he not thought we might be useful to him. I came from America to kill him. I stayed to fight him in every way. I prayed that he might not die before I had hurt him the only way he could be hurt—through his vanity, the miserable little toad!"

I went to the secret cupboard, poured him out some brandy, and gave it to him. Martin Hews made strange noises. I took him some, too. He drank it and seemed to become a little more his natural self.

"Some more," he insisted, holding out his glass.

He drained his second portion to the last drop, drew a deep sigh, and settled himself more in his chair. Waving us out of the way, he swung round and paused at his desk.

"Joseph," he said, "I will return good for evil. I will show you something, the envy for which will be a blight upon your life, if you manage to escape the hangman for another year or two. I will show you your failures and my successes. Come!"

We all followed the chair. He turned and waved us back.

"Never in my life have I taken more than one person at a time into my tabernacle," he said. "We go alone, and remember that what I show you, I show you for your misery."

Joseph rose a little languidly to his feet. It seemed to me that he was still dazed.

"You shall see the Buddha," Martin Hews went on. "You shall see the Correggio Donkin took from your people. You shall see the tapestries Isaacs found while your men were sharpening their tools. No, not you," he added, motioning us away. "You have another task. Go back the way you came and ring the bell outside the third door on the left in the courtyard, for tonight is over. I want to know where those others were lurking when Minchin opened the doors. Go!"

I hesitated. Beatrice, however drew me away.

"You must obey," she whispered. "It is the only chance with him when he is like this . . ."

From the threshold I watched them. Martin Hews was some minutes producing his keys, but eventually the great door swung open. Just before the two disappeared into the shadows, Beatrice and I descended and moved across the courtyard in the gray morning light. We passed the first door, and the second—and there was no third. We looked at each other.

"What did your uncle mean?" I demanded.

"I cannot imagine," she answered.

But even at that moment we knew . . .

The ground beneath our feet shook and rocked. There was a hissing sound, and then a tremendous explosion. The walls of the north wing, which enclosed the gallery, seemed suddenly to split and crumble and fall outward. Red flames curled and leaped toward the skies. Clouds of smoke shot up and drifted away, darkening the whole of the countryside. The crash of further explosions followed, the sound of falling masonry in every direction. It was my fancy, of course, but in the first moment's silence that ensued after that awful pandemonium, I fancied that I heard a shrill, mocking laugh.

We drew farther away, for the flames were spreading, and the heat was intolerable. The men who came running out from the house and tower could do nothing but gape upward in amazement. Firemen and police were soon swarming over the place. I led Beatrice toward the car . . .

At the bend in the road before the station, I looked back for the last time. A fresh column of smoke was curling up to the sky. There was the thunder of masonry as another of the walls crashed to the ground.

"It is finished," I said. "The child has played with his toys for the last time."

There was a great deal of rough justice about Rachel's words when we went to see her at the hospital a few days later.

"I don't know that I'm sorry for either of them, though," she decided. "Martin Hews—well, he never ought to have been allowed to grow up—a poor creature like that, eaten up with vanity, all brain and no heart, and getting worse every year. Joseph—Well, he was wicked," she went on. "He had a heart of flint. I curse him night and day for what he did to me. He was as cruel as they make 'em, and yet there was always something pulling the other way. He'd have had you done in, all right, Major, but he'd got his eye upon you for the young lady here; and they'd have treated me worse, only he wouldn't let them. Look here, Mister," she went on, "they're finished, That's the end of them. Do you want to do something for me?"

"Of course, I do," I assured her. "So does my wife. That's why we're here."

"You tell Bloor to keep his hands off Charlie Andrews. I ain't denying he was in the gang, but he's finished with it, clear and honest, and he never did no one any real harm. He's got a good chandelry business now, come to him through his father, and we're settling down, both of us. There's no good raking up old scores. What do you say, Major?"

"Unless Charlie Andrews is in it deep," I promised, "Bloor shan't touch him."

She drew a sigh of relief.

"That lets him out," she said, "for he wasn't in it deep——never was . . ."

Bloor was at the station the next morning to see us off and he gave me this promise readily enough.

Yardsley was at the station, too. He brought with him my own family lawyer, whom I had not had occasion to trouble for many years.

"Your affairs, Mrs. Owston," he told Beatrice, "involve responsibility greater than I can undertake alone. Your uncle left nearly three quarters of a million above the treasures at Breezeley. Then, as you may know, there is another development. The man who perished with your uncle, whom I understand was a connection of the family—"

"My brother," Beatrice intervened.

"He has also left a fortune of three or four hundred thousand pounds, the whole of it unreservedly to you."

The whistle of the train sounded shrilly. There was the usual little commotion.

"Is there anything further we can do?" Mr. Yardsley asked. "You have all the money you want for abroad? There will be large sums to your credit at any time you care to draw a check. Anything else—"

"One thing," Beatrice interrupted, leaning out of the window. "A thousand pounds to Rachel Suess, who is at St. George's Hospital —a wedding-present from Maj. Owston and myself . . ."

The train glided out. I changed my place and sat by Beatrice's side.

"Peace at last!" she sighed, with infinite content. "No more fighting, mind."

Her hand stole into mine. She laughed at me.

"Well," she whispered, "the war is over. And soldiers after warfare—?"

HORSE-SHOES ARE LUCKY!

at which a hint of real indignation came into Dr. Hutslar's manner.

"Horses are performing a lot better than they were twenty years ago!" Then he added thoughtfully, "but that hasn't all to do with the horses. Improved science in the building of shoes, tracks, and sulkies—in other words increased knowledge on the part of man—has caused the seeming improvement in the horses.

"When Nancy Hanks made her record of 2:07:1, she was dragging around one of those old-fashioned high-wheeled sulkies. Today, sulkies are built low with the harness shafts tipping up to the horse. As the driver pulls the reins, the sulky is pushed up to the horse. If a sulky contains a really clever driver he can manipulate things in such a way that the horse seemingly is carrying little more than its own weight."

Prior to his entrance into college to study for the ministry Dr. Hutslar was offered and refused the position of head shoer at the Whitley racing stables in Muncie, at that time one of the leading stables in the country. For several seasons he was actively connected with the Harry Stokes stables in Springfield and Urbana, and his work under the supervision of this famous grand circuit driver contributed much to the experience. For a time, too, he was with the Rothrock stables at Washington C. H., Ohio, where was that famous sire, Bobby Burns.

Yet Dr. Hutslar is modest as regards his knowledge of shoeing, and in many instances is hesitant and reluctant to use the language of the race track. Perhaps, after twenty years, it doesn't come naturally any more.

"And maybe conditions are so changed today, that all I have told you will be laughed at by trainers. But I doubt it, because while science improves it doesn't change fundamentally."

As he speaks of the old days a suggestion of apology creeps into Dr. Hutslar's manner—and after all, fortifying horses' hoofs is rather removed from fortifying human souls. But when you have viewed examples of his handiwork—thirty shoes, many of them models of shoes worn by famous horses; when you have started home full to the ears of interesting information relative to horses; when you realize you have been listening to a man who knows what he is talking about; you wonder a little about that slightly apologetic manner. If we may venture a personal opinion, the apology is for a very justifiable pride, not quite concealed, rather than for honest scientific work well done.

The Treasure House of Martin Hews

CHAPTER XV

A SMALL party of newcomers were filing into the room. Two I recognized as well-known members of Parliament, and I also knew by sight Lord Farendon, a cabinet minister. The man whom my companion had indicated was a stranger, but his appearance was certainly striking. He was slightly over medium height, with a pronounced stoop, black hair, pale complexion, somewhat sunken cheeks, and dark eyes inadequately concealed behind horn-rimmed spectacles. He was dressed a trifle foppishly. His black bow tie—the men were all in dinner coats—was a little larger than ordinary and almost resembled a stock. His studs, finely chosen pearls, were also jet black. He seemed quite at ease among his companions, but, at the same time, he had the air of being almost a stranger to them. There was a brief delay about taking their places, which function was directed by Lord Farendon, who was evidently host. The man in whom I had been interested was to be on his host's right, and, as he seated himself, he glanced across the room and our eyes met. Something about that glance, unpremeditated though it was, something about the man, the poise of his body as he leaned over his chair, thrilled me in a most mysterious way. It was as though I were meeting some one I had known in another personality. His glance had passed from mine almost at once and rested upon my companion. So far as a man with every appearance of breeding and good manners can stare at a beautiful woman with whom he is unacquainted, he committed that unpardonable sin.

I glanced at my companion. There was, perhaps, the slightest possible tinge of color in her cheeks, but, although her eyes met his steadily, there was not the faintest glint of hauteur in their expression.

"Well, what do you think of my choice?" she asked.

"Honestly," I admitted, "that man is about as near my idea of Joseph as anyone could be."

The tinge of color had gone, and left her, it seemed to me, paler than ever. Something in her expressions reminded me of the moment when we had met upon the threshold of my room at Breessley Mansion, when the red light was burning upon my wall. Some fear seemed to have been born in her.

"Those things don't happen, do they—not in real life?" she murmured. "We are in search of one man out of seven million, and we are scarcely likely to find him the first time we dine together in a public restaurant. Besides," she went on, "although I have a great idea of Joseph, I can't really imagine him dining with dukes—there is a duke there, isn't there, besides a cabinet minister? I think we shall have to go a little farther afield for our victim. Lady Bonofar's reception rooms will seem to me a more likely place."

Our meal drew on toward its end, but I noticed, to my annoyance, that the man who had so manifestly shown his interest in my companion had in no way abandoned it. I summoned my maitre d'hotel and whispered in his ear. He bowed and departed.

"I have asked him to get me a list of Farendon's guests," I explained. "That fellow looks at you all the time. Have you ever seen him before, that you know of?"

"I can't exactly remember that I have," she replied, "yet there is something about him—how foolish we are! We have worked ourselves into this state, you know. Anyhow, if your waiter succeeds in his mission, we shall know who he is."

The maitre d'hotel returned presently and laid a little strip of paper by my side. My companion and I read it together:

"Lord Farendon
The Hon. Peter Gateson
Mr. R. C. Croome, M.P.
Mr. Prayson Taylor, M.P
Sir Godfrey Mandon
The Duke of Medchester
Mr X."

I looked up at the maitre d'hotel.

"Which is Mr. X.?"

"The gentleman seated at his lordship's right, sir. He is a guest who does not wish his name in the paper."

My companion and I exchanged glances.

"A man of mystery, anyhow," she murmured.

As though he knew we were talking about him, he suddenly leaned and shot a swift, searching look toward us. I realized at once that he knew we had been making inquiries about him and resented it.

"You must have met a great many people at different times at your uncle's?" I suggested to my companion. "Are you sure that you never met him there? He talks to both his neighbors, yet whenever he has a minute to spare he looks at us."

"My dear man, do you think that I don't know it?" she laughed nervously. "After all," she went on, a moment later, "why shouldn't he if he wants to? He just escapes being rude. Don't you think that we are getting a little jumpy about our quest already? Joseph may be a very extraordinary person, but he is scarcely likely to be a friend of Lord Farendon, or to be sitting on his right hand at a dinner party at Claridge's."

I paid my bill, and we left the restaurant. Mr. X. was apparently engrossing the attention of his whole party by the recital of some adventure as we passed. He did not glance in our direction, nor did Beatrice, whom I was dutifully following, turn her head. I watched his faint gesticulations, however, as his fingers flashed through the air, listened to his voice, dry but not unmusical, and I told myself that somewhere Mr. X. and I had met before.

Lady Bonofar's party had been heralded as one of the events of the London season, but one could scarcely fail to notice that the people who mounted the stairs and passed from room to room, who talked scandal with one another, flirted, chaffed, and exchanged gossip about their mutual friends, were of the world one meets day by day in every restaurant, theater, and at every resort of Europe. Men or women of any noticeable distinction or divergence from type were rare.

So far as our personal quest was concerned, we met with no success. There were hundreds of men who might possibly have been the person of whom we were in search, but not a single one who seemed in the least different to the others. We saw the famous Bonofar diamonds encircling the neck of our hostess, and we had no difficulty in picking out the detectives who were shadowing her.

Wherever we went, I noticed that Beatrice attracted a considerable amount of attention. She was not only extremely attractive to look at, but she was unusual. Evidently our hostess had to answer many questions, for eventually she came over to us.

"You are Mr. Martin Hews's niece, are you not?" she asked Beatrice. "I am afraid I have forgotten your name. Do tell me, please."

"My name is Beatrice Essiter," she replied, with a smile. "I have heard my uncle speak of you. This is Maj. Owston."

I murmured a word or two of thanks for her hospitality, to which Lady Bonofar listened graciously.

"I wonder if you could spare a few dances?" she asked Beatrice. "So many men have asked to meet you, and I can find plenty of partners for Maj. Owston."

SYNOPSIS: Martin Hews, a cripple who collects priceless art treasures, retains as his body-guard Major Owston, a soldier of fortune. Hews's methods, which are often lawless, bring him into conflict with Joseph, the leader of a gang of thieves. Rachel, Joseph's former sweetheart, is placed under Hews's protection. Hews makes her a guest in his house, hoping she will reveal Joseph's hiding place. Joseph eludes all pursuers and always appears in a disguise, but never twice in the same one. The girl takes a fancy to Owston, and Joseph descends upon him and leaves a note of warning. Owston, however, is strongly attracted to Hews's beautiful niece, Beatrice Essiter. Together they enter the social whirl, for Hews hopes they will encounter Joseph in that way. Hews offers Owston twenty thousand pounds if the latter kills Joseph. Owston declines the offer, but works with Inspector Bloor of Scotland Yard on a plan for capturing the criminal.

My companion shook her head.

"Would you mind, Lady Bonofar, if I asked to be excused from dancing any more this evening?" she begged. "We've been here already a terrible time, you know, and we were just going when you spoke to us."

"You must meet my brother, anyhow," Lady Bonofar begged. "I insist upon that, or rather he does . . . Samuel, the young lady is going to be good-natured and give you one dance, although she won't have anything to say to my young men. My brother, Mr. Leopold—Miss Beatrice Essiter—Maj. Owston."

Mr. Leopold, who had been hovering in the background, was a middle-aged man of rotund figure, with a wrinkled face, sallow complexion, small black eyes, and uncompromising features.

We four sat for a few minutes in a corner of the winter garden, and presently our host—a dapper little man whom I had not met—looking a good deal less than his sixty years, came and bustled his wife off to greet some late arrivals. Leopold also took his leave, and Beatrice and I made our way downstairs, where we found a score of people waiting for taxies. A very handsome car, was drawn up in front of the door, and Mr. Leopold appeared.

"Can I drop you anywhere?" he asked, without any particular cordiality. "There aren't any taxies."

Beatrice accepted at once. I followed the two down the steps.

"Where to?" Mr. Leopold asked.

"Claridge's, if you please," my companion begged.

He gave the address to the chauffeur and seated himself by her side.

"Dull party!" he declared. "Can't think why Sarah gives them. Never went in for entertaining myself—perhaps because I never married. You young people off home?"

"Well, it's nearly two o'clock," Beatrice remarked, glancing at her wrist-watch.

"Pooh! What's that?" our host scoffed. "Too much sleep, not enough exercise, and too little to drink are the three worst things in the world. Let's go to a night club. I know a beauty. Just half an hour, eh?"

Now I can declare quite honestly that it was my intention to refuse that invitation. I had commenced an earnest effort during the last few days to school myself into an attitude of caution toward every stranger in the world, and Leopold, notwithstanding his relationship to our late hostess, was certainly a stranger of a peculiar type. My companion, however, settled the matter before I could open my lips.

"I should love to," she agreed.

"Want to go to the Embassy?" Mr. Leopold suggested. "Pretty empty by this time, though. I'll take you to a place that only has eighty members or so, but they're all there every night after two. Wonderful music, good wine. Hi, John!" he shouted down the speaking-tube. "Go to the Blue Skies."

We slackened speed, passed Claridge's and turned toward Oxford street. Soon, so far as I was concerned, we were lost. Suddenly we pulled up in a small street chiefly occupied by warehouses. Mr. Leopold stepped out, and was saluted at once by a giant commissionaire. We followed our host into a circular hall, with a vista on our left of a delightful dancing-floor lined with tables. The waiters and maitres d'hotel seemed to be of a superior class, and several of the men and women standing about in the hall and dancing I recognized as having been present at Lady Bonofar's reception. Our host motioned toward the ladies' cloakroom opposite.

"Will you leave your things in there, Miss Essiter?" he begged. "You won't mind signing in the secretary's room?" he added, turning to me. "This is a quaint little place, but most exclusive. You have to sign personally and have your proposer and the secretary countersign."

I followed him into a room farther down the passage. A man was seated at a desk, writing by the light of a heavily shaded green lamp. He looked up as we entered and smiled at the expression of astonishment in my face. The door behind me closed with a little click. We were suddenly plunged into complete darkness.

CHAPTER XVI

IT TOOK the whole of my first few moments of recovering consciousness to realize where I was. There was a blank in my mind against which I struggled in vain. The secretary's office at the Blue Skies, with its soft carpet, shaded green light, the face of the man seated at the desk, so utterly unexpected, his head raised at my entrance, that thin, sardonic smile upon his lips—and afterward! A faint thread of recollection was swept away in a spasm of horror, I suddenly knew that I was in a police cell . . . There were voices outside, some one was coming in. I sat up, and, struggling against a deadly sickness, rose with difficulty to my feet. A policeman entered, accompanied by a doctor.

"Getting over it?" the latter asked curtly.

"Getting over what?" I demanded. "Why am I here? Who brought me in?"

The doctor smiled indifferently.

"You were brought here at three o'clock this morning, drunk," he said dryly.

I sat with my head between my hands. I began to apprehend the full nature of the cunning with which my clumsiness was confronted. Then, like a stab, I remembered Beatrice.

"Can you tell me where the young lady is?" I asked.

The doctor shook his head.

"I know nothing about any young lady," he assured me. "Where was he when he was found, Constable?"

"Sitting upon the pavement in Chatham street," the man replied, with a grin. "Drunk as ever I did see a gentleman in my life," he added.

"Well, you seem to have pulled yourself together," the doctor remarked. "I thought I had better have a look at you before you went into court, but you're perfectly all right now."

"You are prepared to certify that I was drunk?"

"I certainly am," he replied. "I should imagine you're not going to deny it, are you?"

"I was drugged," I told him emphatically.

He was not an unpleasant-looking little man, and a gleam of humor shone in his eyes as he smiled.

"I've heard that story pretty often," he confided. "You may have been drugged, but you smelt of whisky enough to knock a man down."

"I never tasted a drop of whisky all last night," I declared.

A police sergeant put his head in at the door.

"Better bring your case along, Jim," he enjoined. "Mr. Horton is sitting."

In my disordered evening clothes, unwashed, and with my hair unbrushed, I was led out of the cell. To my relief, as we entered the courtroom, there were barely a score of people present. The magistrate looked up from his papers.

"Charge?" he inquired.

"Ordinary drunk and incapable," I heard the clerk whisper.

The policeman who had brought me in stepped into the box.

"Police Constable Dethbridge," he announced. "At three o'clock this morning, I was on duty in Chatham street. I saw the prisoner seated with his back to a wall, apparently asleep. I tried to rouse him, but failed. He smelt very strongly of whisky. He is a heavy man, and I had to call a taxicab to bring him to the station."

"Any statement to make?" the magistrate inquired.

"Yes, I have a statement to make," I said. "I have never been drunk in my life, and I was never less so than last night. I had dined at Claridge's with a young lady, where we had one bottle of champagne and one liqueur. I went afterward to a reception,

FOOT HEALTH

"Whew! This warm weather plays the mischief with my feet. I don't see how I can go another step!"

"Well, bear up, a little longer, honey, and I'll take you where they'll make those 'summer feet' of yours think it's December all the time."

"Can't be done, Dan. I've lived with these feet longer than you have—every summer's just the same."

"That may be so, but you've never put them into Main Spring Arch shoes, either, have you?"

"Never even heard of them—something good and ugly, I suppose, if they're good for one!"

"Nope. You've guessed wrong again. That Ritzy secretary of dad's wears them all the time. She told me so."

"Why, her shoes are always lovely! Are they really built for special comfort?"

"Absolutely."

"Then lead me to them. Where do we go?"

"To the Walk-Over Shops—Main Spring Arch shoes are exclusive with them. Miss Adams tells me, also, that their fitters have really studied feet and will know just the type of shoe you should have. Come along, child. Let's get your feet fixed up so we can have some fun!"

women were wearing the most wonderful jewels. He had them all marked down. His fighting was a sham. When he fired his gun, he used dummy cartridges, and the men got up again. I picked some of the cartridges up. I have two or three in my pocket now."

"Show me one."

I thrust my hand into my pocket. They were gone. Bloor edged away.

"I think you're wrong, Major," he told me frankly. "Come and have that drink."

"But he talked to me tonight," I insisted. "We've spoken of Miss Essiter."

"I knew that I was speaking against a rock of incredulity. Nevertheless, he let me down lightly.

"I tell you what I'll do, Major," he promised. "I'll have him watched. He's staying here. I'll send two of our best men up within half an hour.'

And, with that, he seemed to consider the matter settled.

The next day I passed my treasure into the trembling hands of Martin Hews. He set it down in front of him upon the desk and drew aside the purple covering with caressing fingers. He was like a man whose emotions, so clearly reflected in his face, had generated an almost unendurable physical strain. He sat spell-bound, gazing, drinking in an amazing happiness, completely oblivious to his surroundings, crooning gently to himself. His fingers wandered lovingly over that exquisite surface. The seconds passed into minutes. Finally, with the tips of his fingers still resting upon his treasure, he turned toward me.

"Well done, Owston," he acclaimed. "Well done! When the news came through of the raid, I trembled. You have brought me the last great desire of my life. Now tell the story."

"It's a pretty serious one, I fear, sir," I warned him. "The beginning of it was all right. Isaacs wanted to bargain, but I handed across the check. Tul-Kak parted all right, poor fellow. He saved my life, but they got him this morning. He was found dead in bed, as I dare say you read."

My employer nodded.

"Joseph kept his word as usual. He swore that, if he dealt with me instead of him, he should die before he could cash the check."

"He had three men to guard him and locked doors. No good! Joseph's men got at him somehow during the raid. They could never believe that I had fought through to the office, and they imagined that I had hidden it in one of the rooms on Tul-Kak's floor. Everyone of them was ransacked last night and torn to pieces."

"They pressed you hard for it?" he muttered, with a sparkle in his eyes.

"We had a bit of a scrap in the corridor of the Milan," I told him. "Afterward we rather fooled them. Isaacs went off with the coffer, which they took from him at the corner of the street, and I reached the office vault, with the statuette in my trousers pocket. Isaacs is all right, by-the-by. I rang him up this morning. They just took the coffer from him and let him go."

"You are a man, Major," my employer acknowledged tremblingly. "I did well when I engaged you. Now what about the raid? The papers speak of you as making an heroic resistance, and a Mr. Ruben Sams. Who is Ruben Sams?"

"Joseph."

Mr. Martin Hews stared at me.

"You're laughing, Major."

I was weary of unbelief, but again I did my best to combat it. I explained the reasons for my conviction.

"They all believe that he was fighting for the guests," I concluded. "Nothing of the sort. He was leading on his gang. He'd marked down every table where the jewels were worth having, and, under pretext of rushing there to defend the women, he led his men."

"That's a strange story, Major," Martin Hews commented quietly.

"Strange, but it's true," I answered.

He leaned across the table.

"You know his oath? If I got Donkin away and kept the girl here, he swore to steal my treasures, one by one, and then my life. Beatrice is the beginning, I suppose. My Madonna of Deptford followed. I know that I am in danger, but where else in the world could I protect myself as I can here?"

"That's all very well, sir," I expostulated, "but the man isn't superhuman. He's beginning to get it in the neck and to get it badly. There are fifty-three men of his gang under arrest, some in hospitals, the remainder in prison. Eleven are dead. His organization must be completely shattered. The police have combed every house for miles around their old headquarters. Don't you think one of these fifty-three is likely to squeal?"

"I don't believe one of them knows," my employer confided. "They catch a glimpse of the Joseph, who comes stealing down into their midst once or twice a year, from some hidden place in another quarter of the world, perhaps, but I don't believe there's one of them—even among his most trusted lieutenants—who could put his hand upon him at a given moment. Joseph knows all about them and what they are doing. They know nothing about him."

"How about last night?" I demanded. "They recognized him then and obeyed him."

Martin Hews smiled cryptically.

He opened a drawer and drew out a bundle of notes.

"You needn't mind taking them, Owston," he went on, almost pleasantly. "There was never a thousand pounds better earned. Put it in your pocket."

I am afraid I did not stop to consider the ethical point of view. After all, I had done my job and risked my life. I pocketed the money.

"You may hear from Joseph, even though it is for the last time, as soon as he discovers that he hasn't the Buddha," I warned him.

"It has cost me something like five thousand pounds," Martin Hews said, "to make this room impregnable. It is impregnable. No man could possible enter while I sit at this desk."

"But there are two other doors," I pointed out.

He nodded gravely.

"Quite right. Now then, about those two other doors. There is only one that need count. The door into my treasure-house is of solid iron. It opens only from this side, and it would take half a ton of dynamite to blow it up. As for the second—"

He must have touched a button somewhere, for the door rolled slowly open. Upon the threshold stood Huntley, his automatic in his hand.

"Quite all right, thank you," his master said, with a nod. "I was only testing the connections."

"Then, if I may, I will go back to town, sir," I proposed.

"Just as you please," Martin Hews assented. "Send me news when you have any, Major. Mr. Ruben Sams, for instance. Ah, I have not shown you this. Look here. When you get back, you may find Mr. Bloor not so hard to convince."

He had a copy of the Times out before him and touched a little paragraph with his finger:

"Mr. Ruben Sams, the Argentine millionaire, is arriving at Liverpool this mornng on the Orinoco from Buenos Ayres, and will be staying at the Ritz Hotel."

"Come a little before his time, I fancy," Martin Hews remarked. "That is why I think that Joseph's star is setting."

CHAPTER XXVIII

TOWARDS six o'clock, Inspector Bloor came to see me.

"And I thought you a good fellow and a brave man," he groaned, as he took my hand, "but a bit of a simpleton. Major, it's I who was the simpleton. You gave me the chance of my life, and I threw it away."

"You know now, then, that we had Joseph in our hands?"

"I'm just as sure of it as that the real Ruben Sams landed at Liverpool this morning. Joseph has been playing at a higher game than ordinary jewel robberies. He is the most amazing person we've been up against for many years. He left the Milan Hotel at six o'clock this morning. I have just come from searching his rooms. Not a paper, not an address, not a single thing there to help us. And to think," he deplored, a note almost of passionate regret in that pleasant, even tone of his, "he was my man last night—the greatest capture of my life, I hadn't the sense to believe you, Major."

"It can't be helped," I sighed. "We shall get him before many hours have passed.'

"Why do you think so?" he asked eagerly. "You see, I can't afford to let even an idea of yours pass now, Major."

"Because," I explained, "I don't believe that he would leave the country without going down to Breezeley. He's got an account—an account of hate, I suppose you'd call it—to settle with Martin Hews."

"It's possible," Bloor admitted. "I'll send three men down there tonight. I must be off now. I couldn't rest until I had owned up to you, Major. I'm sorry—I can't say more."

I ordered an early dinner in my rooms. Afterward I began to realize my weariness. My sitting-room was warm and comfortable, and I fell asleep . . .

I was awakened by a soft tapping at the door. I glanced at my watch and sat up. It was only nine o'clock, so I could not have been asleep for more than twenty minutes. The tapping was repeated. I took my automatic from under a newspaper by my side, and acknowledged the summons.

"Come in," I enjoined.

The door opened. Mr. Leopold, smiling at me deprecatingly as he unwound a thick scarf from his neck, took off a pair of motor-glasses, and advanced into the room.

"You will excuse this interruption, Major," he begged. "I have just motored up from the country. I am the bearer of a very important message. You permit that I rid myself of some of these things?"

He deposited an enormous ulster, his hat, and other impediments, upon one of my chairs.

"Are you alone?" I asked him.

"Absolutely alone," he assured me. "I come in peace, Major. You can search me. I am unarmed."

I believed him, but I saw no reason to run any risks. I crossed the room and passed my hands over his pockets and body. There was no doubt that he was telling the truth. I locked the door, in case he was only an advance guard of more troublesome visitors, and pointed to a chair.

"Necessity," I told him, "is teaching me caution. I can't imagine what you have to say to me that I should want to listen to or take any interest in, but since you are here, sit down and get along with it."

"It is unfortunate," he remarked, "that I do not seem to have established myself as persona grata with you, Major."

The man's insolence was amazing.

"If there is one person," I rejoined, "who has done more than any other to earn my distrust and dislike, it is you. Even last night, during the great raid, you were helping your master."

"Naturally," he admitted, "I am, as you have doubtless opined, a Wolf. Life, however, is purely a matter of self-interest, with you as with myself, I should imagine. You happen to be on one side and I on the other, but we may still be honorable opponents."

I came very near losing my temper then.

"If you want my opinion of you," I said, "it is that you're a rascal. That's the first thing I have to say. The second is this. If you want anything from me, you'll open the way to negotiations by telling me what has become of Miss Essiter."

"Ah," he remonstrated, "that is not my affair."

I moved my chair a little closer to his.

"You were the person who planned her abduction," I reminded him. "I rather think that, since you are here, and not at my invitation, it will become very necessary for you to tell me, unless you want to be choked where you sit."

He waved me away. I will do him the credit to acknowledge that he did not look the least afraid.

"It is true," he confessed, "that I was concerned in the abduction of Miss Essiter, but you see, Major, we both act under orders. I was acting under orders from my chief, and you from yours. I had to obey. I am here and in your power. You can throttle me in an hour's time just as well as now. Supposing we let the matter drop while I disclose the reason for my visit."

"Well, get on with it," I conceded.

"I am an ambassador," Mr. Leopold confided. "To tell you the truth, that is rather where I come in. I am the bearer of a message from our friend."

"From Joseph?"

Leopold shrugged his shoulders.

"Why mention names? He has tried half a dozen. The one that amuses him most is the pseudonym he adopted that night at Claridge's—'Mr. X.' You can understand that, during the last month, he has not been too anxious for the name of Mr. Ruben Sams to appear in the newspapers. Shall we call him Mr. X.? He wants to see you."

"Not half as much as I want to see him," I rejoined. "What are you after—the five thousand pounds?"

My visitor looked at me as one might have looked at an ignorant child.

"The person who earns that five thousand pounds," he said, "will spend it in eternity or nowhere. When I say that we are beaten, I mean that we must disband. Mr. X. will leave this country when he chooses and how he chooses. He will live abroad when, where, and how he pleases. Five thousand pounds, fifty thousand, or half a million will never bring him inside any prison."

"Swank!" I exclaimed contemptuously. "Joseph's day is over, and he knows it."

"Answer me this question, Major," Leopold begged. "Why are you occupying these rooms? Why did you begin combing the West End of London, with Miss Essiter to keep you company?"

"To find Joseph," I told him, "and I found him."

"And lost Miss Essiter. Never mind that, though. You admit that your object was to find Joseph. Can you lay your hands upon him at the present moment? Very well, I am here to take you to him."

"Thank you," I replied. "I am waiting until I can go with a police sergeant and a warrant, and I don't fancy it will be long."

"On the contrary," Leopold assured me, "I think if you do not accept my offer, you and Joseph may never meet in this world."

I was beginning to get interested. There might be some definite purpose, after all, in this strange visit.

"Let's get on with this," I suggested. "Put your proposals into plain words before I decide what to do."

"Mr. X. wants to see you," Leopold announced. "I am to offer you a safe conduct."

"And your guarantee?"

"Mr. X.'s word—and the young lady."

"Miss Essiter?" I exclaimed.

He inclined his head gently.

"Since that unfortunate evening at the Blue Skies," he said, "the young lady has remained under the protection of my Chief. If it is your wish to get into touch with her, he will give you the opportunity. I am to take you to Joseph, and he will make certain propositions to you. If you fail to come to terms, there is no harm done. Your personal safety is guaranteed."

I put on my hat and coat, assisted my guest into his, and descended to the street. We drove off, and I took note of our passage through the familiar thoroughfares.

The streets were emptying as we turned up Baker street, past Grove Road and Lord's Cricket Ground, through Hampstead, Golder's Green, and Finchley, and increased our speed as we came to the open country beyond. When we turned off the main road, about halfway to Hatfield, I asked Leopold a question.

"Much farther?"

"We are almost there," was the response. "You can see the lights of the house among the trees."

We turned in through broad gates guarded by twin lodges, drove for a mile along a well-kept, curving avenue, and crossed a park studded with magnificent trees. Always in front of us, the lights were twinkling from a large Georgian mansion.

"You are paying a visit," Leopold confided, "to Sir Bruce Pettefar."

"The deuce!" I exclaimed. "Is Joseph going in for titles?"

"All that you need to have in your mind for the moment is that you are paying a visit to Sir Bruce Pettefar," Mr. Leopold replied coldly. "We have finished, if you please, with all references to Joseph, Ruben Sams, and such matters. Sir Bruce is an invalid who lived here for many years. I have recently become his secretary."

A very handsome and well-kept estate, so far as one could judge in the moonlight. A butler admitted us and welcomed Leopold as though he were one of the household.

We crossed a large, old-fashioned hall, and the butler knocked upon the door of one of the front rooms. A languid voice bade us enter.

"The gentleman you were expecting, Sir Bruce," he announced, and left us.

CHAPTER XXIX

SO THE supreme moment had arrived. I knew from Martin Hews and Bloor, and also from my own observation, of this man's amazing skill in making up and in counterfeiting personalities, but I still thought that I was confronted by a stranger when I glanced toward the tall man in a well-cut, but rather shabby, dinner suit, who stood with his back toward a roaring fire. His black hair, no longer sprinkled with gray, was brushed smoothly from his brow. His cheeks were hollow to emaciation. It was not until he smiled that I was able to trace the slightest resemblance to the man whom I had fashioned in my thoughts.

"Well, Major," he greeted me. "Welcome! I thought I could count on you to take the risk. We meet for the first time under our proper personalities. Here I am for what I am—Joseph."

"I didn't come to see you," I told him bluntly. "You are no use to me under my parole. I wish to see Miss Essiter."

"That," he admitted, "is part of the bargain, but you can imagine that I did not take the trouble to send for you simply to afford you an interview with the young lady. I have business with you myself."

"Is Miss Essiter here?" I demanded.

"She is. You will see her before you leave this place."

"And, in the meantime," I asked, "what is it you want with me?"

"One thing, and one thing only. I want one interview with Martin Hews."

"For what purpose?"

"For sixteen years, Martin Hews and I have been bitter enemies. The first cause of our quarrel lies behind the curtain. Since then we have come into the open. We have ransacked the world for its treasures and sought to acquire them. But there was this difference between Martin Hews and myself: whatever I stole came back into the markets of the world. What Martin Hews grabbed was for his own greedy longings, his own gloating eyes and his alone—his own selfish joy. Shall I ask you to choose between us? I fought for what I could win. I risked my life many a time, my liberty all the time, the chance of being accounted a common thief from beginning to end.

"And what did Martin Hews risk? Nothing. He sat in his chair, with all the devices of science to protect him close at hand. Grudgingly, with stingy fingers, he paid a gang of robbers to fight against mine, to steal where mine would have stolen, to acquire by cunning what my Wolves would have torn with their teeth. Then there came—it was inevitable—Donkin's downfall. There is no one left for us to fight against. My men are fat with gain. I myself am weary. I have credits at the banks of every capital in the world. I have money enough to satisfy a Monte Cristo. I have quit the field. Martin Hews is welcome to everything he has the courage to strike for. All that I ask before I leave the field is one half-hour alone with him. What of that, Maj. Owston?"

"But," I persisted, "I have been in Martin Hews's employ only a few weeks. I have no influence over him. Why not ask for your interview and have done with it?'

"Because," was the reply, "I perhaps know Martin Hews better than you do. You have been with him, as you say, only a few weeks, but you are the only man he trusts. Thanks to you, he has attained his ambition. With the passing of the Buddha into his possession, he has the greatest collection of treasures in the world, and he sits there, shivering and afraid. He knows very well that many of those treasures have been acquired by bloodshed. Many of them, cunning as he has been, have passed into his hands illegally. Very few of them have been bought in the open market. By degrees he has estranged the sympathies of everyone who might have helped him. He now sees the writing on the wall."

"All this may be true," I conceded, a little impatiently, "but Martin Hews never pretended to be a philanthropist any more than you have done. I suppose I am stupid, but frankly I don't see what you're getting at. Tell me what it is you want from me? Do you want me to ask Martin Hews to see you? He won't do it. He is more terrified of you than of any human being in the world. I should be just as likely to persuade him to make me a present of the Buddha as to let you willingly cross the threshold."

"There might be a consideration," Joseph murmured. "You forget that his niece is here."

For a moment I saw red.

"You want me," I said, "to propose to Martin Hews that he sees you for half an hour, in return for which you promise to hand over his niece."

"Precisely."

"You say that Miss Essiter is here?" I challenged him.

"Naturally," he drawled. "Leopold, perhaps you wouldn't mind ringing the bell."

It all came about so naturally that, for the first few seconds, I could scarcely believe in its reality. A brief message conveyed to the butler, and, a moment or so later, Beatrice crossed the threshold and came into the room. As her eyes met mine, a sudden flame crept into them.

"My dear Beatrice," Joseph announced, rising with lazy courtesy. "I conceive that it has become my duty to remove a small misunderstanding."

She and I were no longer lay figures in the drama of our meeting. Joseph's careless use of her Christian name had maddened where I had one glass, or perhaps a glass and a half, of champagne at supper, and another glass later in the evening with my hostess. A gentleman to whom we were introduced there gave us a lift in his car, and invited us to accompany him to a night club. I entered the club perfectly sober and was conducted to the secretary's room to sign my name in the visitor's book. I remember nothing more until I awoke in the cell this morning."

The magistrate looked at me, disbelief in his eyes.

"You remember nothing of what happened to you in the secretary's room of the club?"

"Not a thing."

"Can you tell me the name of the club?"

"No never heard it."

"Can you tell us the name of the young lady with whom you dined?"

"I should prefer not to."

The magistrate tapped impatiently upon the table with his pencil.

"What about your friend who introduced you to the club?"

To my intense surprise, Leopold suddenly arose from the back of the room.

"I am here, sir," he announced, "in case my evidence is required."

Obeying a gesture of the magistrate's, he stepped into the witness-box.

"I met Maj. Owston for the first time last night," he testified. "He seemed to have been drinking a good deal, but he was still sober. I offered to take the young lady and him to a very respectable night club. He seemed a little unsteady on entering, and I made a point of taking him to the secretary's room to sign his name before I introduced him into the club proper. Unfortunately, as it happens, the secretary offered us a whisky and soda, and Maj. Owston had no sooner drunk his than he collapsed."

I looked across speculatively at Leopold. His eyes met mine a little reproachfully.

"It was an awkward position for me," he continued. "Fortunately, he happened to have told me where his rooms were, so we put him into a taxicab and sent him home. I suppose he insisted upon trying to come back."

"Forty shillings and costs," the magistrate pronounced curtly.

There was a brief whispered conversation between the police sergeant and the magistrate's clerk. I gathered that no money had been found upon my person. Mr. Leopold stood up again.

"As I was responsible for taking the young man to the club," he said, "I should like to pay the fine."

"Can I appeal?" I asked the magistrate.

"You can, but I should advise you not to," was the uncompromising reply.

I stepped down and made my way outside. A quarter of an hour later I let myself into my rooms. Smart greeted me with an air of grave distress.

"A bath quickly," I ordered. "Any calls or messages?"

"Nothing of any sort, sir."

"No notes?"

"Nothing."

I bathed, dressed, ate my breakfast, and walked to Claridge's. I never felt more nervous than when I inquired for Miss Essiter. The clerk listened to me with a certain hesitation.

"Miss Essiter was staying here yesterday, sir," he admitted. "I am not quite sure whether she has left. Will you take a seat for a minute or two?"

While I waited, Mr. Leopold, clad with almost offensive perfection, strolled toward the lounge. Arrived almost at the threshold, he stopped, and a man, dressed in dark clothes and having the appearance of a servant, stepped forward and handed him a letter. Leopold asked no questions, made no remark. His hand slid with it into his overcoat pocket. Without a glance toward the retreating figure of the messenger, he continued his progress. I was half-inclined to follow him. Then I reflected that he was safe there, at any rate for some time. Presently the clerk aprpoached me.

"Miss Essiter is staying here, sir," he announced, "but she is not in at present."

"Do you mean that Miss Essiter has gone out already this morning?" I asked.

The young man hesitated. He looked at me surreptitiously and probably took note of my agitation.

"Are you a relative of Miss Essiter's, may I ask?" he inquired.

"I am her uncle's secretary," I told him. "She was in my charge last night, and through an unfortunate accident we were separated. I came round to be sure that she reached the hotel safely and to see her, if possible."

The young man looked me over and apparently decided in my favor.

"Miss Essiter has not yet returned, sir," he acknowledged.

I received the news with greater calmness than I had believed possible. I felt a queer little choking in my throat, but I fancy that there was nothing unusual in my manner.

"Has there been any message?" I asked. "Are her clothes still in her room?"

"There has been no message," the young man replied, "and her clothes are still there."

"Has her bed been slept in?" I persisted.

"Apparently not," the clerk answered. "The chambermaid went to call her this morning, and found that the room had not been occupied."

"Something must have happened to Miss Essiter," I said. "I shall telephone her uncle and communicate with the police."

All the time I had stood facing the hall, so that no one could pass out of the lounge unseen. I took my leave of the clerk now and made my way toward it. When I entered, Mr. Leopold was seated in a chair, reading.

"So you've pulled yourself together, young man, have you?" he asked coolly.

"More or less," I answered. "I have brought you back your forty shillings, Mr. Leopold."

He accepted the money with a gesture of indifference.

"Would you be so good as to tell me," I continued, "what became of Miss Essiter after you packed me off last night?"

"Certainly," he assented. "You have observed, I hope, that I was very careful not to mention the young lady's name in court. I waited until she came out of the dressing-room, and then I explained the situation to her. I asked her whether she would care to accept my escort, but she preferred to return here. I put her into a taxicab, and wished her good night. A very charming young lady! I am proposing to send my card up to her presently and invite her to lunch."

"Miss Essiter has not returned here," I told him. "She did not return at all last night. Her room is still empty."

Mr. Leopold stared at me.

"Not returned?"

"You can inquire for yourself, if you like."

"You are sure," he added, after a moment's pause, "that this is not her way of indicating that she does not wish to see you? She is probably annoyed. She might very reasonably be annoyed, Major, at your defection last night."

I shook my head.

"I am afraid there is no doubt whatever," I told him, "that Miss Essiter did not return last night. You can go to the office and inquire for yourself. In fact, I should very much like you to do so. We shall see then whether there is anything in your idea."

"I will do so with pleasure," he agreed. "There is certainly something in your suggestion. I will make inquiries in my own name and send up my invitation to lunch at the same time."

As soon as he had turned the corner, I thrust my hand into the pockets of his coat, which he had left hanging over the side of his chair. The first one was empty; the second contained a single letter, still inclosed in an envelope, although it had been opened. I transferred it to my own pocket without daring to glance at it. I replaced the coat, and, when he returned, he found me seated in the same attitude of utter dejection in which he had left me.

CHAPTER XVII

"YOU have, unfortunately, been correctly informed, Major," Mr. Leopold announced, after he had made his inquiries. "This is very unpleasant. I have seen the manager himself. He assures me that Miss Essiter has not returned. What can we do?"

"Well, what do you advise?" I asked him. "Of course, it was chiefly my fault for leaving her alone, but it was you who put her into the taxi and sent her back here."

"We must consider the situation," Mr. Leopold declared. "We are equally involved in this matter—no, I will not say equally. I offered my escort to the young lady, and she refused it. My share of the blame is small, but still it was I who invited you to the club. We must put our heads together. Miss Essiter is, I am sure a charming young lady, and she undoubtedly has a large number of friends. Perhaps she has gone to one of them."

"Quite possible," I admitted.

"Under those circumstances, I suggest that we give the young lady a chance before we create a scandal. Give her, at any rate, until this evening. If, at the end of that time, nothing has been heard of her, I will see that Scotland Yard is informed, and you can go down and interview her uncle."

"You don't think we ought to let the police know at once?" I asked dubiously.

"I should give her another hour or two," Mr. Leopold urged.

I rose reluctantly. I hated to leave Mr. Leopold, but I felt that I had reached almost the limit of my endurance.

"Very good, sir," I told him, "I'll leave the matter in your hands, and I'll wait for a time before I go down to Breezeley. Can I see you anywhere this evening, in case you have any news?"

"Certainly, my lad," was the cordial reply. "I'm sorry about last night, but it can't be helped. Don't worry about it too much. I'll see you tonight with pleasure. Where am I dining now? Can't remember. Anyway, will you come to my rooms—Number 27a, Berkeley street—and have a cocktail with me while I change for dinner. Half past eight, eh? How does that do?"

"Very well indeed, thank you," I assured him. "I'll be there."

I walked dejectedly toward the exit. Halfway there, however, Mr. Leopold recalled me. He was fumbling in the pocket of his overcoat.

"I say, you didn't notice a letter lying on the floor or on my chair when I went to the office, did you?" he asked.

"I am afraid I'm not in the humor to notice anything this morning," I regretted.

He frowned. His little black eyes looked slantwise into mine.

"Nothing important, I hope?"

He shook his head, apparently satisfied.

I sent an urgent note to Inspector Bloor, abandoning with some reluctance my first intention of going down to Scotland Yard myself. Then I summoned up all my courage and started off for Breezeley.

I shivered as I drew near the huge edifice, shivered as the front door opened without any summons from me, and Minchin bade me enter. The house was incredibly still. He led me to the lift.

"The master is waiting for you, sir," he announced, and I was sure that there was a note of malicious pleasure in his tone. I advanced as bravely as I could into the little circle of light thrown from Martin Hews's red lamp—the only illumination in the room.

"Sit down," he ordered me briefly, without looking up.

I obeyed. My employer was bending over the table, studying what seemed to me to be a chart. It was at least a quarter of an hour before he spoke to me, and then he did so without lifting his eyes from his task.

"So you are good for nothing except drayman's work, after all, Owston?" he said.

"It seems so, sir," I admitted.

"You were sent to the West End of London to establish yourself there for a certain purpose. On practically the first night, you stepped guilelessly into a trap. You cannot now enter a single night club in London. Your name is being posted as an undesirable person. You will need courage to show yourself whenever people of the world into which I wish you to penetrate are gathered together. The cards of invitation for the functions I wanted you to attend with my niece have been, or will be, of course, withdrawn. You have destroyed your whole utility to me in a single evening."

"That is all quite true, sir," I acknowledged, "but it is not the full extent of my folly. You have probably received my message, and you know that a much more serious thing has happened through my blundering. Your niece has disappeared."

He leaned back in his chair. It was obvious that he was enjoying my misery.

"Disappeared?" he repeated. "Explain yourself, if you please. Your message was too vague."

"Miss Essiter went with me to the Blue Skies Night Club at the invitation of a Mr. Leopold, brother of Lady Bonofar. When we arrived, I was asked to visit the secretary's room, where I was fool enough to allow myself to be drugged, and woke up this morning in a police cell. This morning I went to Claridge's, and I learned that Miss Essiter had not returned. I have seen Leopold, and he declares that he put her into a taxicab at the club a few minutes after I had left. Nevertheless, no one seems to have seen her since. This afternoon I received one of those polite communications from Joseph. Here it is."

I handed to him the note found in my letter-box a few minutes before I had left. He read it through slowly:

> "A fair exchange, my dear Major. I have altered my mind. I have decided that I will not rase Breezeley to the ground to snatch away your prisoner. Rachel is, after all, a little creature of the slums and alleys, but Beatrice—Ah, well, it would not be for you, dear clumsy enemy, to appreciate how wonderful a woman she is. I think that I shall rest content."

Martin Hews read, with a devilish smile, the words that had brought sobs to my throat.

"You needn't tell me what happened," he groaned. "You remembered, of course, that you were a British officer, and that, instead of brain, you had been endowed with the muscles of an ox. Leopold is, I presume, in hospital. Another police court case tomorrow, eh?"

"Not at all," I assured him coolly. "I tried my best to make friends with Mr. Leopold."

He looked at me sharply. I could see that he was suspending judgment.

"I apologized for the trouble I had given him, I thanked him for having seen Miss Essiter to the taxicab, I confided to him the story of her disappearance. I accepted his suggestion that we should do nothing about it for some hours, and I agreed to leave it to him to make the subsequent inquiries. I am to see him again at half past eight this evening in his rooms."

Very slowly indeed a wrinkle came into Martin Hews's protruding forehead.

"It is possible," he murmured incredulously, "that you are not quite a fool? Why did you adopt that attitude?"

"Frankly," I replied, "because I felt perfectly certain that the obvious one would be a mistake. I preferred Mr. Leopold to believe that I accepted his story and did not connect him with Miss Essiter's disappearance. I thought that, by keeping in touch with him, I might learn something."

"And you are seeing him again tonight?"

"That is so, sir. We shook hands at parting, and while he went, at my suggestion, to the hotel office to make inquiries for himself, I stole a letter from his overcoat pocket."

"You are beginning to interest me curiously," my employer confided, with a little curl of the lips. "I cannot make up my mind whether it is a development on your part, or whether you are indeed a singular mixture of imbecility and common sense. Show me the letter."

I laid it upon the writing-table. It consisted of two lines only, written upon perfectly plain paper. Martin Hews read out:

"2—39—21-20-18 — 37—18—3—1—1—19—9."

"A communication in cipher!" he murmured. "Well, have you been able to make anything of it, Major?"

"I am afraid not, sir," I admitted. "I thought you might be able to do that."

"You flatter me," was the cynical rejoinder. "Can't you see that this is not a code that lends itself to any of the ordinary methods of deciphering? Did Leopold seem disturbed at having lost it?"

"He certainly did."

"Well, there's only one thing for you to do," he pointed out, handing it back to me. "Leopold must have the key. You are seeing him this evening. Possess yourself of it."

"Thank you for the idea, sir," I replied. "I will see what I can do."

CHAPTER XVIII

MARTIN HEWS spoke into one of his telephones. In a few seconds, a hard-faced woman made her appearance. Martin Hews handed her the key.

"Bring the young lady here," he ordered.

The woman accepted the key in silence. He leaned back in his chair.

"We must make up our minds, Major," he went on, "whether it is possible for me to make any further use of you. The purpose for which I engaged you was to watch the West End of London, gaining entry, so far as you could, into such quasi-fashionable haunts as might be accessible to Joseph, while my gangsters tightened the cordon around him in the East End. I know to a few hundred yards," he continued, "where Joseph's East End headquarters are. I am not sure that I could not narrow them down to a single street, but the fox has to be there before I dare stop the holes, and the fox very seldom ventures near nowadays. It's the West End that's calling to him, Major. I have an idea that in that part of town with which he is not so familiar, he sometimes loses that cunning that enables him to steal about the sewers of East London untouched."

He was silent for a few minutes, scowling at the opposite wall.

"One false move on our part," he reflected, "and we should have to begin all over again. I have a good man there whom you have never met and never will meet. Yardsley tells me that he is aching to cast his net. I hold him back. I want a certainty. I want to see Joseph where escape is not possible—not in the hands of the police; he'd wriggle away from them, somehow—I want to see him with a bullet through his heart and the glaze of death in his eyes. I had hopes of you, Owston, in the West End. Joseph has been too clever for us. He has cut the ground away from under your feet."

"I disagree, sir," I objected firmly. "The Blue Skies isn't the only night club in London, and I have friends of my own whom I could look up, now that I have the means, who could get me into a dozen. As to those evening parties I am willing to take my risk of a snub. There were half a dozen more cards of invitation this morning. If I go anywhere where I am not received, I will make the best of it. Remember, too, I have not quarreled with Mr. Leopold."

"That," Martin Hews admitted, "may probably be your salvation. Let us refresh our memory concerning him."

From a drawer of his desk he drew out a volume and studied two pages. At the bottom of one was a small photograph. He held the book out to me.

"Your friend, I think."

"That is the man," I assented.

Martin Hews read carefully from beginning to end what was evidently some sort of a dossier. Then he pushed the book away.

"Leopold's career," he confided, "has points of interest. In his younger days, he was a suspected I. D. B. and had to leave Africa at a moment's notice. He was also tried for murder, and there seems to have been no doubt that he and two of his associates really did shoot the man to whom the Reitzvontein Mine belonged, and by a fraudulently signed agreement became the sole owners of the property, instead of holding only a tenth share. His later enterprises are connected with the floating of various doubtful companies, and his reputation in the city is not what it was. At the same time, he appears to be rich, and spends a great deal of money, although the mine is no longer a paying concern. He would come into touch with Joseph quite naturally on this I.D.B. business, and there is not the slightest reason that I can see why he should not be connected with him at present. That is for us to discover."

[illegible] they're after. Good-by and good luck to you!"

He started off with more courage than I had expected. I stepped into the vortex.

The confusion of the scene was beyond description. The courtyard was blocked with taxicabs and cars filled with men and women in evening dress, shrieking to the drivers to get away at any cost. Along the pavements, the raiders were still streaming, some of them making direct for the hotel, others flinging open the doors of cars and taxicabs, dragging out the occupants and forcing them to enter or re-enter the restaurant. Resistance was useless, and men and women were being herded into the entrance hall like sheep.

I joined one of the parties, but directly I had passed through the swing doors I realized how difficult my task was to be. The system of the raid was clear. The guests were being driven into the main restaurant, where there semed to be at least a hundred and fifty raiders. Along the dancing-floor were rows of brown leather bags, and into these fell a constant stream of gems, torn from the wrists and necks of shrieking women, and an occasional morocco pocketbook. As soon as one bag was full, it was carried to the Embankment entrance, and an empty one brought.

I permitted myself only a few seconds in which to watch this amazing spectacle—then I turned my attention to my own difficulties. I had to reach the private offices, but between me and them were the reception desks, where there were evidences of a very fierce fight. Upon the floor were a score of bodies—one of them of a clerk whom I had known, but mostly, apparently, of marauders. Here the most unexpected resistance had been encounterd from the company of suave-looking, well-dressed young men, mostly foreigners, who were responsible for the coming and going of the visitors. Behind the desks, seven or eight of them were crouching. Even as I stood there, wondering how to join them, a score of marauders came through the windows and flung themselves into the fray. Their leader stopped abruptly, seemed almost to lean upon the little stab of red flame, and spun round, shot dead from the cashier's desk. The second man followed him, but the third and fourth, advancing from my end, almost reached their destination. I managed to dispose of both of them, however, chiefly owing to the unexpectedness of my attack, and, taking my chance from the defenders, vaulted the desk that had been in danger and came down among them.

A bullet flicked my ear, and I dropped on to my knees just in time to escape another.

CHAPTER XXVI

I WAS aching to rush for the office, through the glass doors of which I could see Bretzgel, the manager of the hotel, standing with an automatic in his hand, but it seemed to me that the situation here was too dangerous to leave. One of the clerks had just been shot through the shoulder, and three or four of the marauders were perilously near. I took the place of the wounded man, but action of any sort was difficult, as only a few yards behind the raiders was a screaming phalanx of guests, struggling to escape. All the time the marauders were creeping closer, and one of them, half-feinting at the next desk, made a sudden leap forward at mine. He slipped, however, upon the smooth surface, and I sent him smashing to the floor. The man who had been preparing to take his place thought better of it and took shelter behind a pillar, from which he fired a wicked, but ineffective, shot at me.

There was a moment's lull. I crept to the office door. Mr. Bretzgel, on guard, with half a dozen of the staff, drew the bolts and let me in.

"You had word from Mr. Hews that I was coming?" I said to Bretzgel.

Bretzgel nodded. "Where did all this riff-raff come from?" he gasped. "And where are the police?"

"Joseph's gang from the East End," I told him briefly. "The police are after them, three hundred strong. They'll be here any minute. What about the safe?"

I was let into the secrets of the room. The ordinary safe stood there, portentous, to all appearances unassailable. The assistant manager, however, lifted a rug, pressed a button and disclosed a small vault.

"No time for receipts," he said. "Drop your treasure in. We know all about it."

I laid the Buddha among rolls of notes and cases of jewelry and stood up. Suddenly I felt the urge of battle upon me.

"Got any cartridges, sir, for a number four automatic?" I asked.

Bretzgel gave me a pocketful of clips. "Better stay here," he advised, "We shall probably need you badly enough."

"You won't, I assured him. "I know something about this gang. They're planning to make off by the Embankment, and it's my belief that they're edging that way already. Four fellows at the desks are holding their own, and you'll have the place full of police soon. I'm for the restaurant."

They let me out of the office, and I crept into the hall and made a run for the front stairs. A large number of guests were being driven from the Embankment entrance, and some of them were making some show of resistance. One man in particular was fighting furiously to cover the retreat of a small group of women. Two of the raiders he shot deliberately.

I shouted encouragement and started across the room. The man who had been fighting so gallantly swung round toward me. His face and shirt-front were blood-stained, his collar and tie were hanging loose. The automatic in his hand was smoking. He was standing a little way from the others, gasping for breath. I recognised him—recognized him with the greatest thrill of surprise I had ever felt. The man who was fighting the raiders so gallantly was Mr. X.

The fighting had surged to another part of the room before I had recovered sufficiently from my surprise to embark upon any definite course of action. A little affair closer at hand, during the course of which I received a nasty scratch on the cheek, occupied my attention for several minutes. When I was free to look around again, I saw that Mr. X was still in the thick of the fighting, and on the outskirts, also presenting a bold front, was Mr. Leopold. I watched them for several moments.

Suddenly I understood the whole business. Mr. X. was going from table to table, wherever the women were wearing the most wonderful jewelry, and his men followed his lead. When he used his gun, as often as not the man at whom he had fired went rolling to the ground, but, in less than a minute, he was up again. I watched Leopold. He was playing the same game—always seeming to be encouraging the defenders, always seeming to be facing the marauders.

I began to move now slowly toward the section of the room where he was engaged. A minor fracas detained me a few moments, and then I braced myself for what seemed to me might be the adventure of the evening. I slipped fresh cartridges into my gun and faced Mr. X. He had grown more audacious, for half the lamps seemed to have been overturned, and pandemonium reigned everywhere. I saw him point to a table where a woman and two elderly men were seated. I even heard him whisper in the ear of one of the raiders:

"Down the front of her dress—glinters. Make sure of them.".

Then he flung himself into the fray with apparent fury. The woman, shrieking, fell back in her chair. The man who had attacked her held her for a moment by the throat, while he ripped open her dress and drew out a handful of magnificent diamonds. Her two escorts were powerless; the one who had attempted resistance had been knocked down by another raider who had been waiting to convey the jewels to his bag. Mr. X. plunged heroically in, fired his gun at short range, and the man with the diamonds in his hand reeled over and lay for a moment quite still, while his companion snatched at the gems and darted off with them, the woman's shrieks ringing out. I went up to the raider who lay on the ground and kicked him. He opened his eyes in surprise, and I swung around to find myself face to face with Mr. X.

"Well met, my young friend," he mocked. "And now?"

"And now this," I answered, and let fly for his face, only to find myself almost over-balanced, as he slipped nimbly on one side with all the agility of a light-weight prize-fighter.

He laughed derisively.

"Clumsy as usual, my dear Major!" he exclaimed. "Why beat the air trying for me?"

I had recovered my balance with falling and I kept my temper.

"You are doing marvelous work, aren't you, Joseph, I mocked him, "with your sham heroism and your blank cartridges?"

He was ever so slightly disturbed—the faintest of frowns only!

"A fool with one eye open!" he murmured. "And talking about one eye, Major, what about the Buddha?"

"Safe," I told him. "Why didn't you come up to seize it? We might have settled this matter between us, once and for all."

The thought of Rachel's pathetic face, of Beatrice still in his power, maddened me, and this time I made no mistake. I struck his wrist such a blow that the gun he had been holding fell to the floor. I snatched it up, and, while he was hesitating, I slipped the cartridges into my pocket.

"We'll see tomorrow," I threatened, "what the hero of tonight was playing at. I have a gun too, Joseph, and my cartridges bite."

"And I have another," he countered, his hand going to his hip like lightning. "Shall we call it quits?"

He was panting a little now, his weapon half-drawn, barely a foot or two between us. All around, the screaming of women, the smashing of glass, the whole ugly work of the marauders still continued. It seemed to me to matter nothing that I looked into the dark muzzle of Joseph's gun. I had him covered, and my finger itching for its work.

"Tell me where Beatrice Essiter is," I demanded, "or I'll blow the brains out of your head, even if I have to die with you."

He made no reply, but there crept into his face that hideous, damnable smile. Then rage swept me into insanity. I threw my own gun to the ground, sprang at him, snatched his automatic, and sent it clattering across the floor. My fingers clutched his throat. Although his strength amazed me, and even his convulsive efforts to free himself were the movements of a practiced wrestler, I had him, and he knew it. Then, in that breathless moment, I heard another sound—the sound for which I had been listening eagerly a few minutes before, but which now infuriated me. A man came dashing into the restaurant.

"Cops! Ten vans full of them," he shouted, and over he went, shot by a pursuer.

I looked up for a moment, and I paid. I felt a hot breath upon my neck, and Leopold hit me with the butt of his revolver. Joseph had his chance then. He staggered to his feet a ghastly sight, his collar ripped to pieces, the marks of my fingers upon his throat, a queer dark shadow under his eyes. He snatched up his gun. With my left hand I sent Leopold head over heels, stooped for a moment, and once more faced Joseph. Again it was a life for a life between us two, but again I was denied. We were surrounded by plain-clothes police. Above the tumult we could hear the sharp detonation of bombs, and little puffs of green smoke came floating down. Then my enemy amazed me once more. He flung himself into a chair with a great shout of relief, produced a handkerchief and began to mop his face.

"The police at last!" he cried. "It's all right, Leopold, all right, Major. These rascals won't have a dog's chance now."

I stared at him, taken aback. The room was already almost empty of the marauders, except for those who were being hand-cuffed and led away. The main body of the police had rushed on to the entrance hall. Two or three nurses had arrived, followed by men carrying stretchers, and a great many guests who were more frightened than hurt were sitting up once more at their tables, and more were trooping from the place. Mr. X., with a word of apology, poured himself out a glass of wine from the bottle upon the table by his side.

"I hope you have lost nothing, Lady Robinson?" he said.

"My necklace," she sobbed. "They have my necklace. I thought you had shot the man. He went over when you fired, but he got up again. You hit him, I am sure, because he was limping and calling out with pain, but he took the necklace."

I moved a little closer to Mr. X. He edged away from my scrutiny, but he was too late. One side of his face, at any rate, was most amazingly made up, but there was the slightest of cracks in the wax. It might almost have been a human wrinkle, but, slight though it was, I could see the change in the contour of his face. My hand rested as though by accident upon his arm.

"Couldn't we finish our little dispute out on the terrace?" I suggested. "Man to man, and no weapons. What about that?"

My enemy hesitated, and Leopold whispered in his ear.

"Wouldn't explanations of that sort be rather an anticlimax?" Mr. X. asked sweetly. "The end between us is not tonight."

"Why not?" I demanded. "I am going to hand you over to Inspector Bloor."

"You poor fool," he scoffed, "who'll believe you? There are fifty people in the place who would bear witness to my feats of heroism. Besides which, I am established here, well-known—not a penniless adventurer, who was in the police court yesterday morning. To every charge you could bring against me I have a perfect alibi. Come, be reasonable. What is it you want of me?"

"Beatrice Essiter, for one thing."

He shrugged his shoulders.

Bretzgel was coming toward us, his arm in a sling, Bloor by his side.

"Well, gentlemen," he announced, with a smile, "the great raid is at an end. The Inspector has just been explaining to me how it was that he had three hundred police ready armed. They arrived just in time."

"The safes?" I inquired anxiously.

"They blew the office to pieces," he admitted. "They smoked us out, too, but not one of them crossed the threshold of my room. Your little deposit, Major," he confided, "is quite secure. I felt that I must come and thank you two gentlemen," he went on, turning first to Mr. X. and then to me. "In the intervals of our own siege, I saw a good deal of what was passing down here. How you, sir," he concluded, addressing Mr. X., "escaped being shot I can't imagine. You seemed to be in the thick of it all the time. There was a shorter gentleman with you, too—"

"My friend, Leopold," Mr. X. interrupted. "He made for home by the Embankment entrance directly he saw that the trouble was over. Good thing you and I are not so particular, Major."

The man was scarcely human. He looked across at me and laughed.

"Who were the fellows, anyway?" he added.

"The Wolves, they call themselves," Bloor answered curtly. "You've heard of them, perhaps. They're a gang of East End thieves with a wonderful leader who seems, I regret to say, to have escaped tonight."

"I am not sure yet," I muttered, "whether he has escaped."

CHAPTER XXVII

"YOU mean that the leader of the gang is still hiding in the place?" Bloor demanded. "The police are searching every floor."

"Every apartment has been examined," Mr. Bretzgel confided—"even yours, sir, I am afraid," he added, addressing Mr. X.

"Quite right, too," the latter remarked.

"In my report," Bloor said, "I should like to mention the guests who made such a fine fight. Maj. Owston, I know. May I ask this gentleman's name?"

The hotel manager appeared surprised.

"Certainly," he replied, "I thought everyone knew him. This is Mr. Ruben Sams."

"The Argentine millionaire," Bloor murmured.

"Mr. Ruben Sams has a suite here," Bretzgel added, "of which I regret to say, however, he very seldom makes use."

I suppose my bewilderment was obvious to all of them.

"Maj. Owston is a little confused, no doubt," Mr. X. remarked, with a smile. "For some reason he was very curious as to my identity one night lately. By bribing a maitre d'hotel at Claridge's, he discovered that my name at a dinner-party there bore the inscription of 'Mr. X.' Since then he has regarded me with suspicion. The ways of high finance are doubtless unknown to you, Major. For some time, until I collected my board for a new company I am founding, it was very inadvisable that my presence in this country should be known. I often pay visits to foreign capitals under another identity."

"I can quite believe that," I muttered. I drew Bloor to one side. "Bloor," I said earnestly, "that man is no more Ruben Sams than I am."

The Inspector looked at me as thought I had taken leave of my senses.

"I am afraid that's rather a mare's nest, Major," he expostulated. "Ruben Sams is known all the world over. Who did you think he was?"

"Joseph," I declared confidently. "I am not mad, Bloor, and I tell you that man is Joseph."

He looked at me with a profound disbelief.

"Come and have a drink, Major," he suggested. "You have had a rough night of it."

"That," I persisted, "is the man who stood on the lawn and led his men when they attacked Breezeley. He is the man—he admits that—who was entertained as Mr. X. at Claridge's, who took such a malicious interest in Miss Essiter and myself. He is the man who came to my rooms in Down street. He is the man who was seated in the secretary's office at the Blue Skies, who talked to you over the telephone, and, whether you believe it or not, he led the Wolves tonight. He led them from table to table, where the

"I might have a stroke of luck there, sir," I ventured.

"That is possible," he admitted. "No one is so likely to succeed with a clever man as a man whom that clever man believes to be a fool. You're a blunderer, Owston, but you have qualities. I should have given you credit for more common sense than to have accepted the invitation of a stranger to go to a night club while out with my niece. On the other hand, I should never have expected you to have used the discretion you did use when you met the man who was responsible for taking you there. I may still be able to make use of you, Owston. I am not sure for the moment how, but I have an idea. Rachel leans to you as much as to her own men. Something may come of that."

"If I could find your niece and bring her back, sir," I assured him, "I should be quite content to have you chuck me out afterward."

"If you could do that," he acknowledged, "there is no telling what might happen, for you would relieve me of a great anxiety. I like to live with a clear mind and a clear conscience. You may think that I run great risks. I do not. I have one of the best lawyers in the world to protect me and to see that I evade the penalties of my necessarily sometimes illegal actions. I have at least a dozen fighting assassins to protect my person, to watch me and deal with those who would do me harm. My house here is, since that accident the other night, impregnable. No one can reach this apartment in which I am, against my will. I live here in joy, because I live with more of the world's treasures to worship than any human being knows of. In a secret chamber, Major, I have pictures—stolen pictures, many of them—from most of the great galleries of Europe—some of them stolen at my behest, all of them joy for my days, warmth for my life, food for my soul. But I have a secret—a secret only two people know. One is seldom very far from the end of my revolver; the other is my niece. That is why I want her back."

I stared at him fixedly. It was hard to conceive of egoism so absolute. He went on again.

"In this matter of the return of my niece, you will be able to help. You probably are one of those human beings who make a special appeal to women. I see that there are lines underneath your eyes today, a grim set about your mouth. You are disturbed about my niece, perhaps."

"I am more than disturbed about Miss Essiter," I assured him. "I have not seen a great deal of her, naturally, but I have the greatest admiration and respect—if I dared to say so, I would add, notwithstanding our brief acquaintance, affection for your niece."

Martin Hews laughed.

"Excellent!" he murmured. "Several millions my niece will probably inherit, some day, unless I found a museum, Maj. Owston. A young lady to inspire affection, without a doubt!"

There was the usual summons of a visitor demanding admittance. Martin Hews pressed the knob. The door opened, and Rachel came storming in. Her outburst of anger was short-lived, and the words seemed to die away almost upon her lips. Her voice had been raised and she had evidently come with the idea of making herself disagreeable. Before she had finished a couple of sentences, however, she broke down. Martin Hews pointed to a chair. His manner had become very grave and subdued. A stranger might have believed that he was really sympathetic.

"Young lady," he confided, "I have bad news for you. I beg that you will prepare yourself for it. The news will distress you, I am sure, but there is a redeeming feature about it. It will give you your liberty."

"Well, that's something, at any rate!" the girl exclaimed. "I suppose it's Jim? Have the cops got him?"

"Jim Donkin is dead," he announced. "His wound gave him great trouble on board ship and an operation became necessary. I received a wireless message from the captain this morning."

"So that's that!" the girl muttered.

"I was under a promise to Donkin to give you shelter here and protection from Joseph. I have kept my word. At his death my responsibility ceases. You are free to go when you choose."

"Well, that will be now," the girl declared, without hesitation. "Poor old Jim," she added, with a sudden break in her voice.

Martin Hews looked across at her with an air of gentle curiosity. There seemed to be nothing that I could say.

"Poor old Jim!" she repeated. "I'm sorry. He had to go, though. I knew very well that Joseph was the better man. Joseph was his master, although Jim did steal a march on him once. Joseph would have had me in the end, anyway."

Martin Hews sighed.

"Joseph is a very troublesome fellow," he observed.

"Has he been spoiling any more deals?" the girl asked, with a shadow of a smile upon her tear-stained face.

"He has done something a great deal more offensive to me," was the grave reply. "Show the young lady the note you received this afternoon, Owston."

I handed it across to her.

"What's this mean?" she demanded suspiciously, taking it into her hand but not at once reading it.

"A great deal of trouble for us," Martin Hews acknowledged. "Keeping my bargain with Donkin has cost me dearly. My niece, Miss Essiter, whom you have seen here, has disappeared."

"Get on with it," Rachel enjoined eagerly. "Do you mean that Joseph has copped her?"

"My niece was dining in the West End with Maj. Owston here last evening, and afterward they visited a night club. Maj. Owston was inveigled into the secretary's room and declares that he was drugged. At any rate, he woke up in a police cell, and my niece has disappeared."

The girl was mercurial in her emotions. Her momentary spasm of grief seemed to be forgotten. She threw herself back in her chair, and shook with laughter.

"Bravo, Jo!" she exclaimed. "That's what you get for cooping me up here."

Then, for the first time, she seemed to remember the letter in her hand. She read it through. Its sense appeared to steal into her comprehension gradually. She dropped it as though stung.

"So that's it, is it?" she muttered viciously. "'A creature of the slums and alleys,' am I? We'll see!"

"Joseph is probably holding my niece as a hostage until I give you up," said Martin Hews. "That time has now arrived. You can go to him at once, tell him that Donkin is dead, and that you are free. You can let him know also, if you like, that I think it is almost time we stopped cutting one another's throats. I never part with a friend while he is alive. Donkin was my man, and I stuck to him. With Donkin dead, things have changed. He knows whom to approach if he wishes to get into touch with me. You can tell him I'll give him thirty thousand pounds for the Borghese Medallions. He won't be able to show them even in America for years to come."

It is my belief that the girl had scarcely heard a word he said. Her eyes were fixed upon that sheet of paper. It was only the silence when he had finished that at last seemed to distract her from it.

"So I can go?" she said.

My employer nodded.

She left the room. My employer watched her with expressionless face. As soon as the door was closed, his cheeks were puffed out, his lips parted. He grinned across at me.

"Did you see how I handled her?" he demanded. "Got her on the raw. She's not going to look about her very much. She wants a word or two with Joseph. If they give her the chance, Major, I shouldn't be at all surprised if she didn't pay me a visit, or you, before many hours are passed. Do you know, I am feeling quite reconciled toward your stupidity. I am not sure that this temporary separation from my dear niece may not bring about our greatly desired end. A furious woman has been the ruin of greater men than Joseph."

CHAPTER XIX

ON THE way to London, Rachel sat curled up in a corner seat of the first-class carriage, a scowl upon her face. She scarcely took the trouble to reply to my few efforts at conversation. She had all the appearance of a woman in pain or nursing evil thoughts. Only once her lips moved; and she was evidently talking to herself. I fancied then that she repeated that unhappy sentence—"a creature of the slums and alleys." She showed no interest in the familiar places we passed; neither did her liberty seem to be affording her any particular pleasure. She watched our progress into that mass of life around Bethnal Green Junction without movement or any sign of excitement. As we drew near Liverpool street, I was obliged to speak to her.

"What about money?" I asked.

"Keep it," she answered. "I have plenty."

She rose to her feet, shook out her skirts, smoothed her hair.

"You wait," she said. "You may get a surprise before long. You're after Joseph. And you can't find him. You don't know what he's like. You don't know whether he's a gentleman or a coster. He's clever, Joseph is."

"Why did you leave him?" I asked.

"I did it in a [illegible]," I [illegible]. "I do things sometimes like that." I'm always afraid that some day—"

She broke off, realizing the interest with which I was listening.

"Talking a bit, ain't I? Never mind. No harm done."

I leaned forward. We were drawn up on a great tangle of tracks just outside the station, lights flashing on each side, and trains everywhere coming and passing.

"Rachel," I said, "listen to me for a moment. I want to get Joseph, if I can. That's part of my job, but more than that, by a long way, I want to make sure that Beatrice Essiter comes to no harm. I want her back again safely. Do you get me?"

She nodded.

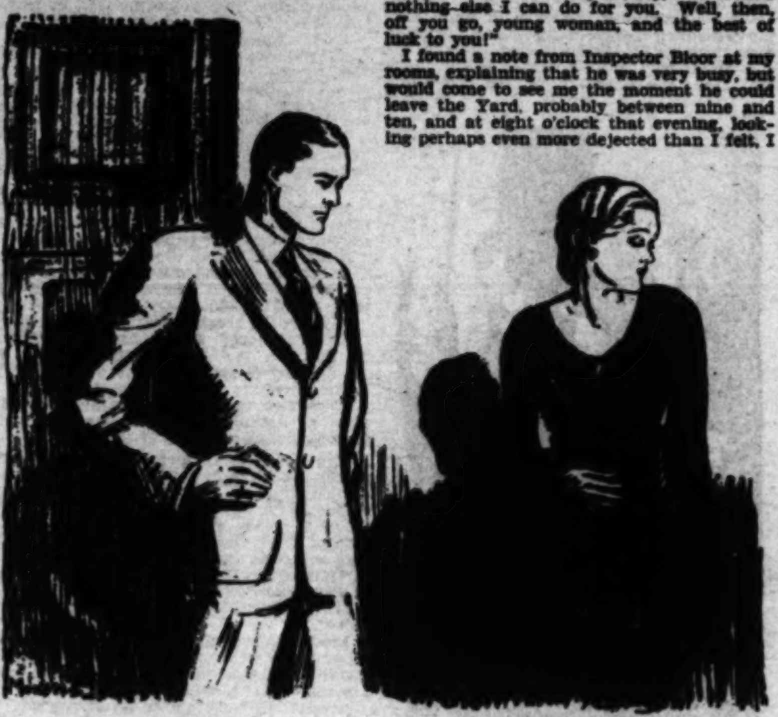
"I'm not going to follow you," I continued. I don't care where you go. I want to find Beatrice Essiter, and, after that, I don't care what happens."

She sat up, and her eyes sparkled.

"You're the first man I've met, anyway," she declared, "who put the girl before the job."

"You haven't lived long," I told her curtly, "and you haven't lived very widely. Anyway, you know the truth now, I added, as we glided into Liverpool Street Station. "You say you don't want any money, and there's nothing else I can do for you. Well, then, off you go, young woman, and the best of luck to you!"

I found a note from Inspector Bloor at my rooms, explaining that he was very busy, but would come to see me the moment he could leave the Yard, probably between nine and ten, and at eight o'clock that evening, looking perhaps even more dejected than I felt, I was ushered into Mr. Leopold's luxurious suite in Berkeley street. My host, wearing a magnificent plum-colored dressing-gown, greeted me warmly.



"Beatrice, I am the clumsiest beast!" I exclaimed.

"The cocktails at once, Maurice," he ordered, addressing the man who had admitted me. "Sit down, Major. Well, how goes it?"

"Badly," I admitted.

"No word of the young lady?"

"Nothing. We have an idea, though, as to what has become of her, and her uncle is furious. He has turned me out of the house and given me the sack, and I don't blame him."

"Dear, dear me, that's bad! You say that you have a clew though, as to what has become of the young lady. What do you mean by that?"

"Not exactly a clew," I explained. "We have had an anonymous letter from a man who has a grudge against Mr. Martin Hews, from which we gathered that, in some way or other, she has fallen into his hands. What it all means I scarcely understand. I have only known Mr. Hews a week or so, and the whole thing is a mystery to me."

"Sounds as though it might be a mystery to any one," Mr. Leopold observed. "Well, here's better luck, Major. I think you'll find that as good a cocktail as there is in London."

The cocktail was certainly good, and potent enough, as I discovered from my first sip.

"I'm terribly sorry about last night," my host continued. "How many drinks did we have in the office? Was it one or two?"

"I have no idea," I confessed. "Of course, it sounds ridiculous, but the story I told before the magistrate was practically the truth, so far as my memory goes. I just remember stepping in there, feeling a little giddy, and then everything seemed to go dark."

"Just as though all the lights had gone out, eh? It was exactly the same with me the last time I was bowled over. Well, now, tell me, Major, is there anything I can do to help? You've been to Claridge's again, I suppose?"

"I was there half an hour ago. They have heard nothing of Miss Essiter."

"Would you like me to telephone to Scotland Yard or step down there?"

I shook my head gloomily.

"Very good of you, sir," I replied, "but I don't think I should do anything of that sort for a day or two. Of course, there's always a chance that Miss Essiter may have joined up with some friends. Brenceley Mansion's a dull place for any girl."

"My own idea, [illegible]," Mr. Leopold agreed, [illegible]. "[illegible] a fuss before it's necessary. Have you any clew you can give me as to who this person may be who sent the anonymous letter?"

"Not the slightest in the world," I admitted. "As a matter of fact, he's the man we've been trying so hard to find.

"A gentleman?"

"Oh, no," I answered hastily. "He's the head of a gang of roughs down in the East End somewhere. I shouldn't think he's ever set foot in Bond street in his life."

"Head of a gang of roughs," Mr. Leopold mused, his narrow little eyes scrutinizing me keenly. "Well, the police ought to know something about him then, oughtn't they?"

I appeared to hesitate for a moment.

"Mr. Hews doesn't care much about the police," I confided.

Mr. Leopold grinned. Every moment, he seemed to be becoming more at his ease with me.

"I don't wonder at it at all, Maj. Owston. If you'd been with that scarecrow many more months, you'd probably have understood the reason well enough."

I permitted my glass to be replenished. My host glanced at the clock.

"If you'll just excuse me for a moment," he begged, "I'll finish dressing, and then I can drop you anywhere you want to go. I'm dining at the Hyde Park Hotel at a quarter to nine. Help yourself to anything you want. The cigarettes are on the table."

He disappeared into an inner room, and from that to an apartment beyond. I strolled over to the table and let my fingers linger in a cigarette-box. The details of the room were easy to assimilate. The writing-table was of ormolu and ebony and had only three drawers. They were wide open. The two cabinets were filled with china, top and bottom. The rest of the room was mostly taken up by bookcases. The obvious depository for papers or any form of valuables was unmistakably—almost flagrantly—evident. Let into a panel of the wall was a safe so cleverely concealed that only the keyhole and the slight difference of color at the hinges betrayed its presence . . . .

In the distant room, I could hear Mr. Leopold talking to his valet. Anything hidden in that safe was, so far as I was concerned, as secure as though it were in the vaults of the Bank of England. It was something, however, to know where the code book of which I was in search was likely to be kept. I strolled back toward my chair, looking at the titles of the books in the cases, wondering what Mr. Leopold's tastes in literature might really be. There were some very beautiful volumes, a surprising edition of Daudet, bound in white calf, Guy de Maupassant's short stories flaming in orange, green and purple, an edition de luxe of Mademoiselle de Maupin, and then the only volume evidently taken out recently—an old book, bound in limp leather, hastily replaced, and still projecting beyond its fellows. I bent down to look at the title and resumed my seat, smiling to myself. The idea of Mr. Leopold indulging in half an hour's solitude each day with the Bible amused me.

"Well, young fellow," he exclaimed, as he rejoined me, the last word in perfumed and correctly tailored masculinity. "If you're ready, I must get along. How are you spending the evening, may I ask?"

"I'm not quite sure," I confided, as we passed out of the door and stepped into the lift. "I did think of going to the club, but I decided it was rather early to face it."

"What club?" he demanded.

I told him, and he was visibly impressed.

"My dear Major," he protested, "don't dream of going there until this thing has blown over. Take my advice and keep away."

"Well, then," I said, "I shall probably dine in my rooms. I have a few little matters to clear up, and there may be a message about Miss Essiter."

"Don't you worry too much, young fellow," Mr. Leopold advised me earnestly. You're doing the right thing, I am sure, in not making too much fuss about it. I expect you'll find the young lady had just slipped off for a bit of liberty."

I refrained from kicking him with difficulty, and we glided smoothly off.

An idea came to me as I turned the key in the lock and crossed the threshold. I sprinted up the stairs, two at a time, and, directly I had reached my sitting-room, I rang the bell.

"Smart," I asked a little breathlessly, as soon as he appeared, "have you a Bible?"

"Have I—a—I beg your pardon, sir, what was it you said?"

"A Bible," I repeated. "You or your wife—anyone. I want a Bible."

He hurried from the room and was away almost ten minutes. When he returned, he carried a large volume.

"It belonged to the missus's mother," he announced, placing it upon the table.

I seized it eagerly, and carried it to my writing-table. I had only just brought out the cipher letter I had stolen from Mr. Leopold when Smart returned.

"Mr. Bloor to see you, sir," he announced.

CHAPTER XX

FORTUNATELY, my evening meal was equal to the demands made upon it by the arrival of Inspector Bloor.

"I got your note, Major," he said. "So you found a spot of trouble last night?"

I told him everything.

"Clever," he conceded. "And suggestive, too. All goes to prove your theory that Joseph's turned West-Ender. They don't want you in these parts, evidently, and they took the cleverest means of stopping it. You're banned from the Blue Skies now, and from all the affiliated night clubs where we fancy that Joseph sometimes meets his friends. I, [illegible] I don't understand it, and [illegible]

Bloor [illegible] on silently for a moment or two.

"I see your point of view," he admitted, "but look here, Major. The lads are there, and we want them. I don't see how he can trap us. He hasn't a very high opinion of our intelligence, remember, as he has proved more than once. Perhaps he thinks I am fool enough to try and bring Jo Clooney and Riswell in with a dozen men behind me. We're not falling into any trap of that sort. The men we want are there, and I'm going after them with two to one in numbers on our side. What Joseph's idea is in bringing them all together like this I'll admit I can't imagine, but, knowing they are there, we can't be such fools as to leave them alone. There's no mining, or anything of that sort, I can promise you. There's nothing going on there we haven't heard about."

"Well, here's good luck to both of us," I said, as he prepared to take his leave. "And, Bloor, I don't mind having a small bet with you."

"What's that?"

"I bet you a bottle of the best," I told him, "that I see Joseph before you do."

"Easy drinking," he laughed. "I'm on!"

I found Mr. Isaacs waiting for me outside his establishment in Grafton street. He was carrying a brown paper parcel under his arm, which I rightly guessed to be the iron coffer.

"Well, young man," he said, "you are sent for my protection. You look strong, though your habits may be bad. Will you begin by carrying this coffer? You will find it heavy."

I took it from him, and a moment later his motor-car arrived.

"As to those bad habits of mine," I begged, as we took our seats, "don't believe all you read in the papers. Are we up against Joseph, do you think, in this little enterprise of ours? Shall we get the Buddha, or do you imagine he has been before us?"

Isaacs chuckled.

"I do not worry. The statuette, even though it is the world's wonder, has not the value Joseph wants. I think we buy that statuette, all right. How much money have you?"

"More than I usually carry about with me," I admitted. "I have a draft for five hundred thousand pounds."

"I buy for less than that," he declared contemptuously. "I told our friend already over the telephone that I knew of another One-eyed Buddha.'

We arrived at the Milan punctually at eleven oclock, but we were not allowed to ascend at once to Mr. Tul-Kak's apartment. The concierge invited us to take seats in the little lounge while he sent a special messenger upstairs. Some impulse—I am not naturally a curious person—prompted me to leave my comfortable chair and look through the glass partition into the grill. Within a few yards of me, at a table alone, sat Mr. X . . .

He might almost have been expecting me, so unruffled was his composure, so easy that faint, sardonic smile. I called into being all my powers of perception. His black-gray hair loked natural enough. I traced the wrinkles on his high forehead. I took note of the small ears, thinly cut nose, lips straight and hard, yet wonderfully mobile. I traced that upward line of his mouth, and I appreciated to the full the square, firm chin. From a sculptor's point of view, tabulating his features one by one, the man should have been good-looking. Studying him as I studied him then, in what I believe was almost a moment of revelation, it seemed to me that there was a curious lack of vital qualities, even in his best features. It was like the sculptor's plaster cast of a face, rather than the face itself, but more than ever, as I stood there looking, the obstinate conviction gathered strength in my mind that I was indeed looking into the face of my enemy.

I strolled over to where Isaacs was sitting. My fingers, as I tried to light a cigarette, were shaking. My voice was scarcely steady.

"Tell me, Mr. Isaacs," I asked, "have you ever seen Joseph?"

"Why that question at this moment, Maj. Owston?"

"Because the man whom I believe to be Joseph is seated in the grill just inside there, two tables from the glass partition."

Isaacs rose from his chair and walked toward the place I had vacated. When he came back, his eyes seemed to have sunk a little farther into his head. He had lost something of his fine poise. I had no time then, however, to ask him a single question. A tall and solemn Chinaman, having the air of an ambassador, was approaching us. He bowed to each in turn.

"Mr. Tul-Kak very glad to see you," he announced. "Please to come this way."

We mounted in the lift to the fourth floor, traversed the long corridor, and paused before the door of the end suite of rooms. Outside, another Chinaman was standing, a most ferocious-looking fellow. The door was opened in response to our ring, by an Englishman who looked very like a police sergeant in mufti.

"This way, gentlemen," he invited, throwing open the door of the sitting-room.

Mr. Tul-Kak, who had been standing with his back to the window, bowed formally and advanced. He was a small, sallow-faced man, carefully dressed in European clothes. He waved us to chairs.

"I am Tul-Kak," he said, as soon as we had disposed of ourselves, and our guide had taken up a position facing the door. "I have with me the treasure. With which of you do I talk?"

"I am the dealer," Isaacs replied. "Let me see your treasure."

Tul-Kak moved to the sideboard, upon which [illegible] There were three locks to it, each one of which Tul-Kak opened with a separate key. Inside was a lining of deep violet plush, and in the middle of it, reclining there with its one eye fixed upon the ceiling, was the statuette. Tul-Kak went down on his knees for a moment and bowed his head. Then he rose up, took the statuette reverently from its place, laid it in the palms of his hands, and brought it over to Isaacs.

"Two thousand years," he confided, in a voice which trembled slightly, "have passed, and no man's hands, save the Priests of the Inner Order, have touched it. Millions of worshipers have bent the knee at a distance and passed on. Now the days of faith are finished. If curses could kill, I am a dead man already, and, as it is, the knives of thousands are sharpened for my life. But I, Tul-Kak, am a plain merchant, although my forefathers were priests. Take the One-eyed Buddha into your hands, Isaacs, and buy or return."

Isaacs loked down at it through his horn-rimed eyeglass, turning it this way and that. I fancied that he was seeking some opportunity for criticism and failing to find it. He passed it to me, and, strangely enough, I felt a spark of almost the same reverence as had inspired Tul-Kak. Yet as I looked at at it, I felt a queer sense of trouble. The sightless eye met mine for a minute. It seemed to me there was almost a threat in its cold stare and in the curve of the mouth. I handed it back.

"It is wonderful," I murmured.

"You buy?" Tul-Kak asked Isaacs.

"I buy for my master, if we can afford."

"I do not know that word," was the frigid rejoinder. "It is strange to me. You buy—you pay me five hundred thousand pounds."

Isaacs made a motion to take up his hat. Tul-Kak turned to the man who had received us down-stairs.

"You will telephone," he directed, "to number—"

Then I, in my stupidity, made one of the worst breaks. I was afraid that I saw the statuette slipping away, and I interrupted, without waiting to hear the number.

"Mr. Isaacs forgets," I said eagerly, "that our friend does not bargain. Neither, in this instance, does Mr. Martin Hews. Here is a draft upon the Bank of England for five hundred thousand pounds."

I laid it upon the table. Isaacs rocked back and forth, seemingly on the point of bursting into tears.

"The status is sold," Tul-Kak announced calmly, as he picked up the draft and thrust it into his pocket. "There must be no writing pass. You have brought a coffer?"

I tore the brown paper from the iron box. The statuette was placed first in its own cabinet, then inside the coffer, and secured.

"Where do you go with that?" its vendor asked. "No longer in mine the care, but the buyer of the Buddha buys danger with it. How far do you travel tonight?"

"Nowhere," I confided. "Martin Hews's instructions are that we deposit it in the safe of the hotel until tomorrow. After that it is no longer any concern of ours."

"He is wise," Tul-Kak declared. "Myself, I think that the Buddha is safer in anybody else's hands than mine. When I left, the whispering throughout Asia was like a wind in the palmtrees. Attempts were made upon me—seven in all. I escaped. Here in London, one is safer than anywhere. Yet, do not forget, that there are those whose priests promise them eternal life for what you have in your possession. Men die easily, believing that promise."

Isaacs shivered with fear, but I saw at that moment no great cause for alarm.

"You will permit your attendants," I asked, "to go with us to the office?"

"They are at your disposal."

Tul-Kak gave brief instructions to both the man who had been outside the door, and to the Englishman. Then he bade us farewell.

"You yourself had better remember," I [illegible]

Tul-Kak smiled at me. He spoke soothingly, as one to a child.

"For many years," he confided, "I have slept always with treasures around me. The thieves of the night have not great courage when it is only money they seek. Sometimes, however, there is fanaticism to deal with."

He bowed us away from the door. We started down the corridor, Isaacs and I side by side, I carrying the coffer, the Chinaman who had been custodian of the door in front, the Englishman behind. So we reached the first bend. Five seconds later, I was engaged in one of the fiercest struggles of my life.

CHAPTER XXV

THEY came at us as we turned the corner—three of them only, but vicious-looking fellows, and they carried knives. We were walking stealthily, but they still had the advantage of the surprise, and there was no time to draw a gun.

Isaacs, as was natural enough, for he was an old man, turned and fled with great lumbering strides, making for the room from which we had come, and both the Chinaman and I were successful in evading the first rush. Our English guide, however, was not so lucky. I found afterward that he had been supplied through some agency, and though he would probably have been ready enough to fight in an ordinary way, his attitude toward the statuette and our precautions was that it was all bunkum. He was, in fact, actually looking behind him when he turned the corner. He paid for his temerity with many months in the hospital, for the first man to spring out left his knife quivering in his shoulder, and the Chinaman and I were faced with the three of them.

I narrowly missed putting my own assailant out of action with my first blow. He half-ducked, however, and my fist, which should have got him on the jaw, slithered along the side of his face. He went reeling back, but I had no time to follow up my advantage, for I had to drop the coffer to defend myself against the second man, whose right arm I was in time to grip. The Chinaman had leaped out of the way for a moment, only to spring forward with a knife of his own, and he was such a ferocious-looking fellow as he hurled himself upon his assailant that the latter lost his nerve and gave way. For a second, then, I thought that it was all over, for the third man had not yet succeeded in wresting his knife back from the Englishman's body, and my own immediate opponent was still dazed by the blow I had got in. I tugged at my automatic and got it free. I could have ended the whole thing, then and there, by shooting my man—a thing I should have been justified in doing, as he had attacked me with his knife—but I shouted instead, to give him a chance.

"Throw down your knife," I ordered.

He obeyed. The Chinaman had come to close grips with his assailant, and they went over and over, down the short flight of stairs leading to the floor below, the Chinaman on top. At that moment, it was practically over. I took a step forward to possess myself of the knife, which lay on the carpet between me and my special opponent, and then, with a thrill of horror I remembered the third man, who had disappeared. Almost as I swung round to look for him I felt arms encircling my neck. A blow upon my wrist sent my revolver clattering to the ground, and the fingers of a long, cruel hand searched for my windpipe.

I struggled like a madman, but, in the midst of my agonized efforts, I saw the man who had been at my mercy run forward with a yell of triumph, pick up his knife, and move toward me. I was holding my own against the fierce grip of that third man, but I could do no more than that, for the moment. I was helpless against the uplifted knife of the man hovering over me. That single second's forgetfulness seemed to have brought me death.

My last effort, made with all the strength I [illegible] against that knife glittering within a few feet of my chest. Death seemed very close at that moment, and death it must have been, safe for what certainly was a most amazing happening. I felt a scorching on the cheek, the warm blood rolling down my neck but a miracle had occurred. The man in front, in the act of striking, his knife poised, the lust of murder in his eyes, went backward like a log, with a small hole in his forehead. I staggered around. Mr. Tul-Kak was standing behind me, one barrel of his ponderous, old-fashioned revolver smoking. He was pointing it at the man who had been holding me from behind, as though uncertain whether or not to deal with him in the same manner. The adventure was over, however.

The Chinaman came smiling up the stairs, wiping his knife upon the inside of his robe and leaving behind him a crumpled form upon the landing. The only one of our assailants who was comparatively unhurt was the man who had nearly throttled me, and I believe that Tul-Kak would have shot him, had I not stayed his arm, with the help of which brief despite the man took a flying leap down the stairs and disappeared.

"You saved my life, sir," I told Tul-Kak. "You don't want to shoot that man like a rabbit. He'll be hung some day—a much better end for him. There'll be trouble enough, as it is."

"I am happy to have been of service," Tul-Kak said politely. "A bullet would have been well placed in the body of that ruffian, but I obey your wishes. Isaacs, the dealer, waits for you by the lift. He has gone the other way round. Place the coffer in the safe of the hotel. Your august friend has paid me for my Buddha the price of a prince in the manner of a prince, and I desire him to have it."

I saw the common sense of Mr. Tul-Kak's arguments, and, without further hesitation, I prepared to depart.

I had no occasion to ring for the lift, for, when I reached its starting place, I found it already there, the gates open, Mr. Isaacs upon the seat, muttering excitedly to himself, and the pale-faced attendant peering through the grille and listening to the sounds below.

"You have held the treasure, young man?" Mr. Isaacs gasped.

"I have held it all right. Why don't we start?"

"There has been bloodshed!" Isaacs groaned.

"Lots of it," I answered, "and there will be more, if we don't get away from here. What the mischief's wrong down below?" I asked the attendant.

"I dont know, sir," he admitted, his teeth chattering with fear. "There's some sort of a riot, but what it's all about I don't know. I was waiting on the ground floor for the bell to ring when half a dozen young fellows—they were all wearing dinner coats, but they looked like regular East-Enders—pushed their way through the door and made for the grill. Peters—that's our concierge—tried to stop them getting at the telephones—just asked what their business might be, as civil as possible—and one of them shoots the poor old chap. He's lying right by the counter. Listen! There's another shot!"

"We've got to go down, anyway," I insisted. "Come on! Start her off!'

He obeyed reluctantly, and at the second floor I stopped him. There was a tremendous clamor of voices in the courtyard below, and, although I had not the faintest idea of what was happening, I realized that to attempt to pass through the grill, or to cross the paved entrance into the hotel carrying the coffer, would be at best a risky proceeding.

"Wait here until I've finished," I ordered the attendant, who was almost in a state of collapse. "I'll tell you when to start again."

I opened the coffer and took out the casket. This I unlocked, and the Buddha almost slipped into my hands. I could have sworn that his one eye twinkled at me malevolently. I thrust him into my trousers pocket and buttoned my dinner jacket. Then I relocked the coffer and hid the keys under the seat.

"You get as far as you can up toward the Strank with the box," I directed Isaacs. "If there's anyone watching, they will be put off the scent. It will take them some time to get it open, and by then the Buddha will be in safety. If no one stops you, just get into a taxi and go home."

"They will kill me, if they see me with the coffer," he groaned.

"Not they," I assured him. "You need not put up any sort of a fight. Let them have it right away. You will have gone before they have time to open it."

The attendant started the lift again, and we glided to the ground floor. He looked out through the bars and opened the doors.

"Don't go down toward the restaurant, sir," the porter begged me. "They're driving the people in there like sheep. There's murder going on. Look at poor Charles!"

"Are there no police here?" I asked.

"I've seen barely half a dozen, sir, and there ain't one of them alive, I should think. They seem all off the streets. A gentleman said he hadn't set eyes on a single one all the way from Charing Cross. Besides, what's the good of them in twos and threes? There's hundreds of these fellows here, and they've all got guns."

"Can't we find a telephone?" I asked.

"They went for them directly they came, sir," the man replied, "and smashed the lot. That's where Peters got his."

I took Isaacs by the arm and turned him toward the Strand.

"They won't hurt you," I said reassuringly. "It's only the people coming into the

NEXT WEEK

A LITTLE English girl, a drudge in a London office block, worshiped a beauty quack with offices in her building—only she didn't realize at first that he was a quack. How she goes through the soul-tormenting process of finding out, and how she comes to love him is told in an appealing, charming way, vaguely reminiscent of that fine masterpiece, "Sorrell and Son" (and who hasn't read that?) in the next two Sunday magazines.

A Complete Novel

[illegible] get is why he's taken this risk for Miss Essiter. Had he ever seen her?"

"Not to my knowledge," I answered. "I imagine it's a counterstroke to Martin Hews. You see, Donkin and Joseph were fighting for Rachel. Donkin was Martin Hews's man, and, when he got into trouble, Martin Hews helped him to escape and shut up the girl at Breezeley."

"We'll get the young lady back," Bloor promised cherfully. "Sometimes I fancy, Major, that there's a sort of rude chivalry about Joseph. I don't think he'd dare to do anything brutal, even though she is Martin Hews's niece. I don't suppose you've had any news of her during the day?"

"Nothing except this," I replied, handing him Joseph's communication.

He read it carefully.

"What a nerve!" he muttered. "You showed this to her uncle? What was his reply?"

"He passed it on to Rachel, and let her loose."

Bloor was a big man, and a man with a big nerve. Nevertheless, I saw him shiver.

"It's damnable!" he muttered. "The girl knows where to go to, all right, but—"

There was a pause. Neither of us cared to utter our thoughts.

"Did he have her followed?" Bloor inquired.

"I don't think so. He was too clever. The girl would have been up to every trick of that sort."

My visitor pulled out his pipe.

"If one could only know where she went," he muttered.

I have never seen Bloor so depressed. I made some remark about it as I refilled his cup. He nodded.

"You know the gang," I pointed out. "Why don't you rope them in? You may not get Joseph, but he can't do much mischief without his men."

Bloor filled his pipe.

"It will have to come to that, I'm afraid," he admitted. "It's a nest of criminals, and we should be certain to get at least half a dozen convictions, but what's the use of that? We shouldn't get the men who did this last job, and we shouldn't get Joseph. Only a week ago, we got two of his outside men, besides the three over at your place, but do you think they'll squeal? Not one of them. There's one old chap we took not long ago, for burglary. Must have been fifty-four, if he's a day. He got ten years. There isn't a chance in twenty that he'll ever come out again. We went nap on him, because we knew he was in Joseph's area. If he'd have told us what we wanted to know, he could have walked out of prison a free man in three months, with a thousand of the best in his pocket. He just grinned at us—never even hesitated."

"How does any man get such a hold over this class of person?" I wondered.

Bloor looked into the fire.

"I figure it out," he explained, "that he gets it in two ways. The first is fear. Now in our records you will find that there are six cases within the last five months of men having been found dead with no certainty as to whether they had committed suicide or been murdered. We let it go at that, but we know all about it. Five out of the six, at any rate, were Joseph's men—not in the inner circle—who had given away just the trifle they knew about the gang and the mysterious chief they never saw. They got theirs, anyhow, though their information wasn't worth listening to. The first hold Joseph has over them, Major, is fear."

"And the second?"

"Self-interest. Now there was a young fellow, Hobson, got three years some time ago. He really could have told us something, for we are convinced that he'd acted as Joseph's secretary. He hadn't a penny when he went to prison, not a relative in the world. He came out six weeks ago. He was married almost at once. He's got a small motor-car, and he's back at his original job of tailoring down in Wandsworth. Joseph looks after his men. Hobson went to prison cheerfully, because he knew that, when he came out, he was going to be cared for."

Smart made a brief appearance with whisky and soda. I filled our glasses and my pipe. Then Bloor asked me a question concerning the matter I knew had been puzzling him.

"Supposing you tell me now what you were doing with the family Bible when I came in?"

"I will, with pleasure," I assented, "but, first of all, do you know anything about Mr. Leopold, a brother of Lady Bonofar?"

"The man who took you to the Blue Skies?"

I nodded.

"He took us there, and I am convinced that he knew what was going to happen to me when he made an excuse for getting me into the secretary's office. It was he, according to his own story, who put Miss Essiter into a taxicab to go home. I have come to the conclusion that Leopold is one of Joseph's West End associates."

Bloor was listening intently.

"For that reason," I went on, "when I saw him yesterday morning, I resisted my first impulse to take him by the throat and choke the life out of him. I decided that wouldn't do any good. I pretended to accept his story. I had a cocktail with him at Claridge's and I stole a letter out of his overcoat pocket."

"Good for you!" my companion murmured. "What was in the letter?"

I passed it across to him. He glanced through it and shook his head.

"I'm afraid it is scarcely worth while taking to our code department," he pronounced.

"Why not?"

"[illegible] is obviously one of those codes made up by arrangement between two people, and probably changed with every communication. It wouldn't lend itself to any form of regular transcription. The only thing you could do would be to get hold of the key—the particular one, I mean, upon which this is based. Now this was sent, you say, to Leopold. Very well, somewhere in Leopold's possession you might find a corresponding cipher, but even that is not necessary. It could be based upon a copy of the daily newspaper, a magazine, anything, but unless you knew what it was, you might try in vain to decipher the thing."

"What about a book?" I suggested.

"A book certainly, but then what book? You see that would probably be decided upon viva voce."

"What about the Bible?"

"Quite a possibility. Where did you get the idea from, though?"

"Well, I'll tell you. I went to Leopold's rooms tonight. He had a magnificent collection of books, but only one looked as though it had been disturbed for weeks—the Bible."

Bloor came over and patted me on the back.

"Well, Major," he exclaimed, "you've got more of our instinct than I gave you credit for. Let's get at it!"

We pondered over the code for some minutes and then made our first essay. Number 2 we took as being the second book of the Old Testament; 30 we accepted as the chapter; 21 as the verse. I counted the words until I arrived at twenty. A queer little whistle broke from Bloor's lips. The verse was this:

> "And they did bind the breastplate by his rings unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it might be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breastplate might not be loosed from the ephod; as the Lord commanded Moses.

And the twentieth word was BLUE!

After that we went at it breathlessly. Eighteen was the Book of Job, and the eighteenth verse of the thirty-seventh chapter was:

> "Hast thou with him spread out the sky, which is strong, and as a molten looking glass?"

And the eighth word was SKY.

The First Book was Genesis, and the nineteenth verse of the first chapter ran as follows:

> "And the evening and the morning were the fourth day."

"Blue Sky Thursday!" Bloor exclaimed.

An hour or so later, we were at the entrance to the Blue Skies Club. Bloor looked around. Across the street a man was selling matches; another had a bundle of papers under his arm. A taxi driver was seated upon the front seat of his vehicle, smoking and reading. A chauffeur, in a small two-seated car, was facing him on the other side of the entrance. There was plenty of space between them for anyone to take up or set down a passenger at the club, but their places were so arranged that anyone passing in or out would be within their reach. Bloor beckoned to the newspaper man, who touched his hat and hurried across. We selected newspapers, and all the time Bloor talked.

"You understand, Richards," he said, "it isn't the people who are coming into the club you need be interested in; it is the people who come out."

No reply, only a little nod. The young man was laboriously counting out change.

"Anyone who looks to be a messenger from the club, whoever he is, is to be detained," Bloor went on. "You have plenty of men to fall back on. There are six policemen at the next corner, and six at the Oxford Street end. 'Apple' is the word. You understand? We want a man who is expected here tonight, and we want to stop any message being sent out to warn him against coming. We will see to the telephone ourselves."

The young man ambled off. He stopped to beg a fag from the taxi driver and a light from the chauffeur, and, during those few moments, he passed on to both the message he had received. According to our arrangement, I presented myself alone at the swing doors of the club. A commissionaire blocked my further progress.

"I beg your pardon, sir," he said gruffly, "but are you a member of the club?"

"I am not," I acknowledged, "but I wish to have a word with the secretary."

His hand fell heavily upon my shoulder. He was a Goliath, but I affected to hesitate.

"I have a friend outside," I confided.

"Well, out you go to him," was the brusque reply. "You're not wanted in here. Manager's orders."

The swing doors revolved once more, and Bloor stood by my side.

"What's the trouble?" he inquired.

"This fellow won't let me in."

"Not you nor your friend neither," the man declared. "Out you go, both of you. I don't want your card," he went on, as Bloor produced one. "If you're not out of here in ten seconds—"

Bloor slipped back his coat.

"If you don't wish for my card," he said, "let me tell you who I am. I am Inspector Bloor, of Scotland Yard. This gentleman is with me. Go and tell your secretary that we wish to see him."

The man turned reluctantly away. A few yards from us, he paused, and seemed about to enter the dancing-room. Bloor moved across to him swiftly.

"Straight to the secretary's room," he ordered. "If you want to keep out of trouble, my man, you won't trifle with the law."

After that, there was no further delay. The door of the office through which I had passed was opened, and a middle-aged man came hurriedly out.

"What's the trouble, Inspector?" he asked.

"None, I hope," Bloor answered. "I wish to make a few investigations here. We should like to go straight to your office."

The secretary turned toward me.

"Delighted to assist you in any way, Inspector," he said, "but this gentleman has been struck off the rolls of the club."

"He was never a member," was my companion's curt reply. "At present he is accompanying me. If you are wise, you will make no further difficulties."

The secretary stood his ground.

"You know that he was fined forty shillings and costs this morning, sir?"

"Quite enough of that. Show us the way to your office."

The secretary led us there, mumbling to himself.

Bloor walked slowly around the office, tapping the walls here and there, even lifting the carpet in places. Finally, he seated himself at the secretary's table.

"Really, sir!" the latter remonstrated. "I protest."

Suddenly the room was plunged into darkneses. All that I could see was the glow from the end of Bloor's cigar. Then I heard his hand hit the desk and the sound of a scuffle, and, from the altered position of his cigar, I knew that he had risen to his feet.

CHAPTER XXI

THE lights blazed on again. The secretary was on his back on the carpet. He rose, trembling with agitation.

"This is extraordinary behavior, Inspector," he exclaimed. "I shall telephone headquarters at once."

"You will probably save me the trouble of doing so in a few minutes," Bloor rejoined calmly. "Now, if you're a sensible man, you'll answer my questions." What is your name?"

"Cranford."

"That's a lie to begin with," Bloor rapped out. "Your name is Ernest Rees. You were liable for prosecution two years ago in the Messor case, but we let the matter hang over."

"Not another word, sir," the man begged, in a completely altered tone. "What do you want me to do?"

"Answer my questions. How long have you been here?"

"Seven months."

"Was it through Mr. Leopold you got the post?"

"Yes."

"Now listen. Why is there a control here under my chair, turning out every light in the room, and another to switch them on again?"

"It was there when I came, sir. They use it to get rid of anyone they don't want in the club."

"How is that managed?"

"Dope, sir, I believe. I can't explain. I am always sent out of the room when that sort of thing is on."

"It was used last night when Maj. Owston came in?"

"I believe so, sir."

"Do you know by whose orders?"

"By Mr. Leopold's, sir. He is a member of the committee."

"There was another man here last night who sat at this desk and who dealt with Maj. Owston. Who was he?"

The man was shaking in every limb.

"I don't know!"

"You don't know his name?"

"No, sir. When he comes, I am sent away to a little office behind."

"How often does he come?"

"About once every ten days, sir."

"Was it he who took the young lady who was with Maj. Owston away from here last night?"

"I don't know," was the reply. "They don't trust me here. Whatever goes on here, sir, I'm not in it—I swear I'm not."

"I don't want to be hard on you, Rees," Bloor said. "Honestly, I'm inclined to believe you, but this man who comes every ten days—you could describe him, perhaps."

"I would, if I could, sir," the secretary answered fervently. "I can assure you, Mr. Bloor, there's nothing I wouldn't do to serve you."

"Very well then," Bloor said, "don't fluster yourself. So long as your sympathies are in the right quarter, we don't want to hustle you. This little visit may turn out to your advantage. Now tell me why you find it difficult to describe this person."

The change in Rees was amazing. A few minutes ago he had seemed on the point of hysteria. Now he was calm. The detective's diplomacy had done its work.

"Mr. Bloor," he said, "I'll tell you the truth. That gentleman comes here about once in ten days, but unless you were within a few yards of him, unless you heard him speak, as I have done, unless you saw him in here with Mr. Leopold or in the retiring-room behind—next door on the left, sir—I swear that you wouldn't recognise him from one time to another. He comes here in disguise, sir."

"Wait one moment," Bloor enjoined. "You spoke of a retiring-room. What does he use that for?"

"Supper-parties with ladies, sir, generally," was the reply. "It has a private exit."

"Did he take supper there last night?"

"He may have, sir. "I was sent off immediately Maj. Owston arrived."

"Very well. Now you think he comes here in disguise, yet you always recognise him."

"Ive recognized him once or twice, sir," the secretary admitted, "but it's my belief that he's been here dozens of times when I haven't. He's not so careful about me, because he knows that I'm on the brink of trouble all the time. He knows you people still have one up against me."

"You may count that written off, Rees," Bloor promised him. "You are behaving like a white man tonight. Can you tell us anything about the disappearance of Miss Essiter last night?"

"Not a thing. They sent me all the way to the Milan, and I didn't get back till it was over."

"You saw the man we are inquiring about last night?"

"I saw him come in."

"Describe him as he seemed to you then."

"Well, he was a little above medium height—slim, just the sort of figure the young gentlemen try to give themselves nowadays."

"Would you know him again, if you saw him?"

"If I saw him again in the same make-up, I would, sir."

"What name does he go by here?"

"Rather a ridiculous one, sir—Polly Harten. If word comes in that Polly Harten is going to be in the club any particular night, everything is a little altered. We have extra men on duty. We send away some of the waiters. Supper is laid in the retiring-room."

"I see," Mr. Bloor murmured. "Does he ever come two nights following?"

"I have known him do it."

"You haven't had any word of his coming tonight?"

"None at all."

Bloor was silent for several moments.

"Rees," he said, "this mysterious patron of the place is wanted so badly that we will pay a reward of five hundred pounds—I think it might even be made more. Can you help?"

Once more the man was back in a state of abject terror.

"Inspector," he begged, "don't ask me any more about him. There was the head waiter here before Guido. He got talking to a private detective employed by some gentleman down in the country. He came to me saying how he was going to make five hundred pounds with just the wave of his arm. The next day they found him dead. The questions you ask me I have to answer, but I can't do more, sir."

There was the sound of footsteps outside. The door was thrown open. Mr. Leopold stood upon the threshold.

"Hullo, Owston!" he stammered. "How did you get here?"

"I brought him in," Bloor acknowledged, rising. "Do you happen to be a member of the committee, sir?"

"I am."

Bloor continued, in a conciliatory tone: "I wanted to ask you a question about the young lady you were kind enough to see into a taxi last night. Her friends have communicated with Scotland Yard. She has not returned yet to Claridge's Hotel, where she was staying, and the last place she was seen was here."

"But who are you?"

"Detective Inspector Bloor, of Scotland Yard."

Mr. Leopold turned angrily toward me.

"I thought it was understood," he said, "that such inquiries as were made should be made through me as representing the club."

"Maj. Owston is blameless," Bloor put in quickly. "I called for him in accordance with instructions received tonight, and asked him to accompany me here."

"Then I should like to know who is behind all this disturbance," Mr. Leopold protested. "There are a dozen people who will tell you that Miss Essiter left here alone in a taxicab within a few minutes of Maj. Owston's removal. That ends our connection

[illegible] well about, night or day, there would be no room for the [illegible] until the day of reckoning between Joseph and myself had arrived.

I made my plans for the following morning, but they were shattered before I had finished breakfast. By eleven o'clock I was in the train, bound for Breezeley. Martin Hews's message allowed me no room for argument. I sent a note to Bloor, received an entirely favorable report from the hospital concerning Rachel, and started out on my dreary mission.

I seemed fated to see Breezeley Mansion under awesome conditions, and this morning was no exception. I hurried from the station and broke into a brisk run as soon as I had reached the old cinder-path, for there was no doubt whatever as to what was coming. There was one narrow cleft of clear sky between two great masses of purple-black, sulphurous clouds. That shaft of light seemed, as I entered the gates, to be descending upon the great house. It stood out unnaturally clear in its fantastic setting.

The first peal of thunder sounded as the door swung inward before me; the second as I passed into the upstairs room. The lightning almost blinded me for a moment. Then the rumblings of fresh thunder began, and there was a moment's peace. The door was closed behind me and I advanced toward the table, but at my accustomed chair I stopped short in amazement. It seemed impossible that this cowering figure was Martin Hews.

"Don't look at me as though I had gone out of my mind," he snapped. "This house is a mass of electric wiring. We shall get no news, although I am expecting the most important telephone message of my life. We shall probably have all our alarms and bells destroyed. Heaven knows what is going to happen to us."

There was a flash of lightning, another crash of thunder, and his head disappeared between his convulsively twitching hands.

"Owston," he moaned, "you are seeing me in one of my weakest moments. I hate thunder. I have hated it all my life. It brings evil. Already there is trouble. Look!"

His tiny forefinger shot out toward the wall. Immediately opposite him was a small blank space. I remembered well the pastel that had hung there—a girl's face, a copy of a great master. "The Madonna of Deptford," Martin Hews had once called her.

"What's happened to your pastel?" I demanded.

"Gone in the night," he replied, with a little shiver. "Not a bell rang, not a key was turned. The room is impregnable, held in the bonds of the greatest power on earth—electricity. Yet, look! It is gone in the night."

I glanced around the room.

"One never knows who is listening here," I hesitated.

He leaned over the table and touched a switch.

"The place is sound-proof now," he confided. "What was it you wanted to say?"

"Only something you'll probably turn me out of the house for," I answered. "I don't trust Minchin."

A week ago I knew how such a statement from me would have been received. Now he sat huddled up, his chin upon his chest, his arms resting upon the table, the fingers of both hands twitching as though with an ague. The cruel glitter had gone from his eyes. Fear lurked in their depths.

"Beatrice said the same thing," he muttered, "and Minchin is the only other one who knows—Beatrice a prisoner in the hands of my enemy, and Minchin—"

His eyes wandered back to the wall. He looked at that blank space as though he saw there the writing of fate. As he gased, the lightning once more filled the room, and the thunder shook the house.

CHAPTER XVVIII

"HAVE you had trouble with Minchin, sir?" I asked.

"Yes," he acknowledged reluctantly. "He wants to buy a cottage beyond Southend and go there for week-ends. He wants to leave me for two days a week."

"Well, why not?" I questioned. "He could train another valet, couldn't he, sir, to take his place?"

Martin Hews looked at me as though I had spaken sacrilege. The thunder muttered again, this time more distant.

"That's farther away," he exclaimed. "It's going. Look out of the window, Owston. Tell me which way the clouds are moving?"

"The storm is over," I reported. "The clouds are all passing southward, and the rain has come."

He was a different man when I turned back into the room.

"I've had a bad time, Owston," he confessed. "It is past. Is there news?"

"None of Miss Essiter, I am sorry to say," I told him, "and bad news of Rachel."

He indulged in a little grimace.

"Do you mean that my scheme failed?"

"Utterly. I found her half-conscious in my rooms last night, with her hair all cut off. She just had strength to murmur 'Number 10, Eldon street before she was taken to the hospital. Number 10 Eldon street was raided in a quarter of an hour, and the house was blown up by an infernal machine directly the police got inside."

"That was Joseph?" he gasped.

"Joseph beyond a doubt," I answered. "He had been there. So, I believe, had your niece."

"What's the next move, Major?"

"Scotland Yard has got the gang pretty well surrounded, sir," I told him. "They are going for them at once—perhaps tonight. That's why Joseph didn't mind so much his East End hiding places being given away. Inspector Bloor's been working cautiously, [illegible] by streets, houses by houses [illegible]. They are cornered down there, and Joseph knows it."

Martin Hews's eyes glistened with hate.

"If I were a man like others," he muttered, "I'd make myself like one of these accursed wolves. I'd creep from street to street, from hiding place to hiding place; I'd beg and steal and lie; I'd go to prison and come out again. I'd find Joseph."

One of the telephones on the desk tinkled gently. I obeyed Hews's gesture, took up the receiver, and listened.

"Isaacs is speaking from Grafton street—urgent, he says," I announced.

There was a sparkle in Martin Hews's hard round eyes as he took the receiver from me. His expression, as he bent over the instrument, was almost ecstatic.

"Listen, Isaacs," he said, when he had heard all the other had to recount, "with this, I have finished. You can go back to your beloved Hungary, and you shall take your fortune with you. You succeed this time, and you need make no further effort. I mean it. The time has come. Succeed, Isaacs, and you are rid of your burden."

There was excitement at the other end of the wire. I could tell that, though my employer's answers grew cooler all the time.

"In two hours," he announced, "Owston will be with you. He is just the man you want for this job. You will then act. Don't hesitate. Tonight."

He leaned back in his chair, and I stared at him wonderingly.

"Owston," he declared, "for a few minutes the sterner things of life are to be forgotten. Come with me."

He wheeled his chair to a distant corner of the room and stopped against the wall. The panel rolled upward, disclosing a miniature safe let into the wall. With a key attached to a gold bracelet underneath his left cuff, he opened it and drew out another bunch of keys—three in number.

"Follow me," he directed.

The first key, with the help of an electric button, unlocked the door close to us. We passed into a corridor, dimly lit, because it was windowless. Then my guide opened another door, and we were in a gallery. He touched a knob in one of the panels, and lights flamed out from the ceiling and walls. I followed him farther into the room, and a sense of wonder kept me tongue-tied.

I had once visited what they told me was the most wonderful bazaar in Cairo, where I had suddenly been confronted with the accumulated objets d'art of a great mercantile house, added to month by month from every quarter of the world. This treasure house of Martin Hews was reminiscent of that visit, but there was everywhere apparent a greater and finer sense of restraint; one could tell that an almost passionate love had gone to the arrangement of its sacred contents. I walked a little farther into the room, Martin Hews in his chair moving noiselessly by my side. I had no words, but it seemed to me that he approved my silence.

"Here you learn, if you have the wit to discern it, my young friend," he said "the secret—the major secret—the passion of my life. Man is born either a hunter, a lover, or a treasure seeker. Perhaps fortunately for me," he added, a little bitterly, "I was born among the latter. Forty years of care and toil, danger and perseverance, besides the expenditure of a great fortune, have brought me these. Every one has come to me with a thrill, every one has brought me its meed of joy. What matter, I think, sometimes, if I die tomorrow? I shall have known happiness such as few others are capable of feeling, and, if I fear death, Owston—and there are times when I shrink from it—it is not because there is anything in life itself that calls or holds! It is the leaving these. The Madonna who smiles at you there, from whom day by day you could learn a new lesson of beauty, was painted in 1519 by Raphael. Ah, you recognise it perhaps. Yes, it was stolen, I admit. It was stolen first from Versailles in the time of the Revolution, and afterward from the Pizzio Collection. Perhaps you recognise my two Greuzes, that Claude Monet the cleverest detectives in London and Paris searched for in vain. See the Golden Horn and Temple of Thais. Look at that Buddha. Eleven men were killed in the attempt to regain that. The scroll in that basket of gold with the jade sides is part of the manuscript of Confucius, traced by his own hands. Look at the parchment. We lived in caves long after that was fashioned.

"What do you love best? Pictures, bronzes, jade, tapestry? Tell me, and I'll show you something that the world cannot match . . . . Pictures," he went on, interpreting my half-muttered reply. "Good. Here is variety for you. You see that panel of yellow satinwood? Look at the images. The dairymaid in gala costume, the fine lady in her court dress, the gallant who dances with her. And this Gainsborough! Forty-five thousand guineas they asked me for that at Christie's. I didn't buy it, Owston. It was Donkin's first exploit. Cut from the frame it was, as neatly as though by electricity. It hung here six weeks after they had refused my cheque at Christie's for forty thousand guineas.

"This is my Temple. This is the pool into which I have emptied my life and soul. Men have robbed or stolen, or killed for love or jealousy or power. I for what you see."

"But aren't you afraid of discovery?"

"I have no great fear," he assured me. "I will tell you why. Nearly all the thefts commited in these sordid days are thefts of an article for purposes of gain. That article must be resold before the robber reaps his reward, and it is in the selling that the great danger of the proceeding arises. My treasures have been stolen for my [illegible] and locked away. The [illegible] world have searched for years for some of them, but they have searched in the bargain houses, they have searched in the dealers' shops of Amsterdam, London, Paris, New York. They have searched by watching a likely purchaser and a likely vendor—and they have searched in vain. When anything is stolen for me, it is off the market for my lifetime. Pull down the blind of your memory, Owston," he continued, a little abruptly. "What I have shown you, I have shown you on impulse. Now I shall give you something to distract your mind. Have you ever killed a Chinaman, Owston?"

"Never to my knowledge, sir."

"If by killing the Chinaman you are going to see tonight you could get possession of what I want," Martin Hews sighed, "the affair would be easy enough. Mr. Tul-Kak is too clever for that, though. In a sense, I am glad that he is. If there were killing to be done, Joseph might be there ahead of me. There is this difference between Joseph and myself. He pays when he must—that is very seldom indeed; if I want anything badly enough, I don't care whether it comes to me through payment, theft, or murder. In this case, it will have, I think, to be payment. Tul-Kak is a wise man. He wants a great price, but he prefers to deal with me. I have told Isaacs that he can offer five hundred thousand pounds—a quarter of my remaining fortune, Owston—for the One-eyed Buddha."

"For the what?" I gasped.

Martin Hews smiled patiently.

"You are very ignorant, Owston," he deplored. "However, I suppose I must continue to be your instructor. From time immemorial there has been a superstition that the great Buddha, the God of the East, had only one eye. For the last few centuries, coincidentally with this superstition, one has heard vague rumors of a small white jade Buddha, watched in secret by the head priests only of a temple in Thibet—a Buddha with only one eye. Explorers and curio dealers have lost their lives seeking for this temple, seeking for this Buddha. How it came into India, I don't know, but it is certain that a monk of Thibet left his country and traveled across the mountains to China with the Buddha in his possession. He paid for it with his life. Four of its successive owners have died. Tul-Kak himself has had more than one marvelous escape. I sent Isaacs to India the year before last, but he had only to open his mouth and his life was in danger. I had men haunting the secret places of Rangoon, where it was reported that the statue had been hidden, but Isaacs could make no progress. Tul-Kak has been a year waiting for an opportunity to travel to London. He arrived this morning. Tonight, at eleven o'clock, you and Isaacs are to see him in the Milan Court. From what I hear of the man, he is only too anxious to sell quickly. Whether he will get away with the money is another matter. You had better go to Isaacs's shop at about a quarter to eleven. You will go armed, of course, for I warn you that I don't believe that the Buddha will be allowed to change hands again without a fight."

"What are we to do with it when we have it?" I asked.

"Isaacs has instructions. He has a solid iron coffer in which you will place it, and for the night it will remain in the hotel safe. I am a believer in the obvious places at times. Don't try to hide it anywhere else. The vaults at the Milan Hotel. I will communicate with the manager, Mr. Bretzgel, and he will be expecting you."

He sat for a few minutes in what seemed to be a state of trance. Then he rang the bell, and presently Minchin appeared.

"See that Maj. Owston has some lunch, Minchin," he directed, "and order a car to take him to the station."

It was not until after I had started for London, alone in a first-class carriage, that I realised that I was in for a new adventure, and that I was carrying Martin Hews's check for half a million.

CHAPTER XXIV

I FOUND a car outside my rooms, and Bloor, as nearly excited as I had ever seen him, waiting for me.

"Good evening, Major," he greeted me. I thought I'd look in and tell you the news. We're for it tonight."

"The raid?"

He nodded.

"Information has been coming in fast and furious," he confided. "Let me tell you this first, though. We are out of one of our troubles. We got the Cheapside burglars. A fair catch it was, too."

"Good work?" I exclaimed. "Whereabouts?"

"We got them in a restaurant down by Liverpool street. No signs of a squeal from them, but one of our men caught Rogers—the leader of the three—trying to swallow a piece of paper. It was a note the waiter had just brought in. Evidently one of their places of call. Can't tell you what was in the note, but it seems that things are moving. Then the men I planted down Shoreditch way have been sending messages up, one by one. They are all agreed the gang's full strength is concentrated in a cramped radius of a few hundred yards."

"But what about Joseph?" I asked anxiously.

"It's no good waiting forever," Bloor pointed out. "When Joseph left Eldon street, he left the neighborhood altogether and we haven't a line on him yet. All the same, if we can break the gang, he'll never again be the man he was. Just cast your eye on this plan."

He spread one out upon the table, and I looked over his shoulder.

"It's a nasty [illegible]," he [illegible], "and the danger is that they'll slip away from the farther houses and either get in on the flanks, if they want to fight, or creep away, one by one, to the lodging-houses by the river, which are hard to search. We'll have to take our chances. Here's the river, you see and along there are the wharves. We've got the firm that own the big yards to close their gates, so there's no getting past those, and we've a couple of police boats on the river. This row of house is called Tanner's Cottages, and in Number 3 we know that Clooney is hiding, the man who's wanted for that bank business. We shall open up there looking for him, and down behind, in this corner, Paul Risewell was seen yesterday. We want him, too. The road on the other side is Fellmongers' Lane—nearly the worst spot in London. We're going to comb that out with picked men who are used to handling a gun. We could have stirred things up there before, but we decided to wait until we could make the big noise, and I'm glad we did. Getting the Cheapside burglars has set our hands free. The chief doesn't mind so much now what we do."

"Supposing they won't come out?" I suggested. "Supposing they start the Sidney street business again?"

"We are ready for that. I have an armored car at London Bridge Station. That can be on the spot in ten minutes. We shan't rush it. They can take their time. These blocks of cottages have only two possible ways of exit, and we're ready for them either end. Everyone who will come out unarmed and can prove himself the next morning to be an ordinary citizen, we shan't interfere with. Everyone who doesn't come out is one of Joseph's gang."

"What time is the line-up?" I inquired.

"Not too early. I am sending my men down two or three at a time, and they are closing in as the clock strikes twelve. I don't want the slightest sign of anything unusual until then."

I drew a sigh of relief. By midnight, if all went well, I should probably be a free man.

"I'm in it, of course?" I asked.

Bloor appeared doubtful.

"You're a bit of a marked man, you know," he reminded me. "You made yourself very conspicuous and obnoxious to the gang down at Breezeley. Then, if by any chance Joseph gets to know of the fighting and comes down to help, he'll take jolly good care that you're put out of the way."

"If there was any chance of Joseph's being there," I told him savagely, "it would take all Scotland Yard to keep me away. I'll be frank with you, Bloor. I've got another job on first, but, the moment that's over, I'm for the East End. I know where to find you, and I hope I'll hear the guns popping when I come."

"You'll stick to me then," he stipulated. "I don't want any of my fellows to throw their lives away tonight, and I certainly don't want anything to happen to you."

"Don't you think," I suggested, "that Joseph has made it a little too easy for you? Remember, he's never brought his whole gang together before. You've come across fragments of it in Kensington, fragments in Bermondsey, fragments in Camberwell, or at Tufnell Hill, some in the Bethnal Green Road, and others in Kentish Town. Why do you think he's brought them all together like this? Not for you just to pounce upon

Jack and His Sales Talk

You can fairly smell the odor of tuberoses.

ONCE upon a time—and a very tough time it was—a boy named Jack lived in a humble cottage on the outskirts of a village in Wales. The name of the village was Llwgennyfflapflyyough. It is said that the members of the local Chamber of Commerce once attempted to erect a signboard on the county highway reading, "You are now entering Llewgennyffl . . . etc.," but they ran out of lumber before they reached the penultimate syllable.

Jack was an earnest, hard-working lad. His industrious habits often led his friends to quote the old saying that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." And if the sort of people who quote old sayings found him dull, you can just imagine how dull he really must have been!

But he was ambitious. He longed to forge ahead and make a name for himself. His Uncle Theobald had forged ahead and made a name for himself, but it had been the wrong name, and now Uncle Theobald was serving twenty years in the gaol for forgery.

Jack had no desire to emulate his uncle. What he wanted to do was something heroic, some feat of daring which would send his name thundering down through the ages. Wistfully he watched the knights and men-at-arms gallop by on their plumed charges. How could he, a poor insurance solicitor, hope to compete with them for public acclaim? He had no lance and shield, but only a pen and a brief-case.

On a high mountain not far from the village dwelt a Giant named Blunderbore. The Giants in those days were more formidable than the Giants of today; you couldn't walk up to one of them and say, "Look here, you big stiff! You'd better behave yourself, or McGraw will trade you to Boston."

This particular Giant—who as a matter of fact was not very particular, for he ate any one who happened to come along—caused the natives a great deal of annoyance. It was his habit to descend upon the village every fortnight or so and carry off several of the inhabitants. He would take them away to his castle and they would never be seen again. His appetite was enormous, and in a single year he reduced the village from Pop. 3289 to Pop. 2124. (These figures were furnished by the local chamber of commerce and are probably exaggerated.)

Many brave men had attempted to slay this Giant, but none had succeeded and few had lived even to tell of their failure. He was over three hundred years old and large for his age; when he roared the very earth trembled.

Nevertheless, Jack determined to rid the countryside of this scourge or die in the effort. So he set out for Blunderbore's castle one fine June morning, armed with charts, tables and an impressive collection of statistics.

The Giant had just finished breakfast and was still seated in the dining-ing hall when Jack arrived. Before him was a flagon of wine as big as a rain barrel.

Without knocking, the youth strode into the huge dining hall, doffed his cap and bowed. "Mr. Blunderbore?" he said. "Jack is my name. I have a little proposition here which I am sure will be of interest to you. Can you spare me a few minutes of your time?"

The giant, amazed at the effontery of the lad, glared at him ferociously and roared, "Fee fie foe fum!"

Now, Jack had studied the technique of salesmanship. He knew what to do when the prospect says "No." But there had been nothing in the textbooks about what to do when the prospect says "Fee fie foe fum." For a moment he was nonplussed.

"I beg your pardon?" he said.

"Fee fie foe fum!" repeated Blunderbore. "I smell the blood of an Englishman!"

"Is that so?" remarked Jack chattily. "My mother was English. She came from Little Muffin-in-the-Mush, Upper Tiddly, Hants, Hoops. Some of her people are still living there—the Wynks, Perhaps you have heard of them."

"I ate a young curate from Upper Tiddly once," said the Giant reminiscently. "Rather stringy, he was."

"Well, well," sighed Jack, "fancy that! It just goes to show that this is a small world, after all. I suppose it seems especially small to you, being a giant . . . And that brings me to the object of my call, Mr. Blunderbore—or perhaps I should say, my mission," Jack laughed modestly, "for I am, in a sense, a sort of missionary."

"You know what happens to missionaries," observed the giant, glancing significantly at the massive iron cauldron which hung in the fireplace.

"I was speaking figuratively," Jack explained. "I am here in your interests, Mr. Blunderbore. My company has made a special study of giants and their problems, and we have devised a retirement income plan which I believe would be ideally suited to a person in your circumstances. Have you ever stopped to think where you will be at sixty-five?"

"Sixty-five!" the giant roared derisively. "I was three hundred and twenty-eight last Whitsuntide, thou fool!"

"Well, then," amended Jack, "have you ever stopped to think where you will be at three hundred and sixty-five? This business of being a giant is all right while it lasts, but you know as well as I do that it can't last forever. You may become extinct any day. Look what happened to the hippogriff and the plesiosaurus. Here today and in the Smithsonian Institution tomorrow—that's the way it goes. You may think that you will always be able to take care of yourself and your family. But will you? Statistics show"—

"Get hence—both thee and thy statistics!" shouted Blunderbore, picking up his club. "Thou art spoiling my day!"

"Statistics show," continued Jack, as he dodged a blow from the club, "that a giant of your age has an expectation of life of only 59.71 years. The rate of mortality among monsters is rising very steadily.

"Not long ago I was talking to an old Dragon over in Cornwall. I tried to sell him some fire-and-brimstone insurance, but he wasn't interested. Then I offered him an accident policy, but he said he didn't need one because his scales were invulnerable. That was what he thought, mind you. But along came St. George, and what happened? Today that Dragon is nothing but a myth."

"Hmph! I'd like to see St. George try to run a spear through me," blustered the giant. "I'd grind his bones to make my bread!"

"I'm sure you would, sir," agreed Jack ingratiatingly. "But we never can tell what the future has in store for us. Why, only the other day I was discussing insurance with a prominent giant. Mr. Gog of Gog & Magog—perhaps you are acquainted with the firm, sir—and he said to me, 'Why should I worry about insurance? I've never been sick a day in my life.' 'Very well sir,' I said, far be it from me to influence you against your wishes, but mark my words, the time will come when you will regret this.'"

"Well," said the giant with grudging interest, "did it?"

"The very next day he was stricken with a fever," replied Jack solemnly, "and within the week, he was dead."

The giant stirred uneasily.

"Mr. Blunderbore," continued Jack, climbing up on the table and putting his face very close to the giant's, "what would you do if some young David were to come along with a slingshot and bounce a bowlder off your brow? How would you pay the doctor's bills? What would become of your wife and little ones? Have you ever stopped to think"—

As Jack talked on, emphasizing his points by tapping the giant's broad bosom with an incisive forefinger, Blunderbore stopped rumbling like a distant thunderstorm and lapsed into gloomy silence. At the end of half an hour his face had begun to look a little haggard; his expectation of life had dropped from 59.71 to 42.09 and his blood pressure had risen proportionately.

Blunderbore could feel the weight of his years pressing down upon him, and glancing at his reflection in the polished cover of the silver soup tureen he was not surprised to observe that his handsome black beard had turned completely white He wished Jack would stop harping upon the evanescence of human existence. It was enough to age any one.

With the hope that perhaps a good scare might silence the morbid young man, Blunderbore took a deep breath, rolled his eyes, and prepared to utter a blood-curdling roar. "Fee fie foe fum!" he cried—but to his embarrassment, his voice was cracked and quivering. Jack only smiled indulgently at the interruption, and resumed his explanation of the permanent disability clause.

Infuriated, the doddering giant seized his iron-studded bludgeon; but when he attempted to swing it above his head it slipped from his palsied hand and clattered to the floor. There was nothing for him to do but sit there helplessly and listen to the dry rustling of his hardened arteries.

The sales talk continued without further interruption. Two hours later, as Jack was explaining the difference between partial and total disability (with examples,) Blunderbore gave a low moan and closed his eyes. And by the time Jack had completed a vivid description of how old Mrs. Wadburn had lost three fingers of her right hand in a clothes wringer the giant was dead.

Thus did Jack, alone and unaided, succeed where doughty knights and men-at-arms had failed; he had talked the giant to death.

There was great rejoicing when the good people of the village learned that Blunderbore was no more. Jack was given the title of "the Giant Killer," and the officials of his company permitted him to wear a button signifying that he was a Ten Year Man, although actually he had been with the company only nine years and eleven months.

So the story ends happily for almost all concerned. But our sympathies remain with the giant, who was more chinned against than chinning.

A good insurance man can, in fifteen minutes' conversation, make Schopenhauer look like Pollyanna. As he speaks of the future in soft, sympathetic tones, you can fairly smell the odor of tuberoses and hear the creaking of the undertaker's folding chairs. In an attempt to demonstrate the power of mind over chatter, you may concentrate resolutely upon the bright ephemeral things of life—the comic strip in last night's paper, a necktie in a shop window, the repartee of Texas Guinan, watercress sandwiches and Sealyham terriers. But the sales talk flows on, and eventually you are brought back to the realization that death is inevitable, if not downright imminent, and that something ought to be done about it.

When the insurance salesman has sung his statistical threnody and created a proper mood of despondency in his prospect he springs the policy. His explanation of the policy is like the rainbow after the storm. He says, in effect: "It's a pretty tough old world. The forces of nature are all against you and you don't have a chance. But we old altruists are willing to help you make the best of a bad job."

Every few weeks there appears a new policy which promises new benefits for its prospective holders. Every few days some agent buttonholes me and offers me more money for less money. Each proposition is a little more generous than its predecessor. At the rate things are going now it will be only a matter of time before the insurance business is out-and-out philanthropy, and a man can get a good policy for nothing. I, for one, have decided to wait until that time. It won't be long now.

with the matter. I cannot take that view of the position."

"Surely you cannot object to the young lady's people placing the matter of her disappearance in our hands," said Bloor.

"The young lady's people!" Mr. Leopold repeated. "Do I take it that you are acting for Mr. Martin Hews?"

"Don't know the gentleman, sir. We are instructed by Claridge's Hotel."

Mr. Leopold appeared to be slightly reassured.

"I have a guest outside," he confided. "I will take her to the restaurant and join you again."

He disappeared, and Bloor turned to Rees.

"Give me your keys," he ordered.

The man handed them to him.

"Now hurry off. Get into my taxi, drive to Scotland Yard, and wait there for me. I'll send you home afterward. If anyone stops you outside, say 'Apple'."

Bloor turned to me.

"Step outside quickly," he ordered. "Call over the newsboy. Tell him to pass word to the others that on no account is anyone to leave the place."

I hurried out and executed my errand. I had barely made my report when Leopold reappeared. A moment later the telephone rang. Leopold sprang toward it. Bloor brushed him aside and took off the receiver himself.

"The Blue Skies," he said. "Who is speaking?"

I gasped in surprise. Bloor's imitation of the secretary's voice was wonderful. Nevertheless, there was a pause.

"Perfectly all right," Bloor said presently . . . . "When? . . . . Yes."

Bloor hung up the receiver and looked speculatively at Mr. Leopold.

"I wonder," he murmured, "whether there is such a person as Polly Harten?"

Leopold moistened his lips.

"You will find her name on the books of the club," he answered.

"Then, if she is a member, why does someone ask in a man's voice if it will be all right for her to come here tonight? I should like to see Polly Harten."

An ugly smile broke upon Mr. Leopold's lips.

"I don't think you would," he declared.

CHAPTER XXII

SUDDENLY the telephone-bell sounded again.

"Ah!" Bloor murmured. "Some one else ringing up! Don't go, Mr. Leopold. Maj. Owston, will you listen in on that extension in the hall?"

"The Blue Skies?" asked a polite voice.

"Yes."

"Is that Detective Inspector Bloor speaking?"

The voice, slow, distinct, with its gibing undernote of mockery, went on:

"Dear shock-headed friend, you're a little better than Martin Hews's people, for instance. They seem to spend their time, I am told, haunting the pubs down Bermondsey and Shoreditch way. Owston, I dare say, is with you. I shouldn't be at all surprised if he is shadowing the place where he lost his lady love . . . . No denial, I notice. Tell me about your health, Bloor. I saw you the other night with the gallant Major, and I thought you looked a little peaked and worried. You shouldn't worry so much, Bloor. The chief gets difficult sometimes, but I shall drop in and see him one day, and I'll give you a leg up, if I can, Inspector . . . . Not in the humor for conversation, eh?"

"I like to listen," Bloor confided. "Your voice is a little unusual, you know. I am trying to listen so well that I shall never forget it."

"I have a nice voice," our sardonic enemy went on; "clear—it has even been called musical—but just a trifle inclined toward ribaldry. All my friends, you know, consider me too frivolous for the highest type of criminal. You know I'm Joseph, of course? It is Joseph speaking."

"How are you, Joseph?" Bloor rejoined. "I'd like to see you down here. Are you bringing Polly along this evening?"

"Not tonight," was the regretful reply. "I meant to, you know, although how the mischief you knew it I can't imagine. Never mind. I shall be at the Blue Skies one evening before very long, Inspector, and I shall dance there and drink a bottle of that Cliquot '15, and I shall walk out just as happily as I entered—only, Inspector, I shall choose my night. See? By-the-by, if Maj. Owston is there, would he like to have a message from a young lady?"

"I'll give it to him," Bloor promised. "What is it?"

There was an instant's silence. Then once more the mocking voice, only this time I fancied that it contained a suggestion of something more sinister.

"The young lady will bring it to him herself, Inspector. Good-by."

The connection was broken. We sat and looked at each other. In Leopold's presence, however, we refrained from speech.

"Are you two going to occupy my room all night?" the latter demanded harshly.

"We shall be leaving in a few minutes," Bloor assured him. "Don't let us keep you any longer though. I remember you mentioned that you had a guest here. Pray return to her whenever you like. There are a few of your papers I am taking the liberty of removing to look over at my leisure, and there was a little plan here—very interesting—but never mind that now. I am afraid we shall have to have another talk with you about the club, Mr. Leopold. By-the-by," he asked, a little abruptly, "what is this bottle of whisky doing here, so tightly fastened down?"

"Sample bottle," Mr. Leopold replied, with a malicious gleam in his eye.

Bloor lifted it up and held it to the light. There was a sort of clouding of frost on the outside of the bottle. His lips pursed themselves into a whistle.

"You won't mind my depriving you of this?" he asked.

Leopold sprang for the bottle, but Bloor easily held him away.

"Blast you!" the little man shouted. "I wish you'd opened the bottle and drank it!"

We left the room, the door of which my companion locked on the outside.

"Aren't I going to be allowed in my own office?" Mr. Leopold asked angrily.

"After tomorrow," the Inspector promised. "Really, I am treating you very well. There are several documents there and some letters that demand a good deal of explanation. Until tomorrow morning."

Evidently some whisper of trouble had spread, for the club was almost deserted as we passed out.

"After all," I reminded Bloor, as we turned westward, "he is certain to have a spare key."

My companion smiled.

"Probably," he said. "I am hoping that he has. There are several documents quite inexplicable to me. I have left them all. Tomorrow I shall see which he takes the trouble to destroy."

We walked homeward in a slight drizzle of rain. It must have been three o'clock when I opened my front door.

"You'll come in and have a drink, Bloor," I invited.

"I certainly will," he assented. "For a member of the committee of a club where a good deal of wine is consumed, Mr. Leopold was inclined to be inhospitable. I'll admit that I am thirsty. I'm curious, too, to know if Joseph's last message meant anything."

I was staring at a note, in Smart's handwriting, scrawled on a piece of paper and stuck up against the wall to attract my attention.

"A young lady waiting in my sitting-room!" I exclaimed. "Come along, Inspector."

We tore up the stairs, and I threw open the door of the sitting-room. My first sensation was one of disappointment.

There was certainly some one there, but it was not Beatrice. I turned on the switch and almost instantly that faint sensation of disappointment passed into one of overwhelming horror. Bloor, on the other hand, never lost his presence of mind for a moment. He literally sprang past me at the chair with a knife all ready in his hand.

What we had to face in that brief interval is utterly indescribable. It has passed into the chamber of horrors in the dark corners of my memory. A sob was tearing at my throat before I was able to be of any assistance to Bloor. Rachel was lying back in the chair, bound with ropes. Her eyes were open, but glazed and set with terror, and every particle of color had left her cheeks and lips. But the rest of her! The beautiful silky eyebrows of which she had been so proud—gone! Her silky blue black hair, every strand, every particle—gone. She had the appearance of a mummy. As we cut the rope, she fell limp into my arms. Bloor was already at the telephone. As soon as he had put back the receiver, he hurried to the sideboard, came back with a glass of brandy, and forced some between her blue lips.

"Number 10, Eldon street," she faltered. "She's there with him. They'll have moved by now, unless you're quick. Number 10, Eldon street. It's the other side of the river. Kill him—one of you, kill him, please."

"Eldon street," Bloor repeated. "My men are within a hundred yards of there now."

"They must have followed me here," she sobbed. "Your man let me in and said I must wait for you. I sat here, and I must have dozed, and, when I woke up, there were two of them, and there was a gag in my mouth."

"Presently Bloor, who had hurried out of the room at the sound of an automobile-horn below, came back.

"Carry her down, Major," he begged. "I'll wrap her up in something."

He fetched a silk dressing-gown from my room, and we carried her down the stairs. Outside was a police ambulance. A nurse waited on the pavement. She helped me to lay Rachel upon the stretcher and together they drove off.

"Pull yourself together, Major," he enjoined kindly. "Of course, it was a shock. I don't mind admitting I felt a bit squeamish myself, but in a month she'll be singing again as happily as ever. It was a brutal, foul thing to do, but—he killed the men who squealed. It's all in the game, Major. She'll be well in a month."

"That child—that poor child!" I muttered. "You are right, Bloor, of course, but what she must have suffered!"

"We are all put through it, now and then. What's that! Thunder?"

There was a faint drizzling rain falling, but not a breath of wind. I had been looking over the Green Park toward the river, and it seemed to me that a sudden flash of light had shot across the sky. Even while we stared at it, there was a low, rumbling sound like a peal of thunder. For a moment or two we remained silent and without comprehension.

"Thunder!" I exclaimed. "And lightning, too! But it couldn't have been lightning."

I stood at the window and listened. Nothing else happened, except that a doen fire-engines from Kensington came rushing past the park. Then at last the telephone tinkled.

"Superintendent Cassells speaking."

"Inspector Bloor. Go ahead."

"I took a small force down to the assistance of our men and surrounded Eldon street as directed. We broke into the house simultaneously from the back and front. A few minutes after we entered there was an explosion. There's very little left of the house, and the next two are on fire."

"Any of our men hurt?"

"P. C. Harrison killed. Sergeant Rush left arm blown off—on his way to hospital. A few burns among the rest. Nothing else."

"What was it? Dynamite?"

"A timed machine. Some of us heard the hising. Harrison himself gave the alarm, and we just got clear. The house was deserted, sir, but it had been occupied within the last hour. Very luxuriously furnished. Heaps of books and three sets of private wireless—all destroyed."

"Keep the uninjured men down there," Bloor ordered. "Prepare a report and be in my room at ten o'clock tomorrow morning."

"Very good, sir."

Bloor hung up the receiver.

"If I can't get Joseph first," he said fiercely, "we'll smash the gang. I'm going to treat them rough."

I heard him with exultation. I knew per-

Lieutenant Jack McKimm in his inside pocket
idated car . .

QUEST—That's what it was; a quest as old as man. Nothing to do with galleons plunging westward nor any fountain of youth in some far land. Neither did it concern the gold of vanished Incas nor treasures hidden away in the earth. It was the quest of a will-o'-the-wisp, an illusive spiritual thing that had touched the hearts of a man and a woman with subtle magic. It had come—and gone—leaving them staring at one another in dismay. There was no road of earth to point the way. Money could not repurchase one tiny moment of its beauty. Yet, Lieut. Jack McKimm tucked fifty dollars in his inside pocket, all that he had, and set out in his dilapidated car . . . Quest!

His goal lay a thousand miles to the north. He calmly expected the car to do its part for he had calculated everything to a nicety; so much for oil and gas, so much for blowouts, so much for food. It all came to forty-two dollars set aside in his billfold for that particular purpose. That much he could spend. He had been cleared at Fort Demming and relieved of duty, which meant that his bills had been paid; the post exchange, the officers' club, commissary, laundry, and the mess. He was free; free for one long month before it would be necessary for him to report to another station. And his surplus, over all, was fifty dollars, buried deep in the inside pocket of his uniform. A month! It was enough time for what he wanted to do, it seemed to him.

As the car clattered over the dirt road he began to sing a doughboy chanty:

I'm a doughboy born
  And a doughboy bred
And when I die
  I'll be doughboy dead.
One stripe, two stripes,
  Three stripes or none,
I'll take my bayonet
  And a doughboy gun, etc.

It was a glittering day, still too early for the heat. The sky was fleckless. Across the great waste of parade ground squatted the summer camp of the regiment. Beyond the administrative area began a group of sun bitten, paintless structures—relics of 1918. One of them was the officers' club, a strange name for so barren a place. Only the night before he had been there to drink a pink drink out of a bottle and to say good-by. The officers' club! A broken Victrola, half dozen magazines, a few chairs and a soft drink bar. "Good-by and be damned," he interpolated into his song.

The car rattled on past the post exchange, the postoffice, the athletic field and the hospital, the only modern building of the lot. "Large enough for the whole regiment to be sick in," he had said once.

Beyond headquarters he suddenly slowed down, then turned into a sandy lane bordered with parched grass. He rode a little way in silence, then stopped. There is a shack with a screened-in porch, one of a dozen all in a row—second lieutenants' quarters, all alike in structure, made of clapboards from the saw mill. They were often called "the slave quarters." It was the attempts at adornment that made the difference between them, for one had tried growing morning glories, another had used grass seed. Some had done a little painting and another had spent hours in the making of a cinder walk lined with whitewashed pebbles. But the sun was too strong and water scarce. The whitewashed pebbles looked the best.

Just why McKimm had interrupted his happy journey to come here he didn't quite know himself. Some strange last rite perhaps. He sat very still looking at one of the little buildings. A chinaberry tree in front of it was in bloom. Its oriental sweetness reached him faintly. He breathed of it and remembered how he and Jean had come to Demming—to this little cardboard house.

A screen door slammed distantly. A dog barked—the same dog he had so often heard at night. In the rear of one of the buildings a woman's voice called, "Albert! Come here to me!" Mrs. King! He remembered when Albert was born. It didn't seem possible that three years had gone. A porch swing squeaked. My God! That porch swing—his porch swing. Jean had wanted it and he had bought it—gone into debt for it, too. That had been on their first day together.

On just such a morning they had come to this spot in a natty little roadster, gleaming now in the sun.

"Oh, how cute!" Jean had said, looking at the house.

"It'll have to do," he had answered. She was so new to the army. Curiously they had gone in, and hand in hand inspected the three rooms that were to be their home, after which they had sat down close together on the top of the three sagging steps that led to the porch. The quartermaster had promised them their allowance of furniture and the truck was on its way.

"It's not much, honey, but we'll be happy, won't we?" How he had wanted assurance then.

"What's the difference? We can be happy anywhere," she had answered.

"Atta girl."

"Besides, I can fix it up a lot. You'll see."

It had thrilled him to listen to her plans. Then the truck had come. They stood aside, all eagerness, to watch each precious piece, but the quartermaster's grab bag in no way resembles a Christmas stocking. Two sweating bucks unloaded a few nondescript chairs, two tables, the tops of which had been scratched and ring marked by preceding generations. Two chests of drawers that were hard to open, one mirror in a painted frame, two iron cots with mattresses that were rust marked and old, several cheap, small rugs with an odor of dust and must. A two burner gas stove and an ice box with a broken hinge were already in the house.

She had directed the placing of everything, but when the men had gone he saw that her eyes were brimming.

"Darling, it's the best he had for us," he said. "I—I—am only a second lieutenant—and—" She had rushed into his arms.

"Oh, Jack—it's—it's—all right—I had planned to make this such a pretty place—but I can't—with this—this junk—"

"We can buy some things, darling—this is just a loan till we get started—"

"Can we, Jack? Oh, that'll be grand! When?"

"Let's begin with the porch. We'll live out there, probably. We need a porch swing—wide and comfortable—"

"Suits me."

"And some draperies—a couple of nice easy chairs—"

"Let's go to town and look."

"All right!"

"I'll open a charge account."

"That's a swell thought."

And so they had begun with debt.

Weeks slipped by. The little world of an army post has its social whirl and Demming was a large post. For a time Jean's party dresses were more than equal to the occasions in their freshness, but as party followed party during the spring season she came to know the humiliation of wearing them many, too many times, until she hated the sight of them.

McKimm had been assigned to a company decimated by special duty requests. Drill was a farce. His men were away, mowing lawns, painting barracks, repairing, carpentering—everything but soldiering. He sulked about it. Meantime he became interested in a new device for the projection of a smoke screen from moving tanks, which was a thing that Jean could not share. He worked on it nights at the shack while she sat alone in the porch swing. He saw himself promoted and honored by his contribution to the service. She saw him detach himself from her and leave her quite alone.

The heat came. They moved their cots out on the porch, but it was of little avail against a breathless one hundred and three. The little breeze that blew was hot and dry, laden with a fine gray dust that covered everything like a gritty pall. It found its way into the shack through the doors and windows they dared not shut against it. The sun beat upon the sandy earth in a torrid blast. For weeks there was no rain. The porch swing began to squeak.

Winter came with a penetrating cold. The shacks had not been built for winters and the first frost was the signal for the installation of stoves—ugly, squat little things. Jean objected, but one of them was placed in the living-room. Beside it, enhancing the stove's beauty, rested a coal scuttle. Jean sighed.

Monotony crept in and sat with them before the stove. She had learned how to make over the party dresses many times. The others did it. The long evenings of intimate confidences were gone. They had become impatient with one another; with the army; with everything.

The boy, Albert, was born to the Kings. Jean had spent a great deal of time there and he had been jealous. Yes, he realized it now. He had said caustic things and lain awake nights listening to the wailing of the new baby, along with the barking of the dog.

Again the awful heat had come. They might have taken a month's leave. But where? There was no money to go on. So they gasped through as before. Meals dwindled to the contents of cans. The water supply had been so chlorinated that it was barely drinkable. Intimate married annoyances crept in. He left his clothes on the chairs, his boots on the porch, his socks in the middle of the floor. She hung things to dry in the kitchen and disturbed his papers. Everything led to discontent. It was a structure of little, irritating things piled one upon another, like a child's blocks, until it toppled one evening, as blocks do.

The porch swing squeaked. The day had been a series of mishaps for both of them. Nerves, worn to the breaking point, were very near the surface.

"Can't you do something about that noise? It's terrible," she complained. He chose to remain silent. The swing screeched the louder, a high pitched rasp. "Jack! Did you hear me?"

"Yes. I heard you!"

She stamped her foot.

"Then do something. All you do is sit—sit—"

The tension snapped.

"I do, do I? What do you do all day? Think I haven't anything to do but run around and fix furniture? Why don't you get it fixed? The water drips in the tub, too. The ice box drain's stopped up. My God! And there's a leak in the roof over the kitchen. You'd sit in the middle of it forever. Why don't you call the Q.M. and get 'em fixed? Can't you even do that?"

"I've asked you a thousand times to stop in and tell the Q.M. You never did take any interest in this house—"

All the petty injustice of three years they heaped upon one another. It ended in a strange silence. The will-o'-the-wisp had fled, leaving them staring at each other in dismay. Silence.

The next day, at noon, when McKimm had come home from the morning routine there was a note on the table.

"I've gone home," it said. Then a P.S.: "Your lunch is in the ice box. P.P.S.: I put clean linen and socks in your drawer."

He had not thought she would do it, but she was gone. For a few days he had lived alone, but he found it impossible. So he rendered unto the quartermaster the things that were the quartermaster's and the rest he removed to quarters in the bachelors' building, far away from the second lieutenants' row, all but the porch swing. He left it. The damned thing . . .

He missed her deeply, not so much her physical being but the will-o'-the-wisp just beneath. After all there had been some happy times there, moonlight picnics at the pond, dances on the general's lawn by the light of paper lanterns. Surely she would remember this and their own first happiness together—if he could find her—and make love to her again. That was it. He had stopped making love to her in his mind. If he could find her and take her away to some hidden nook, some lovely spot, perhaps he could recapture the strange spiritual thing he wanted. Where could they go? It was then that he had counted his finances and gathered together the little fund that lay in his inside pocket—$50. It would take them somewhere and they could stay until it was spent.

With a happy smile McKimm shot home the gears and turned his car around. The smell of the chinaberry tree followed him faintly, faintly, as he drove out of the lane.

For hours he clung to the wheel, noting with grim satisfaction the miles sped by on his speedometer. He drove with a great need for haste, begrudging even the necessary halts for gas, water, oil and food. Three blowouts set him cursing and once he was forced to snatch a few hours slumber in a small town hotel for fear of falling asleep at the wheel and going into a ditch or worse. Time after time he was torn between the desire to telegraph her that he was coming or to walk in unannounced; to take the citadel by storm. The latter appealed to him the more and he hugged it to himself, playing the scene in his mind, now one way, now another. It always ended the same way, though. Success. Happiness.

Dirt roads, paved roads, detours, gas stations, towns went by like a kaleidoscope. Nine hundred and eighty-two miles and the car was still going. Good old car. He burst into song again.

I'm a doughboy born
And a doughboy bred,
And when I die
I'll be a doughboy dead.

It was early evening. The last sign said "Lynbrook, two miles." His heart pounded with anticipation. Two little miles. Now it was one—then—lights twinkling in a valley and a last rush over an open road. He knew the house. He thrilled at the sight of a light in a window as he drew up at the curb. Jean's home, where they had been married. Vines hid the porch, but he knew that some one was there sitting in the rockers. He jumped out and ran up the walk to the steps.

"Hello! Anybody home?" he called jauntily.

"Well for heaven's sake!" said a woman's voice. It was not Jean. Disappointment swept over him like a tidal wave.

"Where—where's Jean?" he blurted.

"I wish I knew. Fine man you are, letting your wife go traipsing around over the country."

"She's not here?"

"The little ninny took the train for Demming yesterday. If she'd listened to me—"

He stood aghast.

"You mean—she was coming back to me—there?"

"Yes. We always tried to give her a good home, too. You'd better come in. I'll fix you some supper." Mrs. Howell rose from her chair. "I thought you'd be along. I told her so, too. She should have stayed right here, so she should."

He was leaning against one of the white columns of the porch, bewildered, not hearing the tirade.

"Her father was of the same opinion, too. She shouldn't have married into the army at all." Mrs. Howell held open the screen door. "Are you coming in? Hurry up, before the house gets full of bugs."

He roused himself.

"Don't bother about me. Thanks." She shut the door. "I won't come in—yet."

"You look tired, boy."

"No. I'm all right. I'm going to the telegraph office."

"Be back?"

"I don't know what I'll do."

He went out to the car, thinking. Suddenly, like a ray of light, he saw the truth. Jean had wanted him, too. He should have let her know. It was but a few moments to the telegraph office, where he addressed a dignified wire to the adjutant, not at all what he would have liked to have sent.

Mrs. McKimm arriving Demming tomorrow. Kindly ask her to await my return. JOHN McKIMM,
2d. Lieut. Inf.

Then he went out to the dingy, battered old car.

"Listen, old son," he said, "you've got to do it again—you've got to—and for God's sake don't eat so much, will you?"

O, I'm a doughboy born
And a doughboy bred—

She loved him! She loved him! This was the song that he sang in his heart as the car rattled southward again. That night he was forced to take one $10 bill from his store for gas and oil. Forty dollars remained, and nine hundred miles to go. There would be no honeymoon in a secluded spot, only Demming again, and broke as usual. Poor Jean!

Jean McKimm hesitated beside the door of the adjutant's office. Her face was flushed with eagerness. How she had hurried to get there, stopping only long enough in town to breakfast on a chocolate soda. Demming seemed fresh and beautiful in the morning sun. How could she have thought it so ugly? Somewhere, not far away, was Jack. She pressed her hand to her breast, where in a little chamois bag lay a small nugget of bills—$50. Poor Jack. He was only a second lieutenant and never could call a dollar his own. With $50 they might take a little trip together and she could take care of him and tell him how silly she had been to leave him just because things had gone wrong. It had taken a long time to take pride out of the way of love. She did not mind what any one thought or said about them. She had come back to regain that happiness she knew was there. Perhaps she should have let Jack know. No! It would be best to take him by surprise; to look into his face and find there, in such an unguarded moment, the joy and love at being together again. She rearranged her hair under her new hat, patted her dress into place, opened the door and went into the adjutant's office. A captain whom she did not know sat at the desk sifting papers. Field clerks with their typewriters in another part of the room.

"Oh, are you the adjutant?"

The captain looked up and smiled at so pretty a girl in a summer dress.

"Yes. Can I do something for you?" He came forward.

"Capt. Summers was adjutant last year," she began.

"Yes. He's gone to China to join the Fifteenth Infantry. Sit down, won't you?"

"Thanks." She sat down a little uneasily. "Have there been many changes since—since—last year?"

"Quite a few. About half the post, I think. That's the army."

"Lieut. John McKimm?"

"McKimm? Let's see—" The adjutant opened a file and ran his finger down the list. "McKimm—oh, yes, he's gone to Fort Sheridan. That's near Chicago."

"Gone? He—he's gone?"

Something in the quality of her voice made him look at her anew.

"Yes," he answered, watching her face, "left a few days ago. Said he was going to drive it."

"Oh."

"Sorry."

"That's quite all right—I—I—"

"Anything wrong?"

"No, I guess not." She rose and went to the door, murmuring "Thank you" as she went.

Aimlessly she walked to the corner, her mind in a state of black chaos. What had he said? China? Or was it some place near Chicago? What a fiasco! Tears gathered in her eyes. He was gone. And he had not told her. Why had he not written her one little line? Why had she not written him? She turned about and went slowly back. Her suit case was in the hall at headquarters, she remembered. Lucky thing she had fifty dollars to get home with. Home! It was the last place she wanted to go just then. She felt the little lump of bills in the chamois bag and gulped. It had meant so much to have that little fund.

At the door of the office she met the adjutant again.

"I've been hunting for you. Aren't you Mrs. McKimm?" he asked.

"Yes."

"I've a wire here. Thought you might like to see it." He handed it to her.

Slowly, with a tingling, the blood mounted to her face.

"Oh, thanks! Thanks so much!" she said.

"All right."

She seized her bag and rushed out into the street. He loved her! He had gone all the way to Lynbrook for her. And he was coming back now. Bless him! For nearly an hour she did nothing but hug the realization. Then she counted the change in her purse. One dollar and thirty cents with three days to go, perhaps four. It must be done somehow. The treasure in the chamois bag was sacred. It must not be touched. How?

It was a long walk to second lieutenants' row. By easy stages she finally came to the door of the shack that had been there. She breathed deep of the chinaberry tree as she passed, and remembered many things. She tried the door with an air of possession. It was hooked from within. She peered through the screen. Quartermaster furniture. But the curtains were different and there were a few other pieces that she did not know. Suddenly she was aware that the shack was no longer theirs, and she turned from the door guiltily. She had hoped—

"Jean!" A woman's voice hailed her from another house. "Jean McKimm!"

It was Mrs. King. Jean rushed to her with a glad cry.

"When did you get back? You look just too swell for anything. Come in!"

Chattering like a pair of magpies, arms around one another, they went in.

Weary with driving, worn with lack of sleep and fantasitc mirages that fluttered before his vision, Lieut. McKimm rode in at the gate of Fort Demming with a flat tire. He had come through rain, fog and storm, and his car was bespattered with mud. The main bearing leaked oil badly, the front axle was bent, the engine labored with carbon, and the inside pocket of his uniform was empty. It was nearly ten o'clock and the stars crowded together to watch him.

Somewhere, very near, was Jean. She must have gotten his wire to the adjutant. He would know. He stopped at the outpost and telephoned. Yes, she was there. Mrs. King, of course!

He jumped into his car. "Come on, baby, just a few hundred yards more." The flat tire gave him trouble steering through the sand, but he managed as far as the middle of the second lieutenants' row. Then the engine wheezed and gave up the ghost.

Mrs. King greeted him at the door.

"She's back in your old shack," she told him in a whisper.

"But what became of the people who live there?"

"They're away on leave, and—well, they let her have it for a couple of weeks."

"My God!"

Almost trembling with sudden madness, he bounded to the door of the "shack" and flung open the door. She was in the kitchen totally unprepared. The filmy dress, the summer hat were hanging in a closet. She wore an apron and a house dress and a little chamois bag on a string for a necklace. Her nose was not powdered. Her lips had not been recently rouged. But it didn't matter at all. He caught her up in his arms and searched her face.

"Jean!"

"Oh, Jack!"

It was journey's end.

They talked for hours, sitting on the porch swing; hours of sweet, satisfying understanding.

"And I had fifty dollars saved for a new honeymoon somewhere. But—it's gone now. I had to spend it to get back."

"I've got fifty dollars." She took out the chamois bag and counted out the bills before his wondering eyes. "I worked for a while and saved this. I thought we'd take a little trip together."

"My God—and the car's busted."

"We can get it fixed."

"It'll cost about—fifty dollars."

"Oh!"

"And we've got to get to our next station."

"Well—" A pause. "Get the old buggy fixed and let's stay here a couple of weeks—right in our own little place. Shall we?"

"You want to?"

"I'd love it."

"Then, let's—"

He leaned back among the pillows of the porch swing. His eyes closed with exhaustion. With her toe, she set the swing in motion. Silence! Suddenly he spoke in a weary voice, "Who fixed this damned thing, Jean?"

Air Superior to Explosives

In the operation of a quarry compressed air is made to do a greater amount of service in moving the rock than explosive powder. Diagrams showing the area affected by the two methods indicate that the compressed air's influence is more than double that of the powder.

It was most astonishing, being a gold-plated fish, and Squirmy was not especially thrilled over the idea. He felt thick as a board and stiff as a ramrod, but, after all, wasn't it lucky he had not been boiled alive in the goldsmith's pot?

"Please," he gasped, opening his gills with difficulty, "would you mind putting me down? It's warm over here."

"Ha!" chuckled the largest goldsmith and squeezed him about the tummy, but, to Squirmy's delight, it did not hurt him. Being a gold fish, had its advantages. His flesh could not bruise any more.

"Ha yourself," he chuckled.

"What?" roared the huge fellow, rolling his eye in the middle of his forehead. "What did you say, you miserable, ridiculous nuisance?"

"Must have been your thing-in-a-bob boiling," muttered the fish, trying to move inside his gorgeous coat of gold.

"What's a thing-in-a-bob?" asked the thinnest goldsmith.

"What you are boiling," explained Squirmy airily. "Really, my dear, you don't know much."

The three men looked at each other and winked.

"He's too fresh," said the largest of them. "Salt herring will be lovely for Neptune's breakfast." Squirmy began to shake, he shook until his fins clattered inside his gold coat.

"But, I'm not herring. Herring is very common, it is ten cents a pound less than trout. I am a trout, my dear sirs, grey, speckled, exclusive trout. You can't pickle me; trouts are never put in brine."

"Ha!" the three goldsmiths shouted all at the same time, and started to roll forth a barrel that was large as Neptune's throne.

"In you go," gloated his chief tormentor, rolling up his shirt sleeves. "What a morsel you will be." But just then a thundering shook the black cave, and rocked even the heavy pots back and forth. Moans and wails filed the passageway, to such an extent the three goldsmiths held their breath in fear.

"What can it be?" asked one.

"Old Neptune, himself," whispered his friend.

"And the cook," prophesied the third goldsmith. "I hear his knife clattering inside the passageway."

"Ah, me," sighed Squirmy, hiding in the shadow of a chest, "this is the end of me. I might as well climb in the brine," and he made a pitiful attempt to reach the top of the cask. When he was halfway up, the door was thrown back, and there stood Neptune himself, so angry that his beard was bristling like a pin cushion. Even his crown was knocked askance, and he was brandishing his scepter in a most unkindly way.

"Hey, you!" he shouted, "have you seen that runaway fish? That measly, runty, little trout?"

"Aye," shouted the three cruel goldsmiths, and pointed to the barrel where Squirmy's beautiful gold head was peering above its rim.

"What?" roared Neptune, dropping his favorite eye-glass, his robe, and scepter, all at once. "That isn't my latest nuisance?" and a smile spread over his features that was truly pleasing to the frightened little fish.

"Yes, sir," he assured the mighty monarch, "this is me, sir, the only goldfish in the ocean," and out he waddled, swaggering a bit as his new coat made him top-heavy.

Neptune gazed upon him, with unbelieving eyes. "At last," he muttered, "at last, my wish comes true. Always and always I have wanted a yellow goldfish."

Squirmy began to prance, he was so overjoyed. "Well," he said, "I'm yellow as butter, I'm yellow as cheese, fact is, I'm the only yellow fish in the whole ocean."

"Then," said Neptune, "you shall be highly prized. You must live with me in my coral castle, and nothing that I have, riches or jewels, shall be denied you."

Squirmy turned, and made a naughty face at the goldsmith, then he bowed. "If it pleases your majesty, it will be delightful," he said, wondering a little at the last word. He was never sure of such grown-up expressions—and felt better when Neptune did not laugh at him.

"Call my royal carriage," thundered the King. "Whoever heard of a rare golden fish having to walk or swim?" And he spread

THE ELEPHANT

By Albert Landy

The largest elephant ever heard of measured fourteen feet in height. The largest ever seen in America weighed as much as 100 men. His name was Jumbo. Perhaps many of our parents remember seeing him. Jumbo was eleven feet in height.

The elephant eats hay and green food, and drinks great quantities of water. He needs so much food to keep him alive, that you could not pay for his meals with less than $20 a week. The Indian elephant has small ears; the African elephant can be recognized by his large ears. In other ways, they are a good deal alike. With both, the trunk is the most wonderful organ. It is like a long nose, divided into two tubes, and crowded with muscles and nerves.

With its trunk, the elephant can lift a good-sized tree, carrying it off on its tusks. It picks up its driver with its trunk, and puts him carefully on its back. Yet, so wonderfully is this trunk made, that the elephant can pick up a needle with it. The trunk is an elephant's weapon in defense, as well as a help in getting food. Sometimes an elephant will be attacked by a lion or tiger. But the big animal is not afraid. If it can get one blow at its enemy with its tusks, the lion will not need a second blow to kill it or, at any rate, to make it stop fighting.

The eyes of the elephant are very small, but the sight is excellent, while its sense of smell is so keen that this in itself is as good as extra eyes. A blind elephant can find its way about, simply by smelling and feeling its way with its trunk.

There is one thing about an elephant which few people notice. Its hind legs are shaped differently from other animals. The hind leg of a horse or a dog bends backward, so that when the animal lies down, it draws its hind legs up beneath its body. The elephant's hind legs are shaped like those of a man—they bend forward, and when he lies down, he stretches his hind legs out behind him. This is one of nature's gifts to the elephant. It is so heavy, that if its legs were shaped like those of other anmials, it would not be able to get up again when it lay down. The elephant has a memory which never forgets a kindness nor does he forgive an unkindness, whether by man or another elephant.

BOOK REVIEW

"TO HAVE AND TO HOLD"

By Mary Johnston

Reviewed by Dorothy Gardner, Age 15 Years, Glendale Union High School

Mary Johnston was born November 21, 1870, in Buchanan, Botetourt county, Virginia. She was educated at home, and exhibited literary talent at an early age. In 1898 she became widely known for her "Prisoners of Hope," a story of Virginia. Her next novel, "To Have and to Hold," was still more popular. Among her other books are "Audrey," "Sir Mortimer," "The Long Roll," "The Witch," "Foes," and "Sweet Rocket."

The title of my book review, "To Have and to Hold," has a two-fold meaning. One is: After a man has married a wife he must work hard to keep her; the other is: having once settled and claimed the land in America, the colonists had to fight to keep it.

The plot of the story is as follows: Capt. Percy of Virginia married, unknowingly, the king's ward, who came over with a ship of low-born maidens whose chief purpose was marriage. The ward, Lady Jocelyn Leigh, ran away to escape marrying the King's favorite, a man whom she hated. Neither the captain nor the Lady Jocelyn wished to wed; but one did because of a wager, and the latter because of necessity. They did not love each other at first, but after many trials and tribulations they finally came to care for each other very dearly, and were very happy.

The interesting features of the book are its highlights of history, and the introduction of well-known historical characters. The brother of Pocahontas takes an important part in the novel. For this reason the value of reading the book can not be estimated too highly. It is very interesting, appealing, and not at all dry, as might be supposed because it is a historically based piece of fiction.

MY POT OF GOLD

one solitary nickel in my purse, and lots of interesting memories. The next year passed in a hurry, what with running that paper and taking shorthand reports of speeches made by great men who visited Stanford.

Then our country entered the war. Herbert Hoover was on deck in Washington at once. Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of Stanford and friend of Hoover, soon followed him to the capital. Scenting some excitement, I followed close upon President Wilbur's heels. There was the infant Food Administration struggling along without even a stenographer! My arrival was very opportune, and there was a great lot of work to be done that momentous summer of 1917. And my precious store of experience was growing!

That was a year of the most varied experience, and I met some famous people in person, notable among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hoover, John Philip Sousa and several of the Woman Suffrage leaders who languished in jail for the great cause. I also met a sailor lad who became my husband and the father of my two little girls, Virginia and Winifred, who are enthusiastic members of The Junior Times Club. Eleven years have elapsed and I have been gathering more and more experience and wisdom. But the urge to write is still as strong as ever.

For the past year my work has been to read and translate stories written in German, French and Spanish for the Universal Picture studio. Many scenarios written in English have also come my way to read and comment upon and, naturally, I am more interested than ever in the writing game. But do you think I am discouraged over the long wait it has been since that day so many years ago when I first decided to be a writer? Not a bit of it! Every tiny atom of experience has been stowed away in my mental storehouse, and once I have the freedom and opportunity to write down what I have gathered throughout the years, there will be no lack of interesting material. The truth is, that I have been gradually filling that pot of gold at the end of the rainbow with my own glorious experiences!

According to recent plans, all-metal flying boats and airplanes are to carry a ton of gold and many diamonds each week to London and India from South Africa.

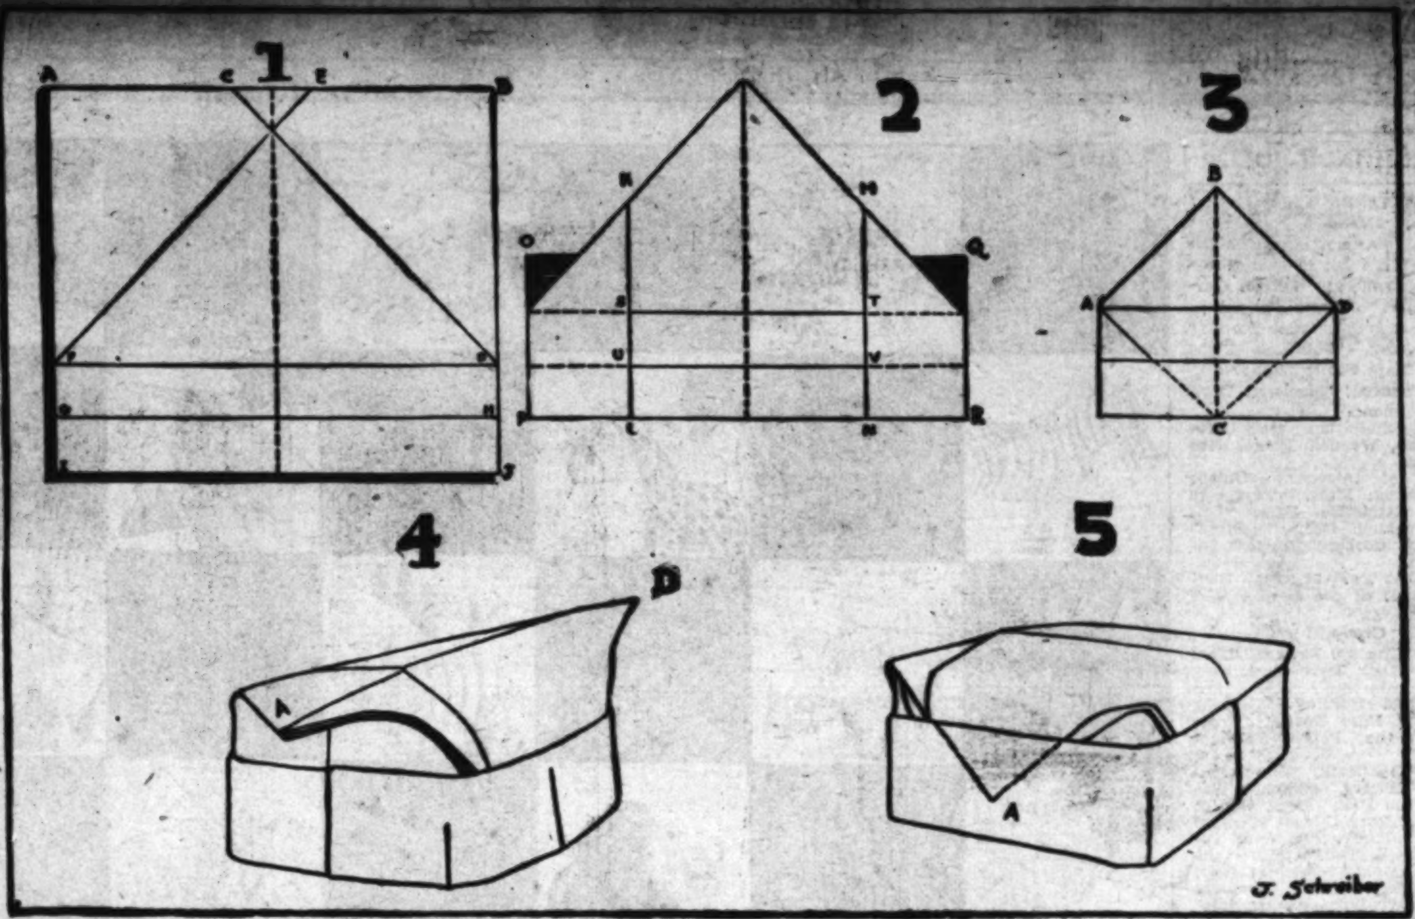
Mr. Bear, whom you see above penning a letter, wants to make sure that only one person will be able to read it. So he has disguised it by leaving out a certain letter. If you insert that letter in his message—insert it, that is, as many times as are necessary—you, too, will discover what Mr. Bear is writing. (Answer on Page 1.)

The Printer's Hat



Whenever you see a political cartoon involving capital and labor, the latter is invariably wearing a square paper hat. Curious as to how such a hat is made, we got a pressman to show us the method. These hats are actually worn by newspaper pressmen, engravers and compositors.

Take an ordinary full-size double sheet of a newspaper and turn it with the fold that joins the two pages of the sheet at the top. Now, as shown in Figure 1, fold down each corner about an inch past the center, on lines CD and EF, so that their lower edges will form the line FD. Fold the lower edge IJ of the upper sheet only up to line FD and fold up again on line FD. Now turn the whole paper over.

In Figure 2 the shaded parts are the projecting corners of the folded sheet underneath. Now fold edges OP and QR so that they meet at the center, shown by the dotted line. This will make KL and MN the outside edges. Fold up edge LN on line UV, so that it meets line ST, unfold and fold upward again on Line ST. Tuck edge LN under the pouch formed by Q and O.

You now have a folded paper of the proportional size and shape of Figure 3. Fold point B downward on line AD and tuck it under the band you have already formed so that it touches point C. The hat is now practically completed.

If you simply open the hat and bend down the corners, as shown in Figure 4, you will have a fine doughboy's overseas cap. To make the square hat, flatten out the two ends of the cap and tuck corners A and D under the band, as shown by A in Figure 5. Crease the corners and there you are! The size of the hat is determined by the very first fold. The nearer to the center, you fold the corners the wider and flatter will be the completed hat.

forth his velvet robe so that Squirmy might rest upon it.

"Thanks, Nep," the fish said, in a chummy voice, "this is nice of you. I shall enjoy your palace, I know, and I shall also be able to return your kindness by telling you stories, hundreds of them, all about the Three Bears, and Peter Pan, and ever so many famous characters in Story-Book-Land."

Neptune said, "Will you? And can you imagine such a thing?" but Squirmy knew he was not listening. His mind was upon the royal carriage.

"My coachman is late," grumbled Neptune, making the sourest of faces, "I'll get rid of that snail if it takes me a month."

"Snail?" giggled Squirmy, trying to look polite. "I didn't know coachmen were snails. Cinderella had men, in fancy livery, with pounds of braid on their chest."

"You don't say," enquired the sea King, giving his crown a twist, "who is this pile of cinders?"

"Cinderella," corrected Squirmy, airily, admiring his bright yellowness in one of the window panes. "She is a beautiful person who lives in Story-Book-Land. She married a Prince, and made a fool out of three sisters who were ugly as broomsticks. As for her coach, it was a glory to behold. You should have her Godmother here; she waved her wand and mice turned into horses; she wiggled it again, and had coachmen. Wish she was here, I'd have her make you a carriage, just large enough for the two of us."

"Humph," said Neptune, "here comes that slow and pokey snail. Took long enough," and around the corner, came a gorgeous conveyance, fashioned from shells and butterfly wings. There were tiny wheels hammered from gold, and even the bridle on the fat little snail was set with jewels The sea King puffed out his chest and raised his right hand.

"What ho, you useless creature. I have a guest riding with me, bestir yourself. I have found a goldfish gold all over—the most precious thing in my kingdom."

"Yeah?" said the snail, settling his diamond-rimmed spectacles, "hop aboard then. There's a commotion in your throne room. Something's wrong."

"Wrong?" shouted Neptune. "How dare anything be wrong? Am I not ruler over all the ocean?"

The snail shrugged his shoulders so violently the royal carraige tipped on one side.

"Steady," cautioned Neptune. "In with you, Squirmy, we must find out what has happened."

STORY FOR JUNIORS

LEGENDS OF THE EVERGREEN

A story of the noblest pine by Virginia Maxfield.

A little mountain breeze went hurrying in and out among the tall pines that grew in the forest on the side of the mountain. This little breeze bore a message and wherever it went one could see the pines nodding to each other and apparently talking among themselves. The little woodland animals scurrying about on the ground wondered what the conversation was all about as they heard the stately cedar remark: "Now I really think that I have a very good chance of winning this contest, for, indeed, are not my thick, red bark and fragrant wood of use?"

"I don't think I lack many of the necessary qualities, either," spoke up the spruce (for the moment somewhat haughty) for is it not I who am always first with my readiness to give shelter?"

Similar conversation went on in various parts of the forest until by nightfall it was in a state of great excitement.

The next day the trees were to be seen gathering at a certain place in the forest. Soon Mother Nature appeared; she is always planning surprises for her evergreen friends. She seated herself in their midst and addressed them, thus: "My children of the needled boughs, most of you know why I have had you gather here. There is to be a contest among all the evergreens to see which tree can prove itself to have done the most for man at this particular time. I do not mean the most useful in a general way, for our friends the pines would win the prize, but I mean the tree that does the best in an emergency, for you will never know when the chance to prove yourself useful is coming. The award will be that the winning tree will have the honor of being called the tree most loved by man.'"

The trees departed from the gathering—all talking in hushed voices, and all wondering when their turn would come to undergo the test.

A number of months passed and then Mother Nature again called a meeting of the trees and commanded each one to tell the story of its adventures during the past months.

One by one the trees related their tales. The pine told of giving some of its most perfect branches to build a house for weary lumber men in the winter time. The spruce told of shading a poor fellow nearly overcome with heat. The cedar told of giving up its lovely red bark for decorations to please man. Such were a great many of the stories, and some were noble, indeed. After all the other trees had finished, a dwarfed, mis-shapen pine spoke up from one side of the assembly. This little evergreen was the Desert Pinon. The following was its story:

"I was standing at my post where the desert and mountains meet, looking out over the parched wasteland, when, one day I saw a figure

MY POT OF GOLD

BY THERESE TAG BATLEY

(Here is a real life story most interestingly written that should encourage many of our struggling "Junior" scribes.—Aunt Dolly.)

For years and years my feet have been trudging in one direction; toward that pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow. For I know it is there and I shall find it some day. Each golden morning renews my hope; each clouded day gives promise of a brighter rainbow. And what fun it is to search and search! For I have at last learned patience. When the time comes, I shall find my pot of gold; I no longer doubt that it is there.

When I was 5 years of age I first started out to find the end of the rainbow. But there was my first obstacle. How could I inquire my way, when I could not even speak English? Here I had grown up to school age in California and knew only German! In kindergarten, however, my playmates teased me for my droll efforts at speaking their language and I determined to show them I could at least learn. After that first year in school my progress in English was very rapid, for I was learning it correctly from books, while most of the other children were accustomed to faulty grammar and slang at home.

At the age of 7 I began to study the reading and writing of German, outside of school hours, because it was fun. At 8, my music lessons were begun. At 9 my mother taught us a smattering of French, and at 10 I sent my first long story to a newspaper. What would I not have given in those days to have the kindly encouragement and guidance of an Aunt Dolly! There were few opportunities then for children to write for publication. The newspaper contest in which I submitted my first story was held at Christmas time, and when I discovered that I had not won the prize I felt so humiliated that for three whole years I didn't make another effort along literary lines.

But when at 13 I entered the Commercial High School that later became the Polytechnic High School, my hopes again ran high, for I met three budding young authors who had had their stories published in the Los Angeles Sunday Herald. Three stories were published each Sunday and cash prizes were awarded them. It was not long before one of these prizes came my way. I was now a full-fledged author, so I submitted material also to the Woman's Home Companion and the St. Nicholas Magazine, winning several awards. The Times then started the "Good Cheer Corner," to which I liked to contribute verses and letters. Some of the poems also appeared in The Times Magazine.

But I wanted to be a novelist and illustrate my own stories (the high hopes of childhood.) When The Times announced a scholarship contest, my name was soon entered, and a hard summer's work was rewarded with a scholarship in the Los Angeles School of Art and Design. Every Saturday was thenceforth devoted to art, while my weekdays were filled with shorthand, typewriting, English, German, French and Spanish. I loved to read, and wished to be able to study the works of foreign authors in their own languages. Furthermore, I realized even then that no grown-up is going to read stuff written by an ignorant person. Thus college seemed a necessity.

But there was no money at home for a college education, and I went to work as a little green law stenographer. Out of each month's salary one-fifth was faithfully put into the bank, even though at first I received but $20 a month! After a year and a half in an office, I wrote to no less a personage than the president of Stanford, David Starr Jordan, with an odd proposition. I offered to work my way through the university, if he would find me a job. The egotism of youth again! I gasp now when I think of my nerve, and yet I am finding out more and more each day that the good things of this world are all about us, waiting to be grasped by those who have the courage to assert their birthright of equality.

Dr. Jordan found me a position, and after a week of preparations, I set sail out into the wonderful world. Needless to say, my disillusionments in college were many, and there was a time when I had to go from door to door, asking for work at cooking or scrubbing. But a trait in my character was being developed that has stood me in good stead many times since. After graduation I still felt timid about bursting into print, for I had never been out of the State of California. Upon the impulse of the moment I purchased a round-trip ticket to New York and set out alone upon the great adventure.

Going by the southern route, I stopped in Arizona and Texas, going down into Mexico, and then from El Paso to New Orleans, where I embarked on a great sea-going liner for a five-day voyage to New York. This sea trip will be a happy memory always, for I saw the Statue of Liberty from the sea, just as my parents glimpsed it when they came from Europe. In my imagination, I, too, was an immigrant. And how wonderful New York seemed to my western eyes! My joy seemed complete when the Sunday editor of the New York World hired me as his secretary for the summer.

But there was a job waiting for me back at Stanford, a very interesting one. I was to be the business manager of a weekly newspaper. So one day I said goodby to New York and took the longest way home, stopping at Boston, Montreal, Toronto, Niagara, Chicago, Denver and Salt Lake City. Needless to explain, I reached home with moving slowly toward me. As it came nearer, I discovered it was a man, undoubtedly lost in the desert. He came slowly and fell exhausted at my feet. I could see he was starving and half dead with thirst. I knew I had water concealed in my roots that I had saved from the winter rains, but I did not know how to tell him. Finally, by wiggling my roots underground, I exposed a moist spot near him. This cooled his cheek, and being refreshed he soon came to his senses. He saw the damp spot and with his remaining strength dug to where the water lay concealed.

"Although he was strengthened by this a little, he was still weak with hunger. Then I had an idea. The seeds in my cones were edible, so I dropped a large cone before him, exposing a few of the seeds. He tasted them and greedily devoured as many as he could find. I dropped another cone and this he devoured also; then he rose up and went on into the shelter of the forest."

When the little desert pine had finished, all the other trees were silent, for they knew that this tale far surpassed any of theirs. Mother Nature rose from her place and said, smilingly, to the little tree: "I confer upon you, my humble desert friend, the honor of being called 'The Tree Most Loved By Man,' and, besides that, I will make your seeds richer and more delightful than ever."

And so, although the Desert Pinon may not be the most useful in a general way, it gives us more joy, through its delicious pine-nuts, than any other evergreen.

Chico could not for the life of him tell why he had uttered such words. They practically sealed his doom, to say nothing of Tommy, who believed in caution.

Mrs. Bean was still looking at him, in an appraising manner, her eyes gleaming like points of fire.

"I said what did you mean by such threats?" she repeated, getting to her feet, after much labored breathing.

Chico shrugged his shoulders, sparring for time, "Need I repeat?" he asked. "I have every reason to believe there has been crooked play." The landlady studied him closely, saw his eyes, narrowed with anger, his fine head thrown back in defiance. There was a quiet courage about him, which caused her to say, "Well, you might have been mistaken. People have fallen out of windows, you know."

Chico saw he had won his point, and drew a deep breath.

"Sometimes," he agreed, "but not as a general rule. I know my friend entered the room next door, so he must have been literally shoved into the courtyard below."

"The gentleman who rents that apartment is a well-known writer," lied Mrs. Bean. "Shall I call him and let you talk to him?" It was a clever move, but Chico was equal to it. "Tomorrow," he said, "too sleepy now. Think I'll rest in this chair, if I may. Tommy should not be moved tonight, and I don't intend to leave him alone."

Mrs. Bean grew solicitous of his comfort. She brought a footstool, blankets, and a pillow from her closet. "Too bad," she lamented, "your friend has the only couch. My quarters are quite crowded."

Chico murmured sleepy assent and dropped into deep slumber, from which he was awakened by Tommy's hand, tapping his own.

"Sst!" he whispered. "I've tons to tell you. How long was I out?" Chico fought to clear a sleep-clouded mind, sinking on his knees, beside Tommy's couch.

"I've messed things up," he confessed, and told him all that happened. When his narrative was ended, his friend tossed restlessly upon his pillow. "This is bad," he muttered. "Here I am, down and out, and you've jimmed everything, drawing things to a head when I am helpless. Why did you do it Chick?"

The two boys looked into each other's eyes, long and earnestly, then Tommy grasped Chico's arm. "You're game," he said, "playing for a showdown, when ammunition is leveled on yourself." Chico's face flushed painfully. "It wasn't that at all," he said earnestly. "I don't know why I said what I did. The words just tumbled out, but I feel in some strange way it is best."

"What do you suppose Mr. X is playing for?" Tommy asked, after a short pause.

"Our elimination. That is plain, but the same old question mark stays with us. We have done nothing that could merit revenge; we are not criminals, or even adventurers. Then, why all this perplexing behavior on the part of Mr. X?"

Chico laid a finger on his lips as he heard the landlady's voice answering the phone. She was saying. "The boy is asleep, not seriously hurt. No—nothing to fear. I wouldn't do that if I were you, it would be very foolish, under the circumstances."

Tommy was gripping Chico's hand and his fingers, circled about his wrist, were cold as ice.

"She's at it again, referring to me, of course. Wonder who's on the wire." He was rewarded, by hearing the click of her receiver, then Mrs. Bean appeared in the doorway.

"Well," she said with a forced smile, "feeling better?"

Tommy's diplomacy rose to the surface of his disgruntled feelings. "Decidedly, thanks to you, and my friend. I understand you have been enormously good to me."

Mrs. Bean studied him with lifted brows. "You're a smart one," she said. "Flies walk into honey, but have small use for vinegar."

"Now," laughed Tommy, rising uncertainly on one elbow, "would you make me uncomfortable, when I am already your debtor?"

"That is neither here nor there," parried Mrs. Bean, still unwilling to evince friendliness. Tommy cast about for ways and means to vanquish her ill nature. Then, just as he was about to try another sally, the phone rang insistently.

HIGH LIGHTS OF HISTORY

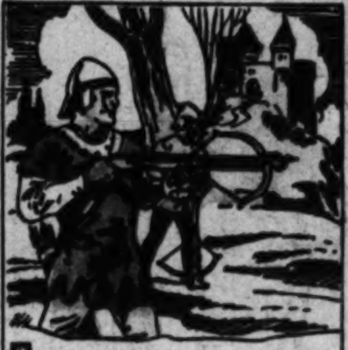
Chapter CXXIV: Gunpowder and Early Firearms.

By J. CARROLL MANSFIELD

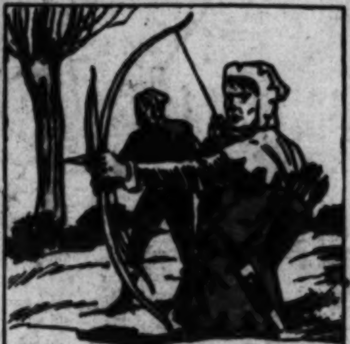
THE WEAPONS AND MODES OF WARFARE OF THE MIDDLE AGES UNTIL THE 14TH CENTURY DIFFERED BUT SLIGHTLY FROM THOSE OF ANCIENT TIMES.

THEN GUNPOWDER AND FIREARMS BEGAN TO COME INTO USE, AND THE MILITARY SCIENCE UNDERWENT MANY CHANGES.

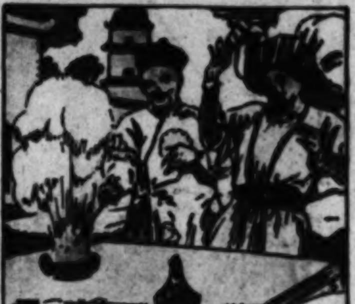
THESE CHANGES CAME ABOUT GRADUALLY, HOWEVER, AND FOR A CENTURY OR MORE THE OLD WEAPONS WERE USED WITH THE NEW.



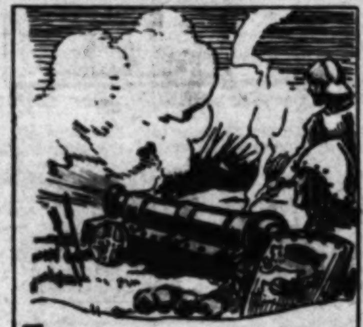
BEFORE THE INVENTION OF FIREARMS THE CHIEF MISSILE WEAPON WAS THE BOW AND ARROW. THE "CROSSBOW" (SHOWN ABOVE) WAS MOST USED IN FRANCE, GERMANY AND ITALY.



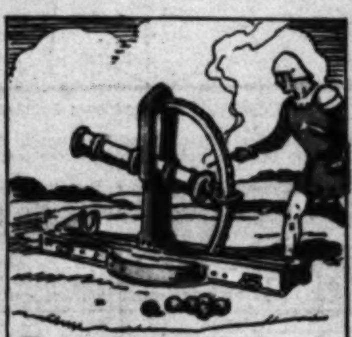
ENGLISH ARCHERS CLUNG TO THE POWERFUL "LONGBOW," A WEAPON WITH WHICH THE ENGLISH TRIUMPHED OVER THE FRENCH AT THE BATTLES OF CRÉCY AND POITIERS.



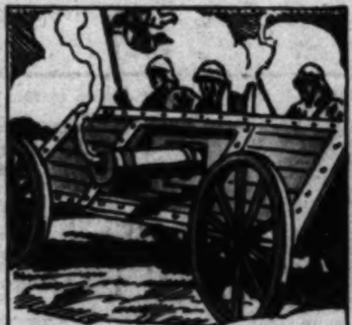
GUNPOWDER WAS INVENTED BY THE CHINESE, WHO USED IT FOR A LONG TIME BEFORE EUROPEANS KNEW ANYTHING ABOUT IT. SARACEN TRADERS CARRIED THE KNOWLEDGE OF GUNPOWDER WESTWARD, AND FINALLY INTRODUCED IT INTO EUROPE.



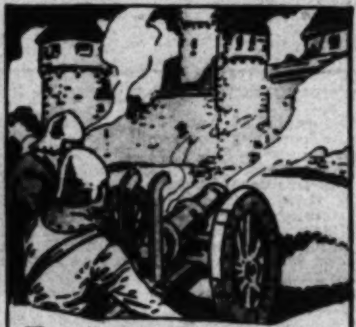
THE FIRST CRUDE CANNON WERE USED BY THE ENGLISH AT THE BATTLE OF CRÉCY IN 1346 A.D. THEY DID LITTLE DAMAGE BUT STARTLED THE ENEMY BY THE NOISE THEY MADE. ROUND STONES SERVED AS CANNON BALLS.



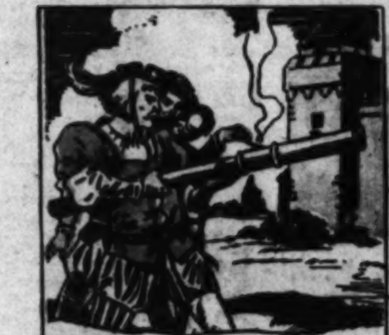
A LITTLE LATER THE FRENCH USED A SMALL CANNON WHICH COULD BE AIMED MORE READILY BY MEANS OF A SIMPLE ELEVATING DEVICE. IT DISCHARGED BALLS OF COPPER OR IRON.



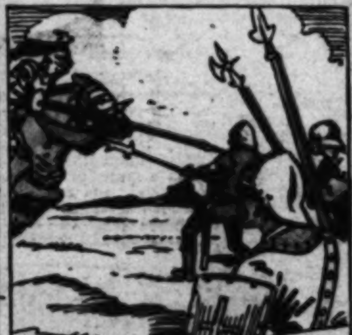
THE FIRST PRACTICAL GUN CARRIAGE APPEARED IN THE 15TH CENTURY. IT ENABLED THE GUN TO BE MOVED ABOUT EASILY AND AFFORDED PROTECTION TO THE GUNNERS.



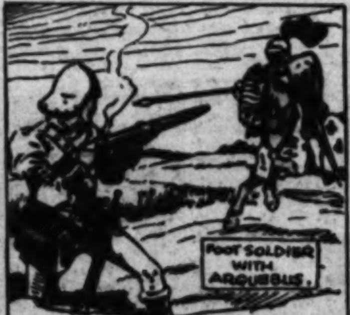
CANNON PROVED SO EFFECTIVE IN BATTERING DOWN THE WALLS OF THE STRONGEST CASTLES THAT THE LATTER BECAME OBSOLETE AS A MEANS OF DEFENSE AND CEASED TO BE BUILT AFTER 1500.



THE FORE-RUNNER OF THE MODERN RIFLE WAS THE CLUMSY "HAND CANNON" OF THE 15TH CENTURY. ONE SOLDIER HELD AND AIMED THE PIECE, ANOTHER FIRED IT.



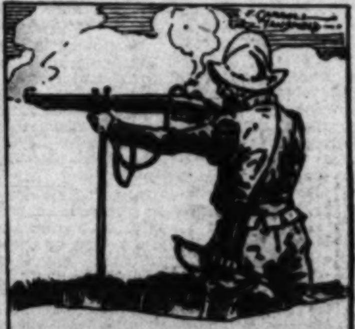
BEFORE THE HAND CANNON CAME INTO USE, THE LIGHTLY ARMED COMMON SOLDIER WHO FOUGHT ON FOOT WAS NO MATCH FOR THE ARMORED KNIGHT AND HIS PONDEROUS CHARGER.



FOOT SOLDIER WITH ARQUEBUS.

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate

BUT WITH THE COMING OF FIREARMS THE FOOT SOLDIER COULD SHOOT THE KNIGHT BEFORE HE CAME TO CLOSE QUARTERS. ARMORED KNIGHTS SOON WENT INTO THE DISCARD.



THE "ARQUEBUS" OF QUEEN ELIZABETH'S DAY (16TH CENTURY) WAS AN IMPROVEMENT UPON THE HAND CANNON. THIS IN TURN WAS FOLLOWED BY THE MATCHLOCK MUSKET (SHOWN ABOVE)

Here's Pit and Pat Sun Visor For You to Wear

Cut around the heavy lines of the visor and paste on heavy cardboard, then cut out the two upper disks to act as a brace for the string which is fastened to each end of the visor through the holes indicated. The disks should be pasted in place for security.

Aunt Dolly's Letter Box

Dearest Pal:

I want more of your "Magic City" and then more on top of that. It is the most comical, interesting, gripping book I have ever read. Don't you dare stop writing it. Please relieve the strain and tell me how long it will run. There are fifty friends of mine in school, who took The Times just to get this one delicious tale of fairyland, so you see, dearest aunt, the public does appreciate your work.

The "Bungle-Bug" is lovely. She has made me laugh until I've cried nearly, and as for Squirmy, well, there is only one fish in all the sea, as far as I'm concerned. His saucy little language and way of doing business are a true delight. How did you ever think of such a plot? It is better than all the other books rolled into one.

Devotedly,
[Signed] ANABELLE HANSEN,
Fresno.

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

I am sending in a book report, some hidden names, a card trick, and "A Discovery." I hope you can read them; that is, I hope you have the time, etc.

Even though the friendship contest has closed it will not stop me from getting more members. So would you please send me membership blanks and pins, etc., for Evelyn Hansen and Mildred Dutton? They are just "dying" to join the very best club in the world. And I don't blame them, in fact I feel very sorry for them because they are not yet members.

I guess it would be best in every way for me not to write something that I just can't. If I sent you poems it would be just a waste of your time and my paper because as I said before, I just can't write poems that make any sense. I always thought it was so simple to write poetry, but I take it all back now. It's terrible! That is, to write it; the poetry itself is all right.

Aunt Dolly, I don't see how you ever thought of all those queer creatures that you put in "The Magic City." Honestly I just laugh myself sick at the poor "Bungle-Bug" and its queer ways. I sure do wish I could write like that, but as wishing never did much good, I'm just going to try and try. But don't you get a "swell head" when you listen to all the praise from "The Magic City?" I should think you would, but then you have every right in the world to be proud of it.

Oh, yes, I was going to start this letter with some excuse for not writing for such a long time, but I forgot. Well, I know it's just perfectly awful the way I haven't written, but I've just been terribly busy. And now I can't write any more because I have to go to bed.

Love.
[Signed] BETTY GODBE,
Glendale.

ALBERT KAELIN

By Albert Kaelin, Age 13 Years, Los Angeles

Dear Aunt Dolly:

I would like to join The Junior Times Club. I have been reading your magazine for a long time, but have failed to write, asking if I could join.

"The Magic City" is the best story I have ever read, and I think you are the best writer I have ever run across.

Sincerely yours,
[Signed] ELEANOR WINSON,
Long Beach.

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

Perhaps you would like to know how much joy your book, "The Magic City" has given me. I am only one member who appreciates it deeply, a crippled boy at that, but your story, so full of nonsense and rhyme, has lightened my burdens a great deal. The only thing is, your chapters are short. I'm hungry for say a column, or a column and a half each Sunday. Wouldn't this be possible? If I wrote into one of the big editors and begged real hard, would they give you the space?

Aunt Dolly, isn't it wonderful to be such a well-known writer? No one in the world can turn out stuff like yours; it's simply glorious. I know every boy and girl in America is reading your "Magic City."

All my love,
[Signed] WINSTON PAVARAIL,
Venice.

Dear Auht Dolly:

I am glad to be in the honor list. I was going to tell you that I like "The Magic City." Since I showed it to father, he likes it. This Sunday the first thing he did was to look at "The Magic City." I am anxiously waiting to know how many points I have. You told me a long time ago that I had fourteen points. I am going to do my best.

Sincerely,
[Signed] WILLIAM CURRIELCHE, Los Angeles.

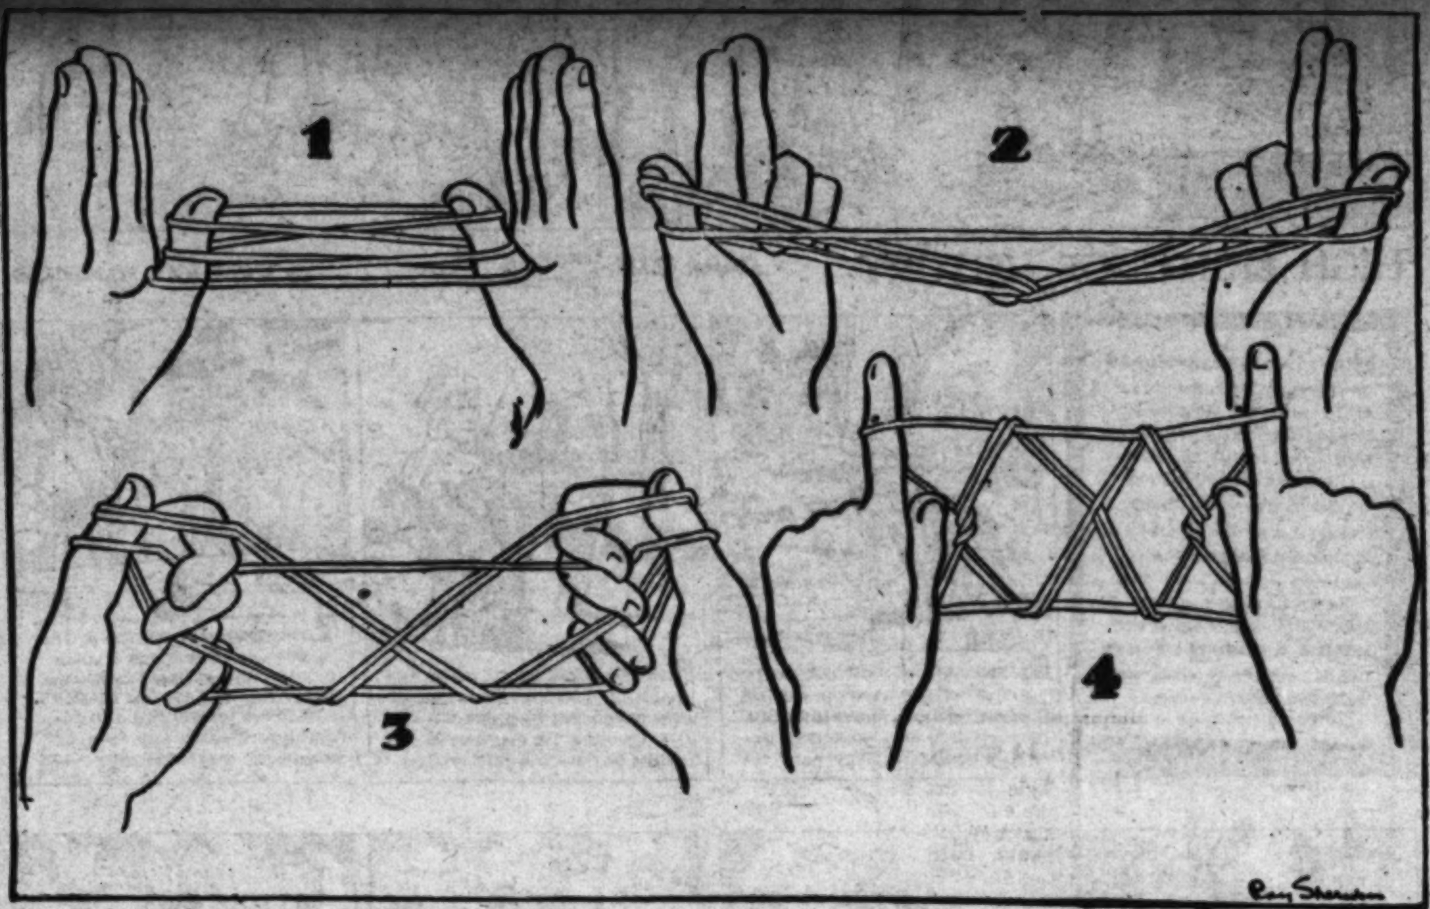
Oh, I saw my boy friend named Adolfo Curiel. He said he wanted to be in the honor list. He wrote a little note to you. He said, "I like 'The Magic City.'"

THE MOON

By Clara Scott

Pale moon,
Silver disk,
High above
The sleeping world—
Bright
Against the dusky evening sky,
Shining,
Gently gliding,
Across the heavens—
Diana,
Huntress of the silver bow,
Guides you
Through the night.

Twin Stars



This is a very pretty figure and easy to make. It differs from many other figures in that the final design is outlined by a doubled string instead of a single one. Here is how to do it:

Take the first position. This, as you remember, leaves you with loops on each thumb, each pointer and each middle finger. Now with the thumbs take the loops off the pointers, bringing these loops well down toward the original thumb-loop, and then take the loops off the little fingers, keeping these loops well toward the tops of the thumbs. This gives you the position shown in Fig. 1. It is important to keep these loops well separated.

Now that all the loops are on the thumbs, with the ring fingers of each hand lift up the two lower outside thumb strings and get the ring fingers on top of the upper outside thumb string. Pull this down to the palms of the hand. This gives you Fig. 2.

Now grip the string that was just pulled down to the palms with the ring and little fingers, leaving the middle and index fingers free for duty. Notice that there is a double loop on each thumb, running down to the middle of the crossed strings, and a straight string running from thumb to thumb on the inside—that is, of course, the side of the thumb nearest to you. Put the pointer and middle fingers of each hand through this doubled loop and grasp the straight string between them, as shown in Fig. No. 3.

Now, still holding the string down with the little and ring fingers and holding the straight thumb string tightly between the pointers and middle fingers, turn the hands away from you with the pointers pointing up. As the hands turn you can release the middle fingers. This will give you the completed figure, as shown in Fig. 4. The effect is very pretty, for it looks as though there were two loops of string instead of one—one loop running from hand to hand, with the other doubled around it to form the twin stars.

UNIQUE FACTS

By Vernon Miller, Vancouver, B. C.

In Denmark there's a man who can see better with his eyes shut than with them open. Once, blindfolded, he piloted a ship through the dangerous channels around Copenhagen. He can read a newspaper with his eyes closed, and can read the contents of any book by looking at the outside of the cover.

An unstealable umbrella has been invented. Should anyone attempt to pinch it, the umbrella lets out a loud squeak for help. The voice comes from a secret device in the handle. One man caught "stealing" one of these umbrellas was a famous detective. He had absentmindedly picked it from a crowd of others.

THE WILL TO DO

By Virginia O'Rourke

We must all have that power! For without it, how could we face life's problems? If any of us ever expect to see the other side of life's rugged mountains of rocks, it is most essential that we have the will to climb to the top, so that we may peer into the Valley of Happiness below.

Many of us do nothing, but stand at the foot of the mountain, being only spectators to those, who, with every step of the way, are climbing to fame. We, who do that, wonder, "Now, why can't I do that?" Everyone of us can do it, if only we would dig around, and find a little of that will power that is hidden from view with the long - accumulated dust of disuse. When it is found, it should be polished up a bit, and then put to use. After it has been used for a while, we usually find the handier it becomes. Then wonder is expressed that we ever got along without it before.

After that long-lost power of will has been found, and has been put to a good use, those who have found it begin to see life in a different light. They are climbing the mountain—and the light that they see is shining from the Valley of Happiness.

PUTTING IT OFF

By Bernard Rosenhouse

Of all habits, putting it off is the one to be most feared. Tomorrow comes and is soon gone, while the idler dreams. The procrastinator eases his conscience by telling himself he has plenty of time in which to do the work. But that is as far as he gets. Today is flying away with the ticking of each precious second, and is soon a thing of the past. Putting a thing off gets one nowhere.

He who puts things off will eventually be put off himself.

COTTON

By Mary Leslie Hensler

Cotton is harvested entirely by hand. As not all the pods, or bolls, are open at the same time, it is necessary to go over the field several times.

Machines for harvesting cotton have been invented, but have not proved satisfactory. They injure the unripe pods, and take in, with the fibers, leaves and other parts of the plant.

After the cotton is picked, it is taken to the cotton gin, where it is separated from the seeds. It is then pressed into bales, and sent to the States of New England.

The cotton plant, like all agricultural products, is attacked by insects. The one most injurious to the crop is the boll weevil. It is about one-fourth inch long, and the young feed on the buds, and the bolls. When the buds are attacked they don't open. The pink boll worm is another cotton pest. It lives in the seeds of the plant, and is easily carried into new territory. On introducing cotton seeds into a new country or State, the seeds must be thoroughly examined.

A FEW TRICKS

By Harold Harding, Arlington Heights, Ill.

A COIN TRICK

A hat is filled with coins, and one is chosen by a spectator. This is passed around for inspection, then put in the hat. The magician reaches behind, and immediately pulls out the chosen coin. The secret lies in the fact, that the chosen coin, after being passed around, will be warm, from all the hands that have held it. All the magician has to do, is to feel for the warm coin.

A CARD TRICK

Some one selects a certain kind of card, such as clubs, spades, etc. The magician gives a spectator a pencil and paper, and tells him to go to his assistant in an opposite room, and the assistant will write the name that was selected on the piece of paper.

The secret is the pencil, the magician has a certain colored pencil for each card. The assistant knows the card immediately by the pencil he is given.

"Joyous Glad"—A Flower With a Big "Fan" Following

(Illustrating Article by Frances Duncan)

More and more is the gladiolus coming to vie with the iris for the title, "The Poor Man's Orchid." Like the iris, the "gladsome glad" is a hearty grower and a satisfying bloomer. Here is one of the newer members of the "glad" family, Cecil Houdyshel's Los Angeles.

A planting of gladiolus at Camarillo, near Ventura, maintained by the Aggeler and Musser Seed Company, of Los Angeles. Glorious masses of color are achieved in these prosaic commercial fields.

The gladiolus, "Orchid," which in 1927 was shown as a new "creation" of the Santa Fe Bulb Gardens' expert, Dr. A. R. Sprague. Mary Ann Morrissey shows the possibilities of the gladiolus as a corsage flower in this picture.

This is the South African wild flower, Gladiolus Racemosus, parent form of many a gorgeous "glad." This specimen was grown by D. O. Houghton of San Fernando.

While the flowers are blooming is the time for "New Year's resolutions" about planting. Here is a whole field of "glad" inspiration at Muscoy, near San Bernardino.

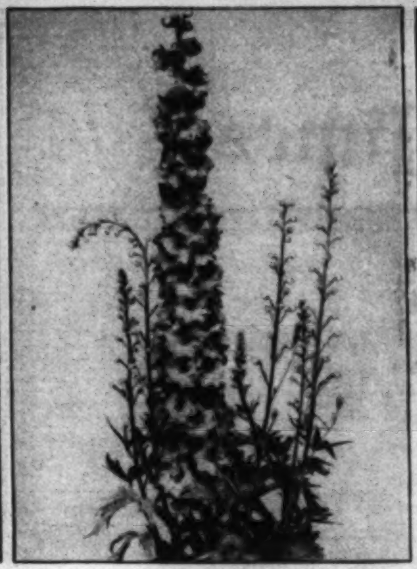
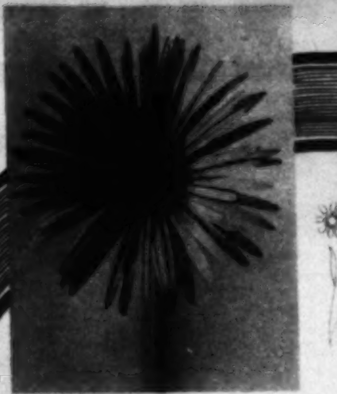
Meet These Floral Debutantes, Belles of Recent Shows

By Frances Duncan



Very effective in the garden is this new hollyhock-flowered delphinium. Tall as a hollyhock, its great spikes are closely set with semi-double flowers. It was displayed at "Germain's" recent flower show.



The double gerbera, or Transvaal daisy; a new form of this popular and lovely flower.

A new sweet pea, exhibited as "No. 379" at the recent "Germain" show. As a result of balloting by the show visitors, it will be known as "Los Angeles."

Carnation-flowered petunia, one more variation of a highly variable flower. It was exhibited at "Germain's" showing.

A BRILLIANT and unusually interesting season of spring flower shows came to a close with the San Fernando Valley exhibition at Van Nuys, held June 21-22; and an educational flower show given by "Germain's," June 24 and 25, at that concern's Sixth and Main Street store in Los Angeles.

The long-continued cool weather made every show in almost every community very different from the show of the year before. Where, in other years, gladioli had dominated, this year they were conspicuous by their absence—"not out yet" was the report in many gardens; so with the roses. The result was that many lovely garden flowers which before had had no chance of prominence, had this year important roles at the shows and there was a richness in variety that, to flower lovers, was vastly interesting. Never before have the flowering shrubs appeared to such advantage, and rarely have they been seen in California in such fine form. Spring-flowering bulbs and irises reveled in the coolness, and when warm weather did come roses were exceptionally lovely, although too late to "put on their act." In no year has the charm of spring-flowering shrubs and bulbs and flowers been so emphasized in the flower shows.

The sudden hot weather in late June also gave results at the shows which the gardeners noted. At Van Nuys and at the "Germain" show it was evident that although roses and sweet peas felt the heat, a lovely new Scabiosa which was displayed at both these shows, Scabiosa Columbaria—a charming cornflower blue and of much delicacy of form—stood the heat wonderfully well, hardly minding it more than a cactus. A new larkspur, displayed at "Germain's," of the stock-flowered type—Empress Rose by name—proved to be another plant for hot weather resistance, as did Alstromeria. Of the wisdom of using these for summer gardens in Southern California many a gardener took note.

Exhibits of cacti and succulents have taken a prominent place in all the shows; the desert garden, as an exhibition feature, has evidently come to stay. Another thing very evident, is that the California amateur comes very near being professional. The beauty of the individual exhibits, the quality of the flowers shown, has been exceptionally high, and skill in staging exhibits is fast becoming one of the California gardener's strong points. Also, the cooperation of nurseryman and seedsman and amateur has been very delightful.

"Germain" Show Educational

That the amateur gardener really wants to know his plants was evinced by the goodly crowd which, in spite of the heat, thronged "Germain's" Sixth and Main Street store in Los Angeles, June 24 and 25. The store was beautifully decorated and the stairway to the exhibition rooms so decked with asparagus sprengeri and ferns that it was really a pity some June bride had not availed herself of the opportunity and used it as a setting for her wedding gown and bridesmaids.

We have "funeral parlors" in California, because the typical bungalow is too small—why not "wedding parlors" in connection with florist's establishments for more joyous occasions? They should be popular. Why should not the wedding take place at Howard and Smith's, or Aggeler and Musser's, or at Armstrong's in Ontario?—and one could continue the list. There are a dozen or more horticultural establishments which would lend themselves to such festivities. At all events, that was what "Germain's" staircase suggested with the abundant roses and "glads" above it.

Much interest was centered in the new "Germain" sweet pea, which is a clear, luscious "watermelon" pink with a white throat and petals ruffled. There were 140 different roses, not in baskets but displayed, a few in a vase, carefully labeled. These roses were simply cut from the fields, not given any especial coddling. Notable among the many gladioli displayed was a gorgeous red "Charles Dickens," of English origin, flower something like "Henry Ford," but better. Another English sort, "George V"—which Briggs also exhibited at the Biltmore—is a splendid dark red variety and there are many other notables which one would like to mention but the point is that the gardener could look at the "live catalogue" and see the actual color.

A beautiful new rose displayed was the Talisman, deep red inside and golden yellow outside the petals—a rose especially lovely in its unfolding. Other novelties were the carnation-flowered petunia and a new variety of the California poppy with more delicacy and varied tinting. The amateur gardener will sit up and take notice of the annual larkspur, "Empress Rose"—a stock-flowered sort, very floriferous and wonderfully successful in hot weather. Roses and sweet peas might wilt in the heat, but this larkspur doesn't turn a petal.

The long table was filled with garden flowers in great variety. Here were splendid delphiniums, the new hollyhock-flowered kind, a development of the "Wrexham" strain, phlox, lilium regale, tritoma, alstromeria, gaillardia, calendula, a fine vase of the beautiful new "Scabiosa Columbaria," and scores of others, all arranged variety by variety, each sort carefully labeled. A goodly number of the visiting gardeners took notes of those that would combine well in a garden bed. This sort of exhibit must be a deal of work to the firm, but it's of great value to the amateur.

Presently, on their growing grounds, seedsmen and plantsmen will make small groupings showing effective combinations, just as a department store window shows the untutored exactly how a de luxe dining-room or bedroom is arranged and furnished. However, learning to know the materials is the first thing, and in this the educational exhibit as well as the flower show is of real service.

San Fernando Valley Show

As one entered the Athletic Hall at Van Nuys, where the recent flower exhibition of the San Fernando Valley was staged, a striking feature, beside the wealth of gladioli, was the delphinium exhibit of the "Larkspur Gardens" of Van Nuys. Every year this firm has an exhibit which is better than the previous year's, and this year the larkspurs were gorgeous. Mrs. Quest also showed regal lilies which in the garden combine delightfully with delphiniums. Paul Howard's arbor and garden seats garlanded with Bougainvillea were very effective, and the nurserymen's exhibits, which this year were more complete than usual, made a charming setting for the gorgeous colors of the "glads.' Howard and Smith's great basket of Scabiosa Columbaria atracted much attention—it is a lovely flower.

The honors among the amateurs went to Mrs. Byron Holley of Burbank. For the "best general display" she won the silver vase of the San Fernando Valley Horticultural Society, which last year was won by Mrs. C. A. Anthony. First prize for the best display of gladioli went to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sheldon. Frank White's seedling, which won him a first prize, was a very lovely flower. The bronze medal for the best high school display went to the Van Nuys High School for an exhibit staged by five boys and two girls—names, unfortunately, not given. The Van Nuys Woman's Club took the first prize for the best display by a club, Cahuenga Park Woman's Club winning second place, and a special prize going to the Garden section of the Burbank Woman's Club.

There were many interesting exhibits; notable was that of the Califorain Botanic Garden, a clever rock garden by the Beverly Hills Nursery Company, in which 150 varieties of rock-loving plants were used. Another notable was the display of aquatic plants by the Woodford Water Gardens, Van Nuys, which took first prize in this class. The nurserymen's exhibits were more complete than in other years; that of R. M. Teague, Ventura Boulevard, which won the first prize for the best nurseryman's display (W. J. Knecht winning second, and Paul Howard, third place), was varied and interesting. Among many other plants, Mr. Teague had exceptionally fine cocos plumosa. Mr. Teague also won first prize for the best nurseryman's display, and for the best specimens. W. J. Knecht won first place for the best general display, with Paul Howard taking second prize and the Gem Gladiolus Gardens, third. Mr. Knecht also had an interesting display of cacti and succulents, taking first and second prize also for flowering and for potted plants.

The best "glad" of the show was from the Anthony Gardens, and the heavy prize-winners in the gladiolus section were the Hudson Floral Gardens of Van Nuys and P. T. Burrus of the Sepulveda Gardens; the Gem Gladiolus Gardens of San Fernando showed some charming "glads," chiefly of the primulinus and miniature types. Hudson Floral Gardens took first prize on the best display of glads, Mr. Burrus winning second, and the Gem Gardens, third prize. Hudson Gardens won first on the best collection, also on the best vase of gladioli, winning the latter with some splendid spikes of "Mrs. Leon Douglas." This firm took firsts with "Virginia," with "Mrs. J. K. Ormsby," with "Mrs F. C. Peters," and with "Purple Glory." Mr. Burrus won on the best basket of grandiflorus type, also on the "prims" and for some spikes of "Marie Kunderd." The Gem Gardens' showing of "Rose Ash" won a first prize. Dr. D. A. Houghton of San Fernando won first, second and third prize for the best seedling.

There are notable gardeners in the San Fernando Valley, and the Southern California Garden Club, by which large title is known an exceptionally lively garden club which originated in Van Nuys, knows the growing of bulbs and of many other flowers exceedingly well. Many gardeners may like to avail themselves also of the botany and study class of the San Fernando Valley Horticultural Society, which meets on the fourth Thursday of each month in the lecture room of the Van Nuys Public Library.

The Outdoor Living-Room

The outdoor living-room is a very definite part both of the California garden and of the California home. On this page is shown a delightful one designed by the Pasadena landscape architect, Miss Florence Yoch, on the grounds of F. A. Bovey, Pasadena. Californians, however, can't pride themselves that the outdoor living-room, or the garden room, is a bright new California idea. Both are comparatively new in American gardening, but they had them in Pompeii and Babylon. Living in a warm climate, folk come to find comfort in the same sort of arrangement, even if they are centuries apart.

The Coming Torrance Show

Nurserymen and amateurs will be interested in some of the prizes offered at the Torrance Flower Show to be held July 26 and 27.

"For the best ten blooms of an unnamed seedling dahlia entered by anyone, the winning dahlia to be named after Mrs. Nellie Crosslund, Gold Star Mother of the local American Legion Post, $35 in cash." (Page Mrs. Buxton of Santa Monica and Mrs. Barker of Bell!) "We want commercial exhibits from anywhere," writes Lieut. Carleton Bell, who is manager of the exhibition, which is being sponsored by the Torrance American Legion, "and we have several nice cups and other worth-while trophies and prizes for them. We have a beautiful bronze and sterling trophy donated by the Torrance District Garden Club to be awarded for the best display made by a Garden Club or Garden Section of a woman's club—open to any such organization." (Page Whittier Heights, Covina, and Santa Ana.) "Also a similar cup for the best display made in the name of any community, chamber of commerce, or other civic or service organization."

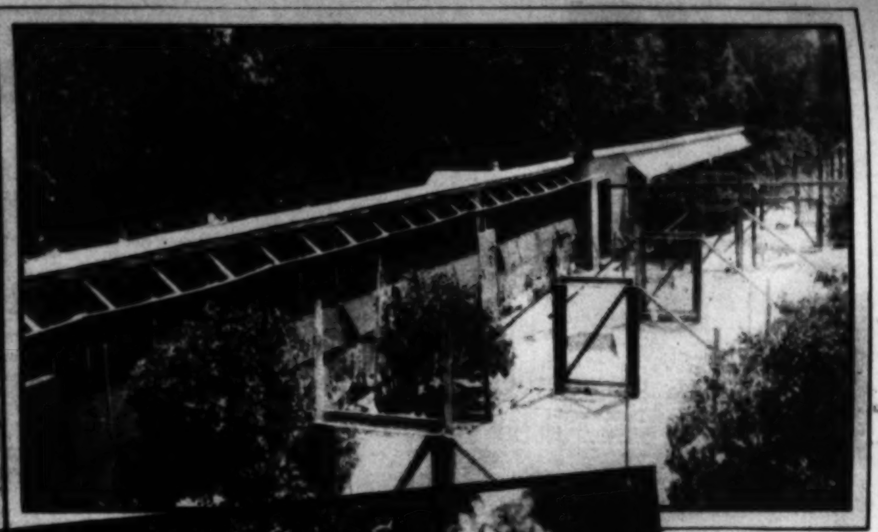
No More Wind-Blown Bobs for This Fontana Poultryman

(Illustrating Article in This Issue)

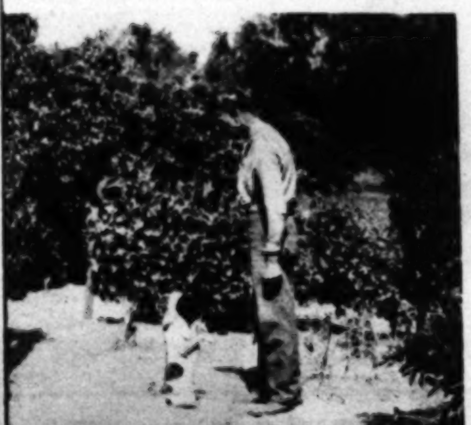
For eleven years Frank P. Eiffler was foreman of the ladies' and children's barber shop in one of Los Angeles' biggest department stores. Then he turned to feathered chickens at Fontana, on a well-equipped small citrus grove. It's lots of work, but lots of fun, too, says Mr. Eiffler, shown here luring the hens out to get their picture taken.



Well-equipped poultry house at the Eiffler place, where 4,000 chicks were brooded this spring in groups of 500, the owner looking out for them as well as doing all the other work about the place.

Time for a garden, too. Think of that, you who "crab" about caring for a mere thousand baby chicks. A former "city guy," Mr. Eiffler has a great capacity for work, and for results.

Bees, too, just a few colonies, to convert the varied blooms of orange trees, alfalfa, and flowers, into honey.



Life on the farm has its compensations, including time to train and enjoy pets. The little terrier "does his stuff" for the camera.

Good "typy" White Leghorns are Mr. Eiffler's specialty. He has had very good success with them.

Rabbits, several kinds, add more diversity. Here's one of the popular chequered kind.

Cooperative Methods Pay
—On Fontana Poultry Ranches

POULTRY earnings are more on Fontana ranches because of the modern cooperative methods. There is cooperative buying of feed and marketing of your products. Feed is delivered to your door, and eggs are picked up daily. These wholesale methods give you a greater margin of profit in your business.

Eggs are now the highest in ten years, and feed is the lowest in fifteen years. Fontana strain white leghorns have been earning $1.26 to better than $2.00 per hen per year net over all expenses. You can have the same opportunity for a country home and your own business under the Fontana Plan.

An Old Section Takes a New Lease on Life

San Jacinto-Hemet Valley, Long at End of Road, Soon to Be on a Main Travel Artery—Change Expected to Give Impetus to Agriculture in Notably Fertile Area

By Helen W. King

GIVEN a setting of unusual beauty many climatic advantages for both man and agricultural products, a cash return of more than $3,500,000 last year from these products, one wonders just what's wrong with the picture of San Jacinto-Hemet Valley. Oddly enough, it is the people who live there, whose investments are made there, who point out the defects. That is a pretty wholesome situation, especially when they tell you what remedies they are going to use.

Not everyone there places his finger on the same flaw and the remedy suggested is not always the same, but there is much of interest and value to be found in all their viewpoints. Variance of ideas on some points does not seem to have prevented agreement upon others, which explains why they are actually doing something about it.

There are a great many people living relatively close to San Jacinto-Hemet Valley who have never been there and to whom the place is merely a name. Originally it was a part of San Diego county, but years ago it was transferred to the jurisdiction of Riverside county. Some have the idea that the landscape in that section presents much the same appearance as that immediately back of Riverside, or that of Perris Valley. That is wrong. It is another case of "what a whale of a difference a few miles make."

No valley completely set in the lap of mountains, as this is, could lack beauty. To the east lies a high range dominated by the majesty of San Jacinto and Tahquitz peaks, and through a break in the skyline, one glimpses the hoary crest of San Gorgonio. Snow crowns these three peaks a good part of the year. To the northeast is a wall of lower mountains which keeps out the wind and sand storms of the desert beyond, while on the west, the coast range thrusts back the blanket of sea-fogs which prevail along the shore country much of the year. Add to this the deep, cool green of the valley's alfalfa ranches, the beauty of its orchards, the trees and lawns and blossoming vines that mark the homes of its people and you have a truly lovely picture.

In the heart of the valley lie 100,000 acres of tillable soil and tributary valleys add 300,000 acres more from which additional resources could be drawn. There are two towns in the valley, San Jacinto and Hemet. San Jacinto went through all the tribulations of a border town in the early days. With development the better element dominated and it is today a serene, prideful little town, proud of its wide, well-paved streets and its modern business buildings. Hemet is much newer and is situated in what is now the center of agricultural development. In it are the industrial activities of the valley and its citizens are intent on making it attractive while they are busily engaged in getting things done.

THE WATER RESOURCES

On the northeastern slopes, near San Jacinto surface water is found at a depth of from seven to thirty feet which explains the presence of natural meadows lush amid the cottonwood and willow groves where wild grass is found all the year around. Through other parts of the valley are artesian wells and in practically all parts water can be pumped. The underground reservoirs and streams have never failed, for there is a large watershed. The quality of the water is worth mentioning, for, it is notably free from undesirable minerals.

The average elevation of the valley is given as 1400 feet, but it is a full 1600 at San Jacinto and Hemet. It gets hot there in the summer and it gets cold in the winter, but it is not extreme in either case and always there is that dryness which makes both heat and cold more agreeable than they are in moister climates.

Both the climatic and agricultural advantages of this section have been well realized for the last fifty years. It was greatly favored by many Indian tribes in the Southland. The Dons to whom great tracts of land were granted by the Spanish and Mexican governments were well pleased with it and clung to portions of their holdings much longer than they did in many other parts of California. In fact, there are ranches, once part of some vast grant, still owned and cultivated by the descendants of the original holders.

This seems a good place to say more about the water situation for, as elsewhere in California, water development plays a major role. The crops need water—lots of it. Because conditions distinctly vary in what might be called the two biggest agricultural areas of the valley, there are two water companies, operating in widely different ways.

One is called the Lake Hemet Water Company originally organized by W. F. Whittier, a man of vision and wealth who came to the valley in 1888 and was distracted from his primary purpose hunting, by the possibilities he saw for the future. This company serves 7500 acres of cultivated land at present, but has sufficient water resources to more than provide for its dedicated area, 10,000 acres. Its main supply is impounded in a mountain lake twenty-three miles away, behind a rock-face dam 135 feet high. Lake Hemet, as it is called, is 3 miles long and is fed by 102 square miles of watershed.

THEY'LL "Get BY"

If that is the case, why do we hear of a water shortage this year? John Faull, general manager of the company, is the first to acknowledge that there is a shortage. He explains it thus:

"In 1923, with the sanction of engineers and experts for the Railroad Commission, we built what is called a puddle-core fill, a sort of a levee. It was never intended as a dam. In 1927, unprecedented falls of snow, followed by dissolving rains, brought about abnormal conditions and washed out our levee so that a great deal of water was wasted. We decided to take no further chances. We built to protect our water supply under any possible conditions of that sort. We spent thousands of dollars and the work was complesed in ample time to care for the water this winter. You know what happened. Rains were below normal. Snows when they fell were crusted over by low temperatures, so that the melting process was slow and the water seeped into the underground streams. It will benefit us there, but our lake water is low in consequence.

"Conditions are no worse than they were in 1925 when we had a shortage. We got through then and we'll get through now. We are in a better position, really, for the company has put down two big wells which will help a lot, and many of our people have sunk wells, also. Those who have plenty of well water are giving up their runs from the lake. We have 300 miles of ditches and flumes. We are co-operating with one another so that water can be diverted from private wells into the company ditches. By pulling together, we will be all right and the crops will not suffer."

Mr. Faull believes that solving the water problems is the biggest step forward for agricultural development in the valley. Others agree with him and the evidence of their efforts in this direction is increasingly visible.

The section of the valley lying to the south and west is where most of the alfalfa and grains are grown. Some portion is given over to fine apricot, peach and walnut orchards. This district of about 4500 acres is furnished water by the Fruitvale Mutual Water Company. According to W. H. Pawson, Jr. secretary-manager of the company, it has more water than it requires this year, from flowing wells sunk to a depth of from 300 to 700 feet, with lifts from 40 to 100 feet. The company has eleven separate pumping plants and was not using all of them. Mr. Pawson did not feel that there was cause for alarm over water-shortage in any part of the valley.

A GOODLY RETURN

A cash return of $3,727,449, which are Deputy County Horticultural Commissioner H. A. Richardson's figures for 1928 crops, looks pretty good. Especially as that shows an increase of $500,000 over the figures of 1927. But the men who know the possibilities of the valley are not satisfied. They want more production, more people to farm land that is lying idle. They also want diversification of crops, for as it is, alfalfa hay and seed, and apricots, dried, and canned and the sale of their pits, represent $1,500,000 out of the total revenue.

Since Mr. Richardson's report shows income from thirty-nine different crops, it looks like diversification could be had. A good deal of experimentation is going on and a lot of old-timers in the valley have been surprised to know how profitable crops of which they never thought can be. And another thing they are learning is the meaning of the term "marginal crop."

That means, for one thing the peach. It is equally true of a lot of other places in California. Because of frost damage in other sections, however, the peaches of San Jacinto-Hemet Valley will mean some money this year. The set of fruit is so heavy that thinning by hand, an expensive process, has had to be resorted to in order to "size" up the fruit. Nevertheless, peaches have been so worthless the last few years that many plantings have had little care. Those orchards which are bearing are well loaded, but the total crop will not be heavy.

A lot of frost-damage reports were circulated, largely because of the panic growers felt immediately after the cold spell. Smudging was quite generally resorted to and a careful check revealed a good deal of fruit. The canneries are expecting practically an average season. But for the frost, the crop would have been tremendous this year.

There are two fruit canneries, both in Hemet, the Hemet Packing Company and the California Co-operative Cannery. In addition to packing and drying apricots and peaches, the Hemet Packing Company handles a good many olives. This year it packed about 380 tons, some of which was shipped in from other districts.

TREE CROPS VARIED

For the last five years the olive crop in Southern California has been light. The trees in San Jacinto-Hemet Valley have borne their share and the fruit which does ripen is usually fine as to size and quality. Glen Brubaker, superintendent of the Hemet Packing Company, estimates that in addition to the olives packed by his company, some 250 tons were put up by the Moulton Packing Company, also of Hemet, which specializes in fancy olives. This year the trees are solid masses of bloom, but Mr. Brubaker points out that it is too early to judge what sort of a crop they will have.

The winter months are cold enough to insure a good dormant season for walnut trees and the orchards in the valley usually thrive and bear generously. Last year the nut crop brought $165,900 to the growers. However, there are drawbacks to this crop,

Gladiolus Fulfills Burbank's Prophecy in Meteoric Career

By Frances Duncan

AS a commercial flower, the gladiolus, for all its tremendous prestige, is comparatively new. The rose for centuries has been a flower in the culture of which florists have vied with each other for perfection—so with the easter lily, the carnation and, more recently, the chrysanthemum. But it is only during the last fifteen years that the gladiolus has taken so prominent a place that it is a dominating factor in the cut-flower market. So universally is it grown that it would be hard to find the town in California where there is not at least a town lot or two devoted to the culture of this radiant flower, and so wide is its distribution that expert growers and gladiolus fields are to be found in places as far separate as British Columbia and Australia; in Vermont and Connecticut and up-State New York, in Minnesota and Iowa, in Ohio and Indiana along the Pacific Coast from Oregon to San Diego the "glad" is highly esteemed.

Nowhere, however, has the culture of the gladiolus made such astonishing progress as in California. Climate and soil make California a happy hunting ground for the horticulturist, and skilled hybridists naturally gravitate hither as water seeks its level. It was not without good reason that Luther Burbank left the frosty winters of Massachusetts and established his experimental gardens in this favored land. California is to the rest of the United States as a well-equipped lath-house with a greenhouse adjacent and a worthy caretaker, Mother Nature, to see to the heating is to the bare, windswept outer world, a world in which the thermometer descends to the lower regions and it's up to the gardener to protect his plant infants as best he can. Thus it happens that the gladiolus planted every month in the year is a California idea—and a comparatively new one.

Hardly twenty years ago, and the gladiolus was a bulb—one of the summer-flowering bulbs which was planted when the ground grew warm, from the end of May to early June, and which bloomed for a short period in August. Often it was planted, many bulbs crowded together, in a raised circular bed in the center of a lawn in the "terrible" fashion used chiefly with cannas, with a ring of scarlet geraniums encircling all.

It was as late as 1911, relates the Southern California "glad" expert, Cecil Houdyshel, that Luther Burbank said to him: "In my opinion, the gladiolus is the coming flower." Mr. Houdyshel had gone to Santa Rosa full of enthusiasm for the amaryllis, in the culture of which he still takes great interest, but Burbank dissuaded him from centering his effort on it and urged the greater scope of the gladiolus and its almost limitless possibilities for improvement and variation. The result of this conversation was that Mr. Houdyshel returned from Santa Rosa with twelve varieties some half dozen bulbs of each, also some unnamed primulinus hybrids, among which was the parent of his "Los Angeles" gladiolus.

IT'S A "SURE FIRER"

One reason for the wide popularity of the gladiolus is the ease of its culture and the certainty of its blossoming. No flower is more tempting to amateur experiment; even hybridizing involving hand pollinating of the gladiolus is no extraordinarily difficult operation. The originator of "Mrs. Susan Dorsey," one of the 1927 prize-winning gladioli, was assisted by her 13-year-old daughter. And in California, the skilled amateur presently becomes a professional. Some of our most expert gladiolus growers began as amateurs. Mrs. Elizabeth Briggs, for instance, of the Briggs Floral Company, whose new gladioli are always watched with interest, began her work in a Sacramento back yard with an investment of $6.25. She relates that so little did she know about the

One-Time Bobber of Hair Is Now Farmer

FONTANA.—Bobs, of various shapes and patterns, and feminine pates, also of various dittos, for a good many years engrossed the attention of Frank P. Eiffler during his working hours. For eleven years he was in one big women's and children's barber shop, in a huge department store of Los Angeles. He had the responsibility for all the bobs on his shoulders during that time, for he was foreman.

Then he changed all that. For what reason, he does not say. Perhaps he felt a permanent wave of the disposition coming on. Certainly few men could have aught but sympathy for a maker of bobs, and the masculine author of this writing wishes him well on his chicken and citrus farm at Fontana.

For that is how far from the seafoam bottle Mr. Eiffler went. And if you don't believe he's happy, ask him. Or ask him to show you his chickens and his garden, and watch his face.

In the economic scheme of things, it appears that a man of Mr. Eiffler's capacity for work is wasted in a bobber shop. Anyone who can care for 4000 baby chicks, a flock of laying hens, a citrus grove, a drove, or herd, or whatever it is, or rabbits, and still have time for flowers and a variety vegetable garden, is a wonder, and he should [illegible] about it.

This one-time city man, with his willingness to put his literal shoulder to a very concrete wheel, has not hesitated to take advantage of readily available expert advice on subjects new to him, such as the care and feeding of poultry, and baby poultry. Given the expert advice, he puts it into effect, and the result is a small farm enterprise which bears an aspect of progress and industry.

Most theses upon city men going back to land carry the well-worn admonition: "You must not be afraid of work." This Fontana man certainly does not come in the work-fearing category, and the result of his defection from the tonsorial ranks will be watched, therefore, with much interest by the thesis writers, as well as by the "city guys" who feel the "call of the soil."

Use Mixed Fertilizer

A method of fertilizing the land which is proving popular in Imperial Valley consists in the use of a composted material made up of manure and gypsum. This material is wet down and allowed to undergo partial decomposition before it is applied to the land. Light applications are made. It has been used considerably on asparagus, cantaloupes, and to some extent on grapefruit.

continental Europe. The lemon shipments of the San Antonio Exchange have been going out recently in heavy volume, continued hot weather in the eastern States having raised the price to a high level. The exchange recently shipped twenty-five carloads east, bringing total shipments for the year so far to about 250 carloads. The exchange has just completed shipment eastward of fifty-nine cars of Valencia oranges, which brings the total shipments of this fruit up to 252 carloads for the new season.

Smaller Orange Crop

Redlands.—There is plenty of differences of opinion among the orange growers and the shippers of the Redlands district regarding the size of the orange crop for next year. Most of them are fairly well agreed, however that is will not be as large as the crop just handled, and they are thankful, since the heavy crop this year resulted in a great surplus of small fruit which could not be sold to advantage, clogging the market much of the time. The June drop was late this year because there was no hot weather, but it has been fairly heavy and estimates of some are for 600 cars less of navels next year than were shipped this year.

Big Trees Saved

San Fernando.—Realizing that it takes a generation to produce a good-sized tree but only an hour to destroy it, the local chamber of commerce "got busy" recently when two large palm trees on Porter Avenue were removed to make room for a new "drive-in" market, and donated the trees to a veterans' Hospital. The trees, some forty feet in height, were carefully taken out, loaded on trucks, transported to the hospital, and reset. A movement under way in San Fernando the past three years has resulted in many young trees being set out and the sparing of many of the older ones which otherwise would have gone before the onslaught of improvement projects.

Valencias Shipped

Terra Bella.—Up until the middle of June forty carloads of Valencia oranges had been shipped from the Grand View packing-house east of here. Shipments were made at the rate of two carloads a day. Picking ended about June 22, but packing continued through the month. Prices, while fair, were considerably below those of last year.

Shipping Under Way

Woodlake.—The advent of summer has stimulated shipment of fruit from this section. The Redbanks Orchards Company was recently shipping plums of a high quality at the rate of two or three cars per day. Early fresh figs are being shipped in daily increasing quantities. The Ragle ranch is dispatching from twenty to fifty crates per day. In the citrus field, the Valencias are about done. The Rooke packing-house, which has enjoyed a heavy run, closed the last of June. Sentinel Butte started its run June 22 for a short season of about two weeks.

Inspectors on Trains

Inspectors, working under both State and Federal authority, are now aboard all transcontinental trains entering California for the purpose of intercepting Florida citrus fruit which might introduce the Mediterranean fruit fly into this State, announces Director G. H. Hecke of the State Department of Agriculture. The service, which was first initiated on an experimental basis, has been expanded to include the Sunset, Ogden and northern routes of the Southern Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Western Pacific and the Santa Fe. Twelve men are now engaged in the work. The inspectors board the trains in adjoining States and courteously explain to passengers the purpose of the quarantines, examine parcels and hand baggage to identify contraband fruits and inspect dining car stores and porters' lockers to prevent introduction of any Florida fruits. The cooperation of passengers and trainmen is reported as very satisfactory.

How to Fight Gophers

A new circular entitled "Pocket Gophers and Moles in California," recently published by the agricultural extension service, is known as Circular No. 29. It is the work of Joseph Dixon of the College of Agriculture. Los Angeles county people interested in this bulletin may obtain a copy by writing the Farm Adviser, 230 Court street, Los Angeles. Residents of other counties should address the farm adviser at their own county seat, or send the request to the college of agriculture at Berkeley.

flood of cheap stuff from Europe. Every one of these manufacturers is getting plenty enough for his product, we are convinced, and should be consistent enough to admit that if the finished product of the factory needs protection, that of the farm likewise should have it.

A Meteoric Career

As with the delphinium, it is crossing the cultivated flower with the wild that has produced the most striking results—and the wild gladiolus is a fascinating flower. Our present cultivated gladiolus is derived from crosses with but a few species and there are, according to Dr. Forman McLean of the New York Botanical Garden, some "forty species and between 200 and 250 varieties." The wild gladiolus is found in Europe and Asia Minor and in widely separated regions of Africa. It is the African sorts which seem peculiarly adapted to life in California.

A notable parent of interesting forms of the cultivated gladiolus is the South African Gladiolus Racemosus, which is a beautifully marked flower. E. O. Orpit of Santa Barbara is experimenting with the African Gladiolus Tristis, which has fragrance and which, in his opinion, has a fine future ahead of it because of its early blossoming. Richard Diener of Oxnard is also using Gladiolus Tristis in the attempt to develop a "glad" with fragrance. A. R. Sprague of Rancho Santa Fe is interested in developing gladioli of odd forms—among his, the beautiful Orchid is really orchid-like in form. He has a charming miniature, Petite. Carl Salbach of Berkeley has developed a laciniated sort, which is very charming. Mrs. Elizabeth Briggs's Winged Victory has delicately pointed petals.

There are often snags ahead even in flower-hybridizing and although Gladiolus Tristis itself is very prolific, its hybrids are often sterile, according to C. E. Houdyshel and —"there's the rub." The most important of the gladiolus species are G. blandus, G. alatus, G. gracilis, G. cuspidathus, G. callistus and G. tristis. But the possibilitis of the flower are almost infinite.

So extensive is the culture of the "glad" in California and so tremendous its popularity, that it is always found in the big flower markets and shipments come in regularly from far up the coast and from as far south as Encinitas and Carlsbad. Some growers have a regular chain of florists' shops which they visit and supply every morning with the regularity of the milkman.

A comparatively new phase of commercial gladiolus growing which is destined to have an ultimate effect on the price is the practice of "contract growing." The garment manufacturer in New York, having more demand for his product than he himself can supply, "farms out" some of his business, providing material and patterns and desiring only the finished product which he takes in entirety at a stated price. So one finds in many places small acreages, owned by the grower, who may be a city worker and willing to work time at gladiolus growing, or a man newly come from Missouri or where not, a man wanting to engage in something, willing to take small recompense for the chance of "getting in" and the certainty of some return. Mr. Capital, as one might call his principal, provides the bulbs, instructs in the proper treatment, sends his truck for the flowers as they come into bloom, and gives the "laborer in the vineyard" a prearranged price, and probably some bulbs or bulblets for himself. Only a few varieties are grown and these sure sellers. Some growers try their hand at roadside selling for the surplus.

One thing which has made for the diffusion of the gladiolus has been its inherent wanderlust. It doesn't agree with the bulb to stay long in one place. Disease may result, as well as other troubles, and the gladiolus grower seems addicted to picking up his bulbs and apparently moving his growing fields every year to another place. For this reason Mrs. Briggs of Encinitas grows her "glads" entirely on rented land; she spots an acreage where the present crop promises well for gladiolus soil, and engages it for the future. Sometimes growers go far afield for gladiolus land. Germain of Los Angeles has fields at Camarillo, newly acquired, Aggeler & Musser have been growing "glads" for some time at Camarillo and have also fields at Muscoy near San Bernardino.

The gladiolus is the joy of the amateur gardener. No flower is so safe or so certain and it is by the route of gladiolus culture, more than by means of any other flower, that the amateur turns into professional in that neat and simple manner which has come to seem characteristic of California horticulture.

As with the dahlia, the lure and the snare of the professional is the fascinating seedling. All his seedlings seem so wonderful it is hard to select; he would like to push them all and in pushing too many lies danger.

The great opportunity for the amateur gardener is to develop new and interesting uses of the gladiolus. As yet the garden use of this flower is still in its infancy. For the most part we plant it like onions, and yet it has great possibilities. With proper backgrounds, combined with just the right plants, it could be wonderfully effective. So far it is the prince of cut flowers, but with skillful treatment it might also be ruling sovereign in the garden. The flower has a great future and none realize this better than do California gardeners, who have done so much to bring it to its present position of high importance.

Farm and Orchard Magazine
Devoted to the [illegible] agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Orchard Magazine is the only farm journal in the West printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

That Tariff Fight

IT IS with more sorrow than anger that Farm and Orchard points out one of the sources of opposition to proposed new tariffs protecting American horticultural products. We refer to the antagonism coming from manufacturers using, as a component of their products, fruits and nuts now being considered for protection.

It seems particularly graceless for a manufacturer to oppose protective tariffs for the American farmer, the consumer of his wares. For the fig grower does buy fig bars, and the almond grower eats chocolate bars. Manufacturers have, for, lo, these many, many years been protected from cheap foreign competition in the markets of their own country. Finished articles have paid large amounts for the privilege of entering this country. The local manufacturers have benefited in direct proportion to the size of the tariff wall with which their industry has been surrounded.

No manufacturer will be heard to come into the halls of Congress and argue for free trade. He would be laughed out the door and clear down Pennsylvania avenue if he tried it. For he has built too good a case, through the years, for "American prices for the products of American labor."

But evidently there are manufacturers who would like "free trade" as applied to certain products of the soil like figs and almonds. They don't come out boldly and say so, of course, for that wouldn't look right. They offer what they call a "reason" why horticultural products of kinds they need in their business should be permitted to come in from other countries on easy terms. They blandly tell Congress that the domestic article isn't as good as what they import.

That's rich! California figs inferior to the stuff from the Levant! California almonds less desirable than Europe's!

If California figs and almonds and other products are inferior to those from the old country, then we had better chuck all our modern tilling machinery, our elaborate irrigation systems, our clean, shiningly clean handling and packing plants, our sanitary packages, all the university agricultural work, all the inspection and reinspection and quarantine, all of it, into the discard. We know that our figs and almonds are produced scientifically and handled cleanly and that no such trouble is taken with them in the old world.

There is one satisfaction in connection with the Congressional tariff hearings—the American producers were forewarned of the tack the objectors would take, and went armed with exhibits of their wares, and the statement: "Here's our product. We are not ashamed if it. If your cheap imported stuff is as good, or nearly as good, as this, let's see it, and let's give the tariff makers a chance to compare the two."

So far the challenge has not been taken up, despite a deal of talk. And it won't be.

Farm and Orchard believes that manufacturers, as a general thing, are friendly toward the American farmer and disposed to back his request that the tariff umbrella be spread wide enough for him to get under, too. He has the same good arguments in his favor that the manufacturers have alwgys had in theirs, that American standards and American wages and American conditions call for a higher selling price of the finished product, and that these American standards and wages and conditions ought to be upheld in so far as it is possible to uphold them by setting up partial barriers against the

Farm News of the Great Southwest

POMONA.—The two fruit and vegetable canneries operated by the Cutler-Lobingier Company and the Pasadena-Sunset Company at Pomona have finished overhauling and renovating their plants, and have started what the cannery men say will be the busiest season in their history. Prospects never looked better for both growers and packers in Pomona Valley than at present, they declare, there being large crops and good prices, and a fine demand for canned fruits. Disastrous late season frosts in the northern and central parts of the State played havic with the peach crop there, thus bettering price conditions here. The Pasadena-Sunset Company, which has already started work on the apricot run, employing about 250 workers, has purchased the Fernando Canning Company in the San Fernando Valley, which will be used for canning apricots, peaches, spinach, and tomatoes, and the weekly pay roll for the two plants will run from $8000 to $10,000 during the season, according to Ralph Paige, manager. Cutler-Lobingier is at work on apricots here. Cherries are now being canned at this company's plant at Ontario, and string beans at its cannery in Fullerton. The Pomona plant furnishes employment to 350 workers.

Cannery Overhauled

San Fernando.—The Fernando Cannery has been overhauled in preparation for the largest run in the history of the plant, and is prepared to handle about 75,000 cases of apricots, work on which is now starting. As soon as the apricots are out of the way, the peach season will start. Officials at the cannery say that approximately 300 persons are to be employed, and that the average weekly pay roll will amount to $13,000. Electric scales have been installed and loads weighing 79,000 pounds can be weighed. The cannery may be operated continuously from July to February, its officials say.

Growers Are Busy

Redlands.—This is the busy season for fruit men in the Redlands district. The apricot growers have been harvesting for several weeks, early peaches have been going to market, cherries are out of the way, plums and grapes will be coming on and berries have been taking much attention. The apricot and peach crop in Redlands is fairly good despite the fact that in most districts over the State cold weather nipped the fruit.

Alkali Meeting Called

Downey.—The reclamation of black alkali land will be discussed and demonstration plots examined at the Los Angeles County Farm near Downey on Thursday, July 11, at 2 p.m. These tests have been carried on for two years by William R. Harriman, superintendent of the farm, in co-operation with Assistant Farm Adviser F. H. Ernst of Los Angeles. The treatments undertaken at the farm follow methods recently developed by the California Experiment Station. The results show that black alkali can be reclaimed along practical lines, but that the work must be done intelligently. The plots at the County Farm are very successful. Two cuttings of alfalfa have been cut from reclaimed land seeded last December. The soil has been improved so that many other crops can now be grown, wheras prior to the treatments nothing would grow. The meeting which is being held by the Farm Adviser's Office is open to all interested in soil and alkali problems. Farmers who have hard tough soils as well as alkali soils are especially invited.

Apricots Canned

Hemet.—Opening runs of the apricot canning season were made June 28, at the plants of the Hemet Packing Company and the California Co-Operative Canneries here, with the season getting in full swing a few days later. Average price for canning 'cots being paid growers here this season is $50 a ton for No. 1 fruit and $25 a ton for No. 2 apricots. Some sales of orchard run fruit have been made at a figure between these two prices, but most of the contracts call for separation into No. 1 and No. 2 grades. In past years a majority of the apricots produced here have been dried, but this season with better prices being offered for canning fruit, most of the crop will be canned. As the crop is only about 60 per cent of normal, there are fewer drying yards operating than in previous years, but both canneries will run full blast through the season, which will be closely followed by the peach season. Between 2000 and 3000 transient fruit workers, a large proportion of whom are Mexicans, are in this district to aid in the work of picking and handling the fruit in the dry yards.

Studies Alfalfa Yield

Harper Lake.—W. A. Davis of this district has a plot of four acres of alfalfa which he has been cutting regularly six times a year. Last year, however, he allowed two acres to mature for seed after it had been cut three times, and on the basis of the showing made on these two acres, Mr. Davis believes the yields of alfalfa seed would be much greater if the second or third cutting were allowed to go to seed. What seed was produced was of excellent quality, he said. Mr. Davis is keeping a record of yields on each plot this season, in the hope of getting further valuable data.

Regional Meeting Held

Riverside.—A meeting of Region No. 1, farm bureaus of Riverside, San Bernardino, Orange, Imperial and San Diego counties, was held here recently in Fairmount Park. Representatives from the five counties gathered for a picnic lunch at noon, followed by a program in which West Riverside 4-H Club and the Riverside County Home Department took part. J. J. Deuel, head of the law and utilities committee of the California Farm Bureau Federation, was a speaker. The meeting was in charge of J. A. Smiley, chairman of the regional organization, a resident of Orange county.

Shipping Totals Given

Brawley.—Brawley shipping figures for the year ending June 12 were recently released by railroad authorities. During that time, 1255 cars of live stock left the city, 932 cars of hay and grain, 4969 cars of lettuce, 9780 cars of melons, and 785 cars of other vegetables. Brawley's shipping volume is the heaviest in Imperial Valley.

Medium Crop Forseen

Lindsay.—The navel orange bloom in local groves, besides being late this season, was rather spotted, according to citrus growers, and present prospects are for a medium-sized crop of oranges in the fall. A marked development is seen this season in curly leaf, and J. C. Johnson, county citrus expert, is giving special attention to groves thus affected. In most instances, after curling, the leaves drop off. It is too early yet to ascertain whether the effect will be serious, Mrs. Johnson says.

Many Crops on Acre

McFarland.—Mr. and Mrs. Tom Lee and their sons have a very "intensive" acre near here, every part of it being cultivated, with plenty of flowers for adornment. There are fruit trees in great variety, rabbits, chickens, berries of all kinds, and vegetables in abundance. Mr. Lee has been selling strawberries since early spring, and, while waiting for the second crop, disposed of his Cory Thornless blackberries. They have large pine green peppers for sale now; string beans, green limas, carrots, and many other things. Sweet corn was ready by July 1, and soon there will be plenty of fruit. Part of the time Mr. Lee takes his berries and vegetables to his regular customers in town, and, when he is busy otherwise, the customers go to the Lee home.

Milk Men Frolic

Flintridge.—The third annual outing of the Southern California Milk Dealers' Association, held here at the Flintridge Country Club, June 25, was a well-attended event. Luncheon, a golf tournament, freak races and sporting events, and a "speechless banquet" were features. Charles L. Damron was chairman of the event.

Plums Roll East

Cutler.—The first car of plums to leave the San Joaquin Valley this season, according to report, was one sent out by Wileman Brothers and the Elliott Packing Company of Cutler on June 1. The fruit, which went to eastern markets, was grown on the ranches of F. J. Elliott and G. H. Pettingill in East Orosi. The Ivanhoe Fruit Association near Lemon Cove sent out a car on the 6th. Exeter district started harvesting of plums on June 3, while regular shipments are now being made throughout Tulare county. The plum harvest is about ten days later than last year as result of the cool weather. Prices in the east are said to be very good.

Children Close Camp

Riverside.—Closing their annual encampment, boys and girls of the 4-H clubs of Riverside and San Bernardino counties returned June 19 from Seely in the San Bernardino mountains, after a three-day stay. Ninety-eight were enrolled from Riverside county and eighty-two from San Bernardino county. The camp was headed by A. L. Campbell, assistant farm advisor of San Bernardino county, with N. L. McFarlane, who holds a similar position in Riverside county, in charge of the program. Miss Mary Richardson and Miss Cornelia Walker, home demonstration agents, and several of the club leaders and parents of the young campers, aided in the carrying out of the successful event. Alvord 4-H Agricultural Club, for the second year, took the boys' trophy cup in the camp contest.

Tulare Cannery Opens

Tulare.—Tulare Packing Company's cannery opened for the season's run the last week of June. Peaches and apricots will be canned principally, the season to last fourteen or fifteen weeks. Work started two weeks late this year on account of the cool spring. About 80,000 cases of peaches and 20,000 cases of apricots were canned last season. A full force of 175 men and women is expected to be used this season, but no estimate of the pack has yet been made. Packing of peaches will start about July 25 at close of the cot pack.

Golf on the Desert

Calipatria.—With green fields and growing crops on every side, there was a piece of Southern Pacific Railway desert land east of Calipatria two years ago that worried a local man exceedingly. "What a fine place for a golf course," he thought, "only six miles out and going to waste!" The man, a prominent rancher, had come to realize his need of exercise other than that he had in superintending his land interests. He selected a few discarded tomato cans, and in company with his wife, son and daughter, traced out the beginning of a course. There is now a course of nine holes, with graveled greens, and natural hazards that give opportunity for a test of skill, and the creator of the links has made of it a sort of desert playground on which ranchers of the district may enjoy a game when duties permit.

Farm Women Picnic

Exeter.—Tulare county farm home department women and their children gathered at Mooney Grove, June 12, for their annual picnic and fashion revue. Each center assembled at its own table for the basket picnic. Attractive prizes were awarded for clothing and hats exhibited, as well as for "stunts" in the afternoon. Invited guests included representatives from the home departments of Fresno, Kern and Kings counties, directors of the Tulare County Farm Bureau and Miss Mae Secrest, assistant State home demonstration leader from Berkeley.

Big Orange Export

Pomona.—The San Antonio Fruit Exchange of this city recently shipped five carloads of Valencia oranges for export, one of the largest shipments of the kind ever made by the local exchange, according to officials of the organization. The oranges go to Liverpool and London, distributing points for the British Isles, and to Hamburg, Germany, where representatives serve

Poultry Field Notes

By C. B. Castle

THE fourth annual Southern California Poultry Institute to be held July 12 at Ganesha Park, Pomona, promises to be a very worthwhile event. From 9:20 to 9:50 a.m. the institute will hold an inspection of the plant of the Southern California Farm Bureau Egg-laying Contest, two blocks north of Holt avenue, on Lewis street, Pomona. At 10 a.m. the institute proper in the east grounds of Ganesha Park will open, with R. P. Stephen, chairman of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau's poultry department, in the chair. The morning hours will be devoted to the following talks: "Necessity of Close Grading," by John Lawler, general manager of the Poultry Producers of Central California; address by B. H. Critchfield, Federal-State market director; "Experimental Work at the Pomona Egg Contest," by M. A. Schofield. For luncheon at noon, bring your own except the coffee, which, with sugar and cream, will be furnished by the Pomona Chamber of Commerce. Bring table service, plates, cups, silverware. Afternoon program: "Poultry Cost and Efficiency Studies," by P. R. Wilcox, farm management expert of the California agricultural extension service; report of the Southern California Pathological Laboratory, with special reference to bacillary white diarrhea, by H. W. Graybill; "Handling Bacillary White Diarrhea in the Breeding Flock," Homer Settlemier, accredited hatchery inspector, San Bernardino-Riverside project; "Control of Bacillary White Diarrhea Infection in the Incubator," W. C. Childers. Morning and afternoon sessions will both be closed by brief periods of general discussion.

The number of hens in farm flocks all over the United States was, on June 1 of this year, about 4 per cent less than on June 1 of last year, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, but production of eggs per hen is larger than last year, due largely to greater abundance and lower price of feed.

A report from El Centro says that the poultry people of the Imperial Valley may form an all-year-'round marketing association, similar to the holiday turkey pool in its operation. Buyers heretofore have handled a large part of the eggs and poultry produced there.

From now on worm remedies will have to specify "what worm." No drug or mixture of drugs known at the present time can truthfully be offered as an expeller or vermifuge for all types of worms, and the unqualified use of the terms "worm expeller" and "vermifuge" will be considered misbranding, says the Food, Drug, and Insecticide Administration of the United States Departmen of Agriculture. Not only that, but the claims of the manufacturers concerning the expelling properties of their remedy as applied to any particular type of worm will be accorded strict attention by the government. Many drugs supposed to be vermifuges have not been found to be of any value, the Administration declares. Correct labels from now on must also specify proper dosage based on type and weight, size and age of the animal or fowl for which it is recommended. Mineral mixtures, stock powders, conditioners and tonics for live stock, are grossly misbranded if they are declared to be controllers of worm infestation, the government says, as they are considered to be ineffective when it comes to expelling any type of worm. An example of Federal action: One remedy "for either mild or severe worm infestation of poultry, including tape, round, or pin forms," was found to contain 95 per cent water, a small quantity of gum, and cod liver oil. Action was taken against the manufacturer.

Hauser's Fontana Hatchery Pen No. 4 was leading the Chaffey Trapnest Station's egg-laying contest at Ontario June 24, the close of the ninth month of the contest, with 1944 eggs. High pen for the month was that of Ethel Cisco Pierson, with 240 eggs. This pen also furnished the high hen for the month, with thirty eggs. High hen to date is an individual in the A. E. Richards pen, with 244 eggs.

Organization of a Rabbit Department of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau will be effected at the Farm Bureau offices, 230 Court street, Los Angeles, July 10, at 7:30 p.m. The department will function for rabbit raisers much as the poultry and dairy departments do for those interested in chickens and cows, and will take up projects of feeding, marketing, disease control, and other phases of the industry. C. V. Castle, assistant farm adviser, and Earl Maharg, secretary of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau, will be present. A satisfactory number of rabbit people must indicate interest, it is announced, before the department will start to function.

"Visitor" Now Farms on Southland Acre

Many people who come from other States to visit California neglect to go back. To this class belongs A. L. Smith of One Hundred and Fifth street, between Normandie and Denker avenues. Four years ago Mr. Smith came to Los Angeles on a visit. He is still "visiting," but only because he owns a place in Wyoming, so cannot consider himself a real Californian until he has disposed of his property there.

After deciding that this was a good place to live in, Mr. Smith worked for a while at his trade as cement contractor. The lure of the soil was strong in him, however, and some months ago he decided to get some ground. The acre on which he now lives has been supplied with chickens, rabbits and a garden.

Mr. Smith began his live-stock enterprise with a few chickens and four doe rabbits, selecting Chinchillas and holding to that breed. His does have produced a number of young. He finds a ready sale for fryers, he declares, and is planning to increase his number of breeding does as fast as possible.

A. L. Smith, from Powell, Wyo., finds Lo sAngeles a fine place in which to live. Here is his home and garden on 105th street, near Normandie. Above, some of his baby rabbits.

The chicken enterprise on the Smith place is still in its infancy, but with an abundance of green feed, the flock lays well, and it, too, is being rapidly increased in size.

Mr. Smith's great pride, however, is his garden. The half-acre garden is providing the family with vegetables, and a little later, when the corn and tomatoes are ready, should add something to the family exchequer.

Kern Boys Camp Out

Bakersfield.—Sixty-five high school agricultural club members, known as 4-H boys by the extension service, spent June 10 to 15 at the Whitaker Forest summer camp maintained by the Farm Bureaus of Kern, Tulare, Kings, Fresno, and Madera counties. The University of California furnishes the grounds for the encampments, which follow each other during a large part of the summer, giving a week's outing to boys and girls and older members of the farm bureaus. Many stunts, hikes and other recreational events were enjoyed by the Kern boys.

Fred Groebbels hasn't destroyed the old-time charm of his home at Chatsworth in changing it into an inn. The lower picture shows his poultry plant which provides the table of his place with fresh eggs and fried chicken.

Runs Chicken Farm and "Old-Time" Inn

"I've got about 1000 White Leghorns now and I expect to have a bigger flock in another year," said Fred Groebbels of Chatsworth. "Last year I was in Europe on a visit and so I had to start all over again and build up my flock when I got back."

Mr. Groebbels has four 500-hen units on his place, but one is being utilized as a brooder house and the other has the half-grown babies in it. His houses are square and made of lath with runs between to separate them. He is quite certain that one of the chief troubles of the poultry raiser comes from crowding the chicks. In his brooder house there is plenty of room. The brooder itself is at the end of the roosts and the little fellows can warm their feet by the stove and then run out and play all they want to. On warm days they have the run big enough for 500 grown-ups of the chicken community—and the rest of the time they can "keep house" in a place big enough to take care of a full unit of layers.

Perhaps the sight of those nests and roosts may waken in their chickish minds the instincts which every proper White Leghorn should have—eggs, eggs, more eggs! At all events, Mr. Groebbels says he doesn't have any trouble with chick disease and he credits it to plenty of room and ventilation in the brooder house.

A part of his market he provides for himself, for he conducts the Chatsworth Inn, a quaint old house framed in trees with an old-time look about it that no amount of art and skill can imitate very successfully. His guests get fresh eggs and fried young cockerel frequently and seem to like them right out of the yards.

Mr. Groebbels hasn't a large place—just about three acres, but with characteristic Teutonic thoroughness, he has his land at work. A family orchard is producing fruit for him—figs, apricots, peaches and plums, while over the arbor by the side of the house clambers a big Malaga grapevine. He says it doesn't bear as well as it should because it is too shaded.

A few turkey hens watch their broods of poults scuttling through the alfalfa green feed patch in front of the poultry houses, and in the brooder house five or six poult orphans "flock by themselves." They don't seem to mix with the other babies.

Formerly Mr. Groebbels kept a few peacocks largely for the sake of "scenery." A few years ago a visitor was stooping over to get a good photograph of one of the strutting peacocks when an old gander which had been a pensioner on the place for years, slipped up behind the photographer and nipped him. The guest yelled and dropped his camera. The gander, self-appointed policeman of the establishment, waddled off, satisfied that he had put one photographer in his place. In spite of his pugnacity, somebody stole the gander.

Mr. Groebbels has been on his present place for ten years, not counting last season when he was taking a vacation. It's a little uncertain which is his vocation and which his side line—poultry or running a countryside hotel. No matter about that, they work together nicely.

Rabbit Association Has Annual Dinner

FONTANA.—Celebrating the first anniversary of the opening of the United States Rabbit Experiment Station at Fontana, the California Rabbit Breeders' Association held a banquet here Saturday, June 29. At the dedication of the Federal station in March, 1928, it was voted by the rabbit breeders that such a function as this should be an annual affair. The later date was chosen this year because of the coming of Frank G. Ashbrook, assistant chief of the biological survey in the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington, who was in Fontana for a short stay, and who returned to the capital immediately after the banquet.

As soon as A. M. Davidson, president of the California Rabbit Breeders' Association, obtained Mr. Ashbrook's approval of the date, he sent out invitations to the different rabbit breeders' associations throughout the State, to some outside of the State, and to prominent men who are actively interested in the rabbit industry for meat and fur. The banquet was held in the Fontana Women's clubhouse.

Lay of Average Hen Computed in Tulare

TULARE.—"Mrs. Average Hen" in Tulare county in 1928 laid 147 eggs, according to cost records just completed in nineteen flocks with 16,000 hens. Tulare, by this showing, is among the highest counties in the State in egg production, according to M. A. Lindsay, assistant farm adviser of the county.

Eggs per hen production in the high flock was 162 eggs, while in the low flock it was only 133, or a difference of twenty-nine eggs per hen. "What does twenty-nine eggs per hen mean to the poultryman in dollars and cents?" asks Mr. Lindsay. "Just this: Sixty-six cents greater income per hen. Applying this difference upon a flock of 1000 hens and we have $660 greater income. It may be all profit.

"The net profit per hen was 88 cents as against 37 cents per hen in the low flock or a difference of 51 cents per hen in favor of the high producing group. More eggs mean more profit."

Trees Are Planted

More than 6000 young trees have been set out on the new campus of the University of California at Los Angeles. A considerable proportion of the number are of six varieties of eucalypti, while cypresses and acacias are well represented.

The Southland Garden

and Small Farm Home

By Ross H. Gast

MRS. Smith is making an afternoon call on Mrs. Jones. Glancing through the window, she compliments the hostess on her wonderful garden. Praise and true gardeners' generosity brings forth an offer from Mrs. Jones to share her garden treasures.

"You must take some of my Shasta daisy roots," she says, "they're the most beautiful ever and so easy to grow! You'll love them! Then I have some wonderful columbine and delphinium plants that I grew all by myself—I want you to take a few. They don't seem to do so well in my garden, but maybe they'll be better over where you live."

Mrs. Smith, catching the enthusiasm of her gardener-hostess, accepts a generous contribution of plants, and the next day spends several hours preparing the soil and planting her friend's "treasures"—and incidentally, a number of serious soil infections, not to mention nematode, that microscopic scourge of the garden.

All of this is by the way of advising gardeners that one of the most common means of spreading soil diseases is through "gifts" of plant materials from friends whose garden soils have been infected. There are quite a number of diseases and plant pests easily carried on the roots of plants in this fashion. It is difficult to refuse such materials, but a little discreet questioning may develop information that will lead to suspicion. One of the best rules to follow is to carefully place plants of unknown health in the family incinerator.

Materials secured from commercial plantsmen have undergone the rigid nursery inspection by the county horticultural commissioner's office which at least minimizes the chance of fouling gardens from such sources. To be absolutely sure, one should produce his own plants, disinfecting the soil in the seed flats.

FOR WINTER ARTICHOKES

A notorious case of flimflamming old Mother Nature made possible the commercial development of the artichoke in California. For many years this interesting and valuable vegetable was produced as a summer and early fall crop, coming in competition with many other more popular specialities. Several years ago growers hit upon a scheme to throw the plants into late fall and winter production—they cut back the plant to the ground in midsummer, fertilized the roots heavily, and as a result buds were secured during the winter months when vegetables of all kinds are in smaller supply.

The home gardener can practice this deception, and under careful handling, have buds for the Christmas table. Cut the stalks well back to the surface of the soil, work in some manure, then irrigate regularly through the next few months.

The Globe artichoke, an important vegetable in California. For buds during the late fall and winter months, cut back plants now.

A BROCCOLI SUPPLY

For many years broccoli has been a sort of poor relation to cauliflower in America and in many cases has been sold to the public under the name of cauliflower. There is really little difference, except in the character of the leaves and the size of the curd. It requires a bit longer to mature than most varieties of cauliflower. Broccoli is quite extensively planted in California for shipment early in the spring after the early and middle season cauliflower is off.

One can have a "lot of broccoli" in the home garden by sowing the seed in an open bed about August 15 and after the plants are about six weeks old, transplanting them in rows three feet across, spacing the plants about two feet apart. Care is essentially the same as for cauliflower, described some time ago in these columns.

DON'T BE ASHAMED OF 'EM

A few weeks ago, I visited a Southland small farm home, and after being shown an excellent family poultry unit, a fine little home orchard, some healthy berry plants and an enviable flower garden, I was conducted out behind the poultry pens to the vegetable garden.

The gardener explained that he did not have much time for vegetable growing. No explanation was necessary—the vegetable garden, and I say garden advisedly, told the story. It was an excellent example of what weeds will do on a piece of soil that has been fairly well prepared for vegetables.

When I mentioned that the vegetables had been crowded out of the garden the gardener disappeared for a moment beneath a large weed, and then came forth with a sorry specimen of a carrot. He evidently works on the theory that it is best to hide his vegetables away.

It is a shame to take time and effort to prepare a plot for vegetables, and the expense of seed and water, then let the weeds take the planting. Vegetatae varieties now commonly grown are the result of years of breeding and they will not compete, even in a measure, with the wild growths in the garden.

LOOK TO THE FUTURE

The wise gardener, who is ever striving to maintain the fertility of his soil, will clear off early plantings as they mature, and such plots as have shown low fertility will be left for a planting of cover crop or green manure later on in the fall. Plant foods incorporated in this way are the cheapest available and especially valuable in Southwest soils.

Melilotus indica and sweet clover are used most for this purpose. They are generally planted in October after the first rain and turned under as soon as the plants are two feet high.

A Meteoric Career

bulb or its culture that when her stock was destroyed by wireworms, she didn't know what ailed them.

Many growers have come from the teaching profession—B. F. Tracey who lives in Claremont, still teaches in Fullerton High School, although his gladiolus fields are near Glendora (formerly they were at Encinitas;) Thomas McLoughlin is an ex-teacher, Mr. Houdyshel taught in a high school until he found his interest in shooting plants greater than that in "teaching the young idea to shoot." Many expert hybridists have worked with the "glads" as well as with other bulbs, and some of these have become large growers and interested in the commercial side of gladiolus culture.

But skill in creating new types of flowers is a different ability from cleverness in marketing, so that it frequently happens that the big commercial successes have been made with gladioli by other than the originators of the varieties. But the originator has the most fun. And the Californian originations make a goodly and impressive list. Many a "best seller" in the gladiolus world is among them.

A PLEASING PRACTICE

Gladiolus growers, in their lists of bulbs, have a pleasing habit of giving the originator credit by an initial in parenthesis. Thus "K" after the name of a variety, means that particular "glad" was originated by Kunderd of Goshen, Ind.; "S" means an origination of Carl Salbach of Berkeley."D" means that the "glad" so designated is the result of the skill of Richard Diener of Oxnard. Among the best known Diener originations are Anna Eberius, American Beauty, Geraldine Farrar, Henry Ford, J. A. Carbone, Jack London and the splendid Mrs. Leon Douglas. Then there are W. H. Phipps, Rose Ash—not a new gladiolus, but one of the loveliest—and his newer variety, David Starr Jordan, an immense flame-colored flower tinged with scarlet, very beautiful.

Best known among Mr. Salbach's are Primrose Princess, a clear daffodil yellow, and Nancy Hanks, a rich apricot in tone. To F. E. Williams is credited the lovely Fay Lamphier, coral-red and very graceful in form. To Mrs. Briggs belong Catalina," which often takes a prize as the "best flower in the show," Winged Victory, Coronado, Santa Maria and many others. The well-known gladiolus Virginia, which, by the way, is really Old Virginia, and was named for the State, not for a woman, was introduced by A. W. Pooley of Pomona. It came to him as an unnamed seedling from Kunderd and he noticed its peculiar vigor and brilliance of color, developed and propagated it and sent it out, named by Mrs. Pooley, herself a Virginian. This gladiolus is also known as Scarlet Princeps, and though not a new sort, keeps among the best sellers.

Dr. A. R. Sprague of Rancho Santa Fe originated the very lovely Orchid and several other gladioli which are peculiarly distinctive in form. To Mr. Houdyshel of La Verne is due the very prolific Los Angeles, known as the cut-and-come-again gladiolus because of its extraordinarily long flowering period. A field of this gladiolus has been known to make a continuous display for nearly three months, which makes it the joy of the amateur home gardener as well as a gladiolus of profit to the commercial florist.

"KNOCKING 'EM COLD!"

The commercial grower picks three or four varieties, sometimes only three, of the "sure-to-go" sort, much as the Literary Guild picks a book, and concentrates on these. One Carlsbad grower was growing but three, Prince of Wales (originated by Van Zanten of Holland.) Los Angeles and the pink primulinus Maiden's Blush, originated by Gruel. The grower of few sorts usually has one scarlet one in his repertoire, for the reason that when men buy cut flowers they are likely to want something red. One small girl voiced her requirements when purchasing a bouquet for her mother: "I want something that will hit her between the eyes. I want something that will knock her cold."

The grower of few sorts risks, of course, the chance of being on the wrong side of popular demand, which is fickle. Quite frequently the willingness to pay a high price for a flower is due to the desire to have something which no one else has, rather than admiration for the flower's evident beauty. Hence when everyone can buy the flower—Presto—change! We must have another! It is this fickleness of the public's fancy which gives the expert grower his innings, for it is the skillful hybridist who produces the new form. For a short time the price may hold high, until a goodly stock of the bulb is grown, but when the one-time new beauty becomes a standard variety, its originator's profits on it may be over—and he is busy developing another.

The commercial growers may reap the shekels, but it is the creative horticulturists, the men who develop new sorts and types, who, in the slang phrase, get a real "kick" out of growing the "glad."

Seed Man Practices "What He Preaches"

VAN NUYS.—After five years in California, three of which have been spent in beautifying and improving a two-acre place at 5926 Fulton street in this community, Mr. and Mrs. Denver Hysell have not only a lovely home, an abundance of fruit and flowers for themselves, but a surplus to sell. The place is largely managed by Mrs. Hysell, her husband having a position with a Los Angeles seed company, which puts him in the class of those who "practise what they preach." At present, with apricots already ripe, with a fine bed of rhubarb, another of strawberries, and with plumbs, peaches, figs, and even a few apple trees in good bearing, the place is at the pink of perfection.

Gladiolus blooms and bulbs help to swell the income from the Denver Hysell place at Van Nuys. Fruit trees in full bearing help too.

The fruit on the Hysell place is sold on the trees, excepting such as is reserved for family use, so that there is no bother of picking or marketing. The rhubarb is sold mostly right at the door. Gladioli are a feature of the decorative growth and bring in a profit as well. The pansy beds on the place are most beautiful, the blooms being of exquisite color and great size.

A garden which has a fine growth of beans, tomatoes, carrots and cabbage provides plenty of table variety, and the Hysells grow their own potatoes, having dug the first of the new ones this year on May 25. A family flock of chickens provides eggs and some meat.

The Hysells came to California from Indianapolis. They bought the two acres with the fruit trees already planted, but built their own house.

Hundreds of Trees Keep One Real Busy

By Marshall Breeden

There are exactly 301 trees on our lot. Mummie-Daisy selected them, I planted them and I water them. I have twice painted each of those 301 trunks with whitewash of lime. I have pruned some of them once, others twice, and still others many times. Our trees are of various species, but a flourishing evergreen predominates. It likewise serves a very definite purpose.

Three years ago, when we built on our steep lot it was altogether naked. Not a brush, not a tree, not a sprig grew upon it. The lot shoots from street level sheer to the horizon 186 feet away. It lent itself gloriously to trees and vines and flowers. Perhaps you would like to know the sort of trees Mummie-Daisy selected and I planted?

Since it is a sloping lot, the front of the house stands rather high above the sidewalk and lawn. To ornament the bare wall underneath the first story we planted Monterey Cypress. This is a splendid tree, of very rapid growth, reaching, if allowed its full growth, a height of about seventy feet. I have trimmed these many times. With each trimming the trees seem to grow more bushy, a very desirable attribute.

The seven Montereys growing against the house are allowed to reach to the eves, about eighteen feet. But the 250 Montereys that go to make the hedge along the front and up both sides of the steep lot, are kept trimmed to an average of about eight feet. This makes a good screen and is very ornamental. All of these trees came to us in "flats" and were when planted less than two feet tall.

After this planting had been completed we put in two Italian Cypresses, one on either side of the front stairs. These Italians have reached a height of about 25 feet, at which point I try to keep them trimmed.

For the distant and elevated corners of the upper lot we spaced in big cone pines, eleven of them. This is a beautiful tree of perfect proportions, being full and compact in growth, with a roundish head. It is luxuriant in foliage of a deep shade of green producing a bright and cheerful appearance the year 'round. These trees have have never been trimmed, but because of the prevaling winds they have been staked in rather an unsuccessful effort to keep them growing straight.

As we continued the tree decoration of our lot we added six Torrey pines. These trees are famous for the legends woven around them in the early hisory of California. The tree is rather small and of a spreading habit, having long silvery needles. However, this has not been a good selection, for the Torrey Pine does not seem to thrive with much vigor and gusto. I am contemplating changing them for more pine trees of a somewhat sturdier nature.

Trees are the making of a hillside lot, but it's work caring for them, as Marshall Breeden, pictured above, resting between jobs, can testify. His Monterey cypress border (center photo) must be topped regularly; the little forest of Conifers (lower photo) must be looked after.

We put in nine sugar gum eucalyptii. This is one of the most ornamental of all eucalpyts, being easily identified by the many pastel pictures you see in the art stores.

When all of these were set and apparently growing, I sailed into the fruit trees. The upper back yard offered space for eighteen fruit trees. I put in eighteen varieties of fruits, including avocado, fig, citrus and persimmons, as well as the more casual fruits. The citrus, however, have not flourished although they have not died.

County Farm Cow Is a Maker of Profits

DOWNEY.—What profit pure-bred stock? The question is brought up by the report of the Los Angeles County Farm on a Holstein cow with the awe-inspiring name of Johanna Ormsby Pietertje Mercedes. This cow, a very handsome individual, was purchased on December 11, 1925— three and one-half years ago, and is now nine years old. Her original cost to the county was $330.

During the three and one-half years she has freshened four times. On two of these occasions she had twins, two very promising heifers being born March 19, 1929, sired by King Pietertje Ormsby Piebe 39th, the County Farm's famous type and production herd sire. The other four calves were bulls, the twins being sold to San Diego County's Edgemoor Farm at Santee and to the Millbrae Dairy near San Francisco. They were sons of Pabst Korndyke Star, and brothers of the show-winning bull sold for $15,000 a couple of years ago, and to a group of seven 2-year-old cows that averaged 928 pounds of butter in yearly test, the least productive one of the lot making 802 pounds of butter. The other two bulls are owned by McMurtrie Brothers of Bishop and Mrs. Annie Pratt of Bakersfield.

During the three and one-half years that Johanna has been in the County Farm herd, she has produced milk that sold at the wholesale market price for a total of $2045.-51. Her four bull calves brought a total of $875, of which $485 was net above the cost of feed and care of the calves. The value of the manure production has been calculated at $5 per year—a very conservative figure—making a total revenue of $2541.01. During this period, she consumed feed to the amount of $648. The cost of labor chargeable to her care was $168.33. Deducting the total charges of $812.55 from the revenue total above, one obtains figures which would indicate that this one animal has produced in the three and one-half years a net profit of $1735.46 or $1.36 for every day since she entered the herd, in addition to the value of her two heifer calves. She has returned during this period over five and one-quarter times her original purchase price. Johanna herself, although well along in life as cows go, is in good health and promises to continue her excellent record for years to come.

Caprifigs Picked

Exeter.—Picking of caprifigs started in Exeter district about June 21 for distribution to various sections of the San Joaquin Valley. The crop was very good, but the season late.

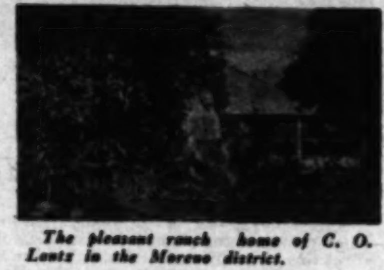
New Walnuts Tried at College Station

RIVERSIDE.—R. G. LaRue of the University of California experiment station near here has been collecting foreign walnuts for the past five years and has a rather remarkable assortment. The collection includes nuts from wild trees of the Punjab, Kashmir Valley, and Simla Hills in India. These are, for the most part, inferior in size, due no doubt to adverse growing conditions in their native land. He has collected several types of the Juglans Regia from Persia and Turkestan. These have shown a fine growth, excelling the hybrids in some cases.

A short time ago Mr. LaRue received some nuts, the Juglans Falax, from the Tschalkal Mountains, Valley of Chodscha, Russia. He has been one year in obtaining these. He also received recently some wild walnuts from Turkestan, which, though small, have a very pleasing flavor. Not long ago he obtained several lots, via England, of nuts from Russia and the Isle of Cyprus. As a whole, they compare favorably, in outside appearance, with nuts grown here; some even seem superior to our best varieties.

Other types which the station has succeeded in growing are: The Juglans Pyriformis, from central Mexico, a large black nut with a hard shell; Juglans Honorei, from Bolivia, South America; Juglans Insularis, Cuba; Juglans Domingensis, Santo Domingo. The last two are rather small, black, hard-shelled and apparently not deciduous. Two seedlings from the Juglans Intermedia, Texas, have been planted. Nuts from this variety are small, some being only one-fourth inch in diameter. They are also black.

Some Juglans Boliviensis from Bolivia, have also been planted. They are quite similar to the Juglans Honorei and are thought to be the only specimens, with the exception of one or two in Florida, in the Northern Hemisphere. Several hundred seedlings from China have also been set out. In addition to those listed above, the station has about twenty new named varieties just coming into bearing.



The pleasant ranch home of C. O. Lantz in the Moreno district.

He Doesn't Believe in the Cover Crop

RIVERSIDE.—C. O. Lantz of the Moreno district is a man who finds farming a pleasant life, even if it does entail a great deal of hard work. He came to this country from Sweden more than fifty years ago, his people having been farmers in the "old country." Rye, wheat, barley and oats were the crops he saw as a boy. Farming in Sweden isn't the machine-age occupation it has come to be in this country, he says, most of the work being done by hand, and women as well as men doing their share of labor in the fields at harvest time. He remembers seeing grain cut by hand, tied into sheaves and threshed by teams of oxen driven around and around over it. Only a few of the wealthier farmers have threshers or even mowing machines.

Mr. Lantz has lived on his Moreno ranch, which now comprises 200 acres, for thirty-eight years. He has 65 acres planted to citrus fruits, mostly Navel oranges, although he has some Valencias and grapefruit. He has twenty acres of walnuts, and five acres of raisin grapes. The rest of his land is planted to a variety of crops, such as melons, potatoes, tomatoes and grain. He says he prefers oranges to any other crop.

"Once in the bearing they pay better, taking them year in and year out, than anything else that I have ever grown," he declares. "They are a crop that 'keeps,' and are not perishable like melons and many other fruits. They can hang on the tree until the prices and conditions are right for picking. They also require much less work than many other things, and in these days of high-priced farm labor that is quite a consideration.

"If I were a young man starting out in the ranching game I should certainly plant oranges. Many of our groves near the cities and towns are being cut up for subdivision purposes, old groves are dying out. Oranges, in my opinion, will always be "good."

Mr. Lantz is not an advocate of cover crops. He even leans to the belief that they take more out of the soil than they put back in. "A grove planted to cover crops requires more water than one that has none," he says, "and as water is high, this makes the cost of the upkeep more." He is a firm believer in extensive cultivation.

The Lantzes have a most comfortable place with all of the conveniences of a city home. Chickens and turkeys are raised for their own use, and a cow is kept for the same purpose. Mr. Lantz is known as one of the most successful ranchers in Moreno Valley and has been president of the Moreno Water Company for many years.

"What I have done," he declares, "anyone can do. I came to this country a poor, ignorant boy, not knowing the language of my adopted country. Life on a farm is much better than being closed up in a city store or office. I have found both happiness and success upon my ranch."

Florida Fruits Are Seized at Stations

County horticultural inspectors, under the supervision of Harold J. Ryan, horticultural commissioner of Los Angeles county, have been making many interceptions of Florida citrus fruits brought in on passenger trains in violation of State and Federal quarantine laws.

After the discovery of the infestation of the Mediterranean fruit fly in Florida, Mr. Ryan detailed inspectors to the work of examining the commissary departments and porters' effects on all incoming out-of-State trains. For inspectors go through all trains coming into the Arcade Station and Santa Fe depot at Los Angeles, with additional inspectors being added where necessary. During the recent Shriners' Convention in Los Angeles, as many as twenty inspectors met these trains, under the direct supervision of G. R. Gorton, deputy horticultural commissioner of Los Angeles county.

Since May 15 approximately forty-five interceptions have been made, consisting of some 450 citrus fruits from Florida. Of those taken, approximately 250 were grapefruit and about 200 were oranges, with an occasional lime and lemon. All citrus fruits from Florida are potential carriers of the Mediterranean fruit fly, Melanose disease and citrus canker. The two latter are injurious diseases present in Florida, against which State quarantines have been in force by California for many years.

Co-operation by the railroads is being sought, in order that their employees may be well informed that these fruits cannot be brought into the State, and also in order that the passengers may be thoroughly circularized with pamphlets informing them of the Mediterranean fruit fly situation, with instructions to dispose of all host fruits before entering California.

Today the corn has a stalk three feet in height and bears a pretty tassel, thanks to "farmers" in a near-by drug store, who encouraged the greenery when it was first observed making growth.

City Dwellers Are Citrus Enthusiasts

By Iva McFadden

EL CENTRO.—The spring planting of citrus trees has been going on consistently in Imperial Valley and faith in their culture is not confined to the men who live on ranches and do the farming themselves. Many men with other occupations have entered into this field as a profitable and enjoyable sideline, and many more will undoubtedly follow. After all, the valley is just beginning to "grow up," and an interest in permanent improvement of land is a sign of the newer order of thigs.

One of the first men to venture into this field was Dr. W. W. Apple of El Centro. He was a pioneer practicing physician of that city and fifteen years ago set out grapefruit on land that he owned near town. "I was always something of an experimenter," he acknowledged, and it was in just this spirit that he ventured into the grapefruit business, for at that time there was nothing to point the way to success. That it proved a particularly profitable experiment everybody now knows. Dr. Apple's grove has long been a source of satisfaction to the whole community, for it proved rather conclusively what might be done with grapefruit. Indeed it has had much to do with the expansion of the desert industry, because it really pioneered a new field.

There are twenty-three acres in Dr. Apple's holdings now and this is all improved with grapefruit, grapes, and tangerines. The youngest planting of grapefruit is four years old. All this has had excellent care and even in days when fertilization was considered none too necessary Dr. Apple at least planted peas between his trees. These were used entirely as fertilizer and were never picked, though of the ordinary garden variety. His young groves still have peas every season and the older ones barnyard manure, ten tons to the acre.

Irrigations are not too frequent in the Apple grove, but they are heavy when the water is applied. The irrigation furrows are even subsoiled once a year to allow for a deep penetration of water. On the other hand, he cultivates more often than many growers are now doing, and believes that he finds this profitable.

His latest planting is to tangerines. Experiments with a few older trees led him to believe that this is another branch of citrus culture that will be found profitable and with his same inclination to experiment he has now set out the last of his vacant land to this crop. Unquestionably the tangerine does well in Imperial Valley and the market seems to be in a position to absorb a considerable quantity.

Another man who believes strongly in citrus culture is Clarence Conant of El Centro. Mr. Conant's land lies south and west of that city and was among the early claims from the desert, having located under the first water company, the old No. 1 that pioneered bringing water into the vast "waste" area.

Mr. Conant's oldest grapefruit trees are 11 years old and he says that from four acres he had, for five successive years, marketed five cars of fruit, which would seem to explode the theory that grapefruit does not produce heavily on the desert. His 7-year-old trees last year averaged seven packed boxes to the tree, and all his trees are remarkably large and flourishing.

The direct management of the place has been in the hands of L. M. Stoiber, who has brought the trees up from yearlings to their present size and bearing. He naturally takes much pride in the accomplishment. He, unlike some growers, believes in frequent irrigations in summer and floods three times a month. Plowing is done but once a year and that after the fruit has set, usually in April and May. Then the land is ploughed seven and one-half and eight inches deep. Gypsum has been used plentifully in any hard spots and trees have grown rapidly under this program.

Fertilization began before planting, for in certain parts of the grove trees were planted after 3-year-old alfalfa with several crops cut and left lying on the ground before being plowed. Barnyard manure is used in the groves in the winter and sesbania in the summer. Mr. Soiber is particularly enthusiastic over the wild hemp. He plants it the first week in June and finds that it grows practically a foot a month during the warm season until it is turned under. It interferes in no way with the general care of the orchard and when disked into the ground adds an enormous amount of green manure besides the nitrogen it carries on its roots.

Mr. Conant has experimented with many other kinds of citrus fruits, among them blood oranges and King Mandarins. He has three varieties of tangerines, the Dancy, the Algerian and the Willow Leaf Mandarin. There are Dancy trees 7 years old and some 11-year-old Algerians. The Willow Leaf has produced heavily at eight years. The newest planting, only a year old, is of the Dancy. He is enthusiastic over the tangerine outlook for the valley.

This year's plantings are ten acres of Valencia oranges. From the results he has obtained from a few old trees he believes that he can enter successfully into the Valencia field. This undoubtedly will be watched with much interest, for up to this time citrus culture in the valley has centered very largely on grapefruit.

Mr. Conant with his large holdings has his own packing plant and sells directly to a broker in San Francisco. With his variety of trees he is able to ship an interesting array of desert citrus fruits and finds a ready market for all the choice packs he has to offer.

Cabazon apricot orchards, young and old where Los Angeles and other Southern California cities get early cots.

Cabazon Sends 'Cots Fresh to City Marts

CABAZON.—Fresh apricots began going to Los Angeles markets from this section June 1 when sixteen lugs were shipped from the earliest bearing trees. There are about 200 acres planted to apricots here, all but a few acres put out two years ago being in full bearing. The orchards are composed of five and ten-acre tracts, each acre containing about seventy-five trees. A large tonnage of early fresh apricots is grown here. They ripen in the Cabazon section a few weeks earlier than at Banning, which is six miles west and several hundred feet higher. Practically all the Cabazon apricots are shipped to Los Angeles, where they are sold as fresh fruit, usually bringing a high price.

The principal variety grown here is the Royal, which is said by local growers to be the best commercial apricot. The 'cots generally in the district are large, beautiful in color, and fine of flavor this season, according to J. A Wakeland, pioneer fruit grower and superintendent of the Cabazon Water Company.

The apricot harvesting season usually begins here the latter part of May, but was delayed a few days this season on account of a late cold spring. Fifteen of the first lugs of apricots, shipped June 1, were from the Otto Meeks orchard, the other lug being from Mr. Wakeland's. The peak of the shipping season is usually reached about June 10. The season is expected to extend well into July this year.

The Cabazon Water Company supplies water to irrigate about 500 acres of lands in this section. In addition to the acreage in apricots there are about 200 acres in almonds. The rest of the land is in grapes and olives. Water is obtained from a natural stream in Mallard Canyon, which drains a large territory on the south slope of the San Gorgonio Mountains. The water firm is a mutual company composed of fruit growers and other land owners of this section. The company expects to clear off all indebtedness May 1, 1930, and will then bond itself for a sufficient amount of money to develop a much larger amount of water by drilling a few wells in the canyon, Mr. Wakeland says.

Apricot and other orchards in this section are irrigated every thirty days during the growing season. Each ten-acre tract is supplied with twenty-five inches of water for forty-eight hours. This section also produces very early almonds.

Ice Surplus Dwindles

Brawley.—With shipments of perishables running about 150 cars daily, and these cars needing seven tons of ice each, inroads are fast being made on the supply of surplus ice at the local plant. The daily capacity is 325 tons, but supplementary plants in other cities of Imperial Valley also help make up the supply.

Pioneer Says Dairy Farming "All Right"

By Belle C. Ewing

RIVERSIDE.—One of the oldest of the pioneer ranchers of this district is George W. Thomas Sr., who came to California from Omaha, Neb., in 1870, when he was but ten years of age. This was shortly after the historic silk colony had been started at Riverside by Dr. James P. Greve, E. G. Brown and Dr. K. D. Shugart. About 6000 acres had been purchased for this purpose. At that time the Legislature of the State of California looked so favorably on the culture of the silk worm and the production of silk that a premium was offered for the planting of mulberry trees. The project was a failure, as are so many plans which fail to take into account cheap foreign competition.

Mr. Thomas has many interesting tales to tell of the early days. There were only three little board shacks, built of San Bernardino pine, in Riverside at the time of his arrival. Not a tree nor a shrub was growing. Mr. Thomas's brother-in-law, A. K. Smith, built the first real house in the town. The water situation was very bad in the seventies. Mr. Thomas and his brother-in-law started the first water system in the town. They hauled the water in barrels from what was then known as the Spring Brook, and sold it at 25 cents a barrel to the consumers. Later the water for irrigation purposes was brought from the Santa Ana River.

When a boy in his teens, Mr. Thomas took up a squatter's claim on land which lay between what is now Jurupa and Arlington avenues. He kept this land until 1910, when he sold it.

"It was hard sledding in those days," Mr. Thomas said. "We were all pioneers in a pioneer country. Most of the people who settled in and about Riverside came from the East and Middle West. They were practically all successful farmers in their own communities, but here everything was different. We didn't know what to grow. Cattle raising on a large scale was becoming a thing of the past.

"We tried out nearly everything—grain, alfalfa, deciduous fruit, raisins. Peaches and apricots, dried, were sent East, but did not bring very good returns. Then citrus was tried. Seedling orange trees were all that could be obtained. These came from the San Gabriel Mission, and from Cottonwood Row, a little hamlet below Redlands, where someone had started a seedling nursery." It was in 1875 that Mrs. Tibbetts received four budded orange trees from Washington, D. C. Three of these lived, and as soon as possible, buds were obtained from them, and the orange industry made its real start. About thirty-five years ago Mr. Thomas purchased a 300-acre portion of the Rancho de la Sobrante, an old Spanish grant, where, assisted by his three sons, he began specializing in dairying. At present he has about 100 head of stock, mostly pure-bred Jerseys.

One of the first things that the visitor notices about this ranch is the cleanliness. Everything is done in a most efficient, businesslike manner. The floor of the milking barn is concrete and is flushed out after each milking. Milking machines are used altogether and are very satisfactory, Mr. Thomas says. A record of every cow is kept, and each is fed in proportion to the pounds of milk that she gives. Alfalfa hay is chopped before feeding, thus avoiding, according to Mr. Thomas, the large wastage common when loose hay is fed. Thirty acres of land was planted to Kanota oats this year and this was cut and fed green to the cows. It was a heavy stand and served for two months, cows being given all they could eat twice a day. During this time no hay was given them. Mr. Thomas says he found this feed to be a very good "conditioner."

Black-eyed beans were planted after the oats were harvested. These legumes have been grown on the Thomas ranch for the past several years, and have proven to be a paying crop. Mr. Thomas also has twelve acres in alfalfa, and an eighteen-acre walnut and persimmon orchard. Twenty acres of the rougher portion of the ranch is given over to pasturage, as all of the heifer calves are kept. Horses are used in working the land.

"After thirty-five years at dairying," Mr. Thomas said, "I can say that we have found it to be a very satisfactory occupation."

Mr. Thomas is president of the Southern California Fair Association, sponsors of the annual Riverside event and is one of the well known men of this part of the State.

He Tried to Retire, But Soil "Got" Him

VAN NUYS.—When John Miller, a Chicago business man, came to California three years ago, it was to retire from active work. But the lure of the soil got him, and after he had bought an acre of land at 13228 Burbank Boulevard, he proceeded to make it a garden spot without much thought of the profit it might bring. Later he found it making him some money.

Mr. Miller planted apricot trees on that part of his acre which was not needed for building. The trees are early bearers so that the Miller 'cots are on the market a bit ahead of the usual time. A roadside stand in charge of Marie Miller, who has come from Chicago to stay with her grandparents, disposes of a large part of the apricot crop, all the fruit being sold from the trees with no surplus for drying.

The roadside stand is one "farm relief" measure the value of which is already proven, says John Miller of Van Nuys, whose stand is here pictured.

Poultry also had its appeal for Mr. Miller. He is more interested in ducks than in chickens, though he has about 150 White Leghorns with a few Rhode Island Reds used for setting and to provide his customers with substantial fryers or roasters. The surplus eggs are sold right off the place. The ducks total 250, Muscovy and White Pekin. These are raised for food, and most of the eggs are used for hatching. Mr. Miller plans to keep on increasing his flock, as he finds a ready sale for his birds, he reports, and thinks them easier to raise and to keep than chickens.

Rabbits Eat Cotton Lunch at Midnight

McFARLAND.—Jackrabbits have taken heavy toll from many local farmers this year, and agitation for an organized campaign against them is becoming stronger. Emerson Root, a rancher living south of town, has reported that he lost eight acres of cotton in one night from jackrabbits. His ranch adjoins the vacant area of the Kern County Land Company, thousands of acres in extent, and a fine breeding place for rabbits and squirrels. Mr. Root applied to the county for aid and with its help scattered a great deal of thalium, a poison which has proven very effective. He has seen many dead rabbits since the poisoning, but still the live ones continue to eat his cotton, working at night.

Fox Breeders Form State Association

FONTANA.—Approximately twenty-five breeders of foxes, largely those in the San Bernardino mountains, at a recent meeting here organized the Fox Breeders' Association of California. The new organization will be devoted to the promotion of the interests of the fox-raising industry.

The fox men convened at the United States Rabbit Experiment Station here, arrangements having been made by Frank G. Ashbrook, in charge of the Bureau of Fur Resources of the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington, and who was in Fontana, until recently for a short stay.

Problems confronting the industry were discussed during the informal business meeting, one of the major findings proving to be the difficulty in obtaining a constant supply of meat with which to feed the valuable animals.

Southland Will Set Watch Against Fly

The Mediterranean fruit fly survey is now well under way in Southern California, and plans for the project's organization were laid at a meeting in Los Angeles of all horticultural commissioners of the southern counties. At a prior meeting in the executive offices at Sacramento of State and county officials, together with fruit growers, bankers, various business men, and railroad officials, D. B. Mackie, State Entomologist of California, was chosen to direct a Statewide search to determine if by any chance the pest has reached California. The State Department of Agriculture has determined that the State should be divided into four districts, each district to be under a separate head, and Harold J. Ryan, horticultural commissioner of Los Angeles county, will be in direct charge of all movements of the campaign in the eight southern counties of California.

Mr. Ryan declared that because of the present infestation of the fly in Florida, it is imperative that California determine definitely whether or not the pest is already present in this State, and that the survey project should be a regulatory and continuous one in the future, in order to detect an introduced infestation as quickly as possible.

Those attending the meeting decided that it was not feasible to launch a large force of men in the field in addition to the present horticultural workers of the State and counties. To make a complete inspection of short duration would require additional men in all fruit sections during the period when the host fruits are susceptible to attack by the fruit fly. The plan rather is to put into effect an organization consisting of all workers whose duties regularly bring them in contact with the orchards and markets. This would not necessitate the addition of many men to those already in the field working in various phases of horticulture, but would make a co-operative organization under one head of all State and county horticultural inspectors, augmented by such groups as farm advisers, orchard material salesmen who are continually in the field, and the subsidiary groups of packing-house organizations. These men will work under their various managers and heads of departments who, in turn, will keep in touch with and be informed of progress and new developments through a central office.

A plan of education as to the habits, characteristics and methods of inspection for the Mediterranean fruit fly is in progress, and the plan is to have an office to work in the capacity of a supply center, which will furnish all pamphlets, general literature and other supplies necessary in the educational campaign. Co-operation of all interested in agriculture, such as growers, market men, railroad officials, and "directly contacting" business men, will be solicited.

Reactors Must Bear Brand, Says Officer

Editor, Farm and Orchard:

The interpretation of the office of Attorney-General relative to the branding of cattle in California has raised the question of whether it is necessary to brand.

Los Angeles County Ordinance No. 1415 requires the branding of all cattle which react to tuberculin test, regardless of the purpose for which it was administered. This ordinance was passed prior to the State law, and remains in full force and effect at the present time.

Neighboring counties having similar ordinances are San Diego, San Bernardino, Riverside and Orange.

It is very fortunate that this area is covered by ordinances requiring branding of reactors, since this in itself has resulted in the disposal for slaughter of more tuberculous cattle than any other one feature in the work of tuberculosis control.

L. M. HURT,
County live-stock inspector, Los Angeles.

Vineyard Is Small, But Crop Is Early

NILAND.—A. Finley of this district is usually one of the first to ship grapes out of Imperial Valley, and was again this year in the forefront, although the crop was a week or ten days later than usual in ripening, unseasonably cool weather being held accountable for the backward season.

Mr. Finley grows Thompson Seedless grapes, of which he has eleven acres. They are early on the market and command a good price, he says, and since the harvesting is over with in July he may spend the hot summer months elsewhere in leisure.

The vineyard was started with rooted vines in 1921. Six acres were then planted. Two years later Mr. Finley set out five acres more, and reports he is receiving a good income from the eleven acres. There are sixteen acres in the farm, but three are leased out for vegetables and two remain in the homesite.

The grape harvest lasts about ten days, and Mr. Finley employs from ten to twelve men during the rush. He attends to the business end of marketing, which is handled through commission houses in Los Angeles.

The vineyard practically rests during the summer, with the exception of being irrigated two or three times, and that is attended to by the man left in charge. The fall plowing is done in October, and the vines are pruned in December. From then on irrigating and cultivating are in order every two weeks through the period of growth.

Mr. Finley, a native Californian, spent thirty years of his life in the State of Oregon, but when his sons entered the university in Southern California, he and his wife took up their residence in El Monte. Eight years ago they came to Imperial Valley and located on this ranch two miles south of Niland. It was then just a desert of sagebrush and weeds. But a wonderful transformation has been brought about since then with the rapid growth of trees and shrubs. Included in the improvements is a hedge of sixty-five pomegranate trees along the south side of the vineyard. There are also fifty apricot trees and eight date palms, and a eucalyptus and tamarisk border on the west and north. The house stands in the shadiest and most inviting spot of the whole acreage.

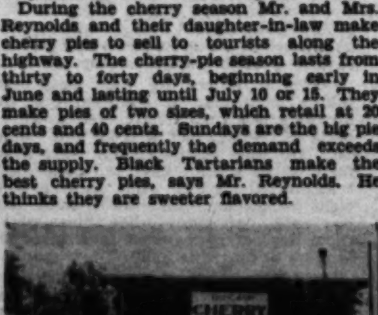
A. Finley in his Thompson seedless vineyard at Niland.

Cherries Marketed in Pie at Roadside

BEAUMONT.—As a demonstration of what can be accomplished in the horticultural line in Beaumont and vicinity, the T. B. Reynolds place on Sixth street in East Beaumont is a good example. Two years ago last February Mr. Reynolds began to improve raw land, setting out trees, shrubbery, flowers and vegetables. He was told that he could not grow vegetables, but he has had green lettuce the year 'round, he declares. Among the vegetables grown are onions, carrots, potatoes, tomatoes, beans, turnips and summer squash. There are three kinds of berries—strawberries and Mammoth and Himalaya blackberries. The fruit trees include two Bing cherries, two Kadota figs, two Satsumas, and six peaches. One peach tree of the J. H. Hale variety has grown to a height of eight feet with a spread of eight feet, and last year Mr. Reynolds picked several peaches of huge size. This year there are quite a number of peaches on the tree. For shade there are umbrella and tamarack trees.

Instead of a lawn there is a small patch of alfalfa, which Mr. Reynolds cuts and places around the roots of the trees for fertilizer. Bordering the alfalfa are flags, lilacs, dahlias, roses, and Concord, Black Prince' and Thompson Seedless grapes. Among the ornamental shrubs are two large clumps of pampas grass, bridal wreath, ferns, geraniums, honeysuckle, chrysanthemum and climbing roses.

During the cherry season Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds and their daughter-in-law make cherry pies to sell to tourists along the highway. The cherry-pie season lasts from thirty to forty days, beginning early in June and lasting until July 10 or 15. They make pies of two sizes, which retail at 20 cents and 40 cents. Sundays are the big pie days, and frequently the demand exceeds the supply. Black Tartarians make the best cherry pies, says Mr. Reynolds. He thinks they are sweeter flavored.



Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Reynolds bake and sell cherry pies during the cherry season at Beaumont, from this roadside stand.

Irrigating part of a large potato planting in the Fruitvale section of San Jacinto-Hemet Valley.

New Lease on Life

chiefly a matter of marketing, it is said, and very little new acreage is being set out to walnuts at this time.

Citrus acreage, on the other hand, is increasing. Very fine oranges and lemons have been grown in certain parts of the valley for more than a quarter of a century. There are beautiful old groves, mainly on the northeastern slopes, back of San Jacinto, in a district called Valle Vista. Oranges from the valley have been consistent winners at the National Orange Show in San Bernardino, bringing back many firsts. Other types of citrus fruits do well. There is a row of old kumquat trees on one ranch the fruit from which is contracted for each year at a fancy price. Sweet limes and many kinds of tangerines have proved successful.

A FIELD SPECIALTY

Alfalfa seed and alfalfa brought the greatest cash return of any one crop and there is little reason for those who grow this crop to turn to any other. The production of seed is an important feature, since the San Jacinto-Hemet Valley produces between 50 and 60 per cent of the total alfalfa seed crop of the State.

About thirty years ago, ranchers in Menefee Valley, which is a part of San Jacinto-Hemet territory, and those around Temecula, began to grow the Chilean, or common, alfalfa which had been recently introduced from South America. They liked it and they were slow to change. The enthusiasm for Peruvian alfalfa especially the hairy variety, which swept over the country at one time, left these ranchers unimpressed. They continued to grow their old standby. It is from these early plantings that the seed for the industry which has developed in the valley came and today the seed produced in these fields is fine enough and pure enough in strain to meet the requirements set by the United States Deartment of Agriculture for seed sold under its "Verified-Origin" label. There is no other alfalfa seed in the State, according to J. C. Loomis, head of the company which cleans and markets the product, which is sold under this label.

No fields under three years old are allowed to seed. As a rule, two cuttings of hay are made in the spring and then the plants produce the seed crop, which is harvested in August and September. After that, the fields are irrigated and another cut of hay is obtained. Average seed production in a normal year is said to be from 400 to 450 pounds per acre and Mr. Loomis states that the average price to the grower, for the last five years, has been 16 cents per pound. Semi-arid conditions, with a long ripening season, bring about the full maturity and uniform color required for fine seeds, as well as high germinating qualities, while the parent plants, grown at some altitude and where winters are cold, provide hardiness.

Grain and grain hay do not bulk so importantly now as in the days before land values increased and when dry farming was more common. However, some portions of the valley are well suited to such production and a certain amount of dry-farming will probably be done for a long time to come. Quite a bit of the grain production, these days, is on irrigated land and for the purpose of crop rotation. Kanota oats have proved particularly valuable here.

SOME OTHER CROPS

So much for the old staple crops. As said before, diversification of crops is greatly desired and many things have been tried. The district is not closely populated as yet, but more people are coming in each year and greater numbers, in the future, are confidently expected. Small holdings, more intensively farmed, will probably be the result and the wise ones are preparing for that.

One of the crops which has proved profitable is watermelons. The growers find they can produce an excellent melon and that there is a ready market for them. Last year the crop brought in $57,125, which is double the amount of the previous year. By the same token, they believe they can grow sweet potatoes that are really sweet. This is another crop that is on the increase. Irish potatoes have done well by the planters, too. If the onion market gets stabilized again, that is another good bet for San Jacinto-Hemet farmers, and under normal conditions they can produce a very profitable crop of onion seed.

In discussing the crop ventures in the valley, Warren Sutter, secretary of the Hemet Chamber of Commerce, called attention to one that is somewhat unusual—production of field grown rose bushes. While there is but one firm so engaged, the Howard Rose Company, it represents an important crop to the valley, for there were over a million rosebushes shipped out of the valley last season, mostly to eastern points.

It remains a question, at this time, whether it is going to really pay the farmers to go in for asparagus, tomatoes and similar things. Beans have not proved a happy experiment, nor has lettuce. It isn't a question of getting the things to grow—just about everything that will grow anywhere else in Southern California seems to thrive there. It is a matter of finding a profitable crop, of settling complicated marketing problems. The people are working on these problems, with some encouraging results, and in the meantime, they do not begrudge experimentation.

Conditions are said to be ideal for poultry raising but here, again, they are confronted by the market bug-a-boo. Eggs and dressed birds brought a sum of $734,010 last year. Turkeys are notably healthy and fine in quality and, in a sound market, bring good profits. Hatching eggs from them, it is believed, can be made particularly profitable and a movement is under way to stabilize the handling and marketing of these, to take advanatge of all the benefits which climate and length of season give this valley.

From the early days, dairying held an important place. Changing conditions in the industry throughout the State have altered its status in the valley. It was far more profitable in the days when butter fat was shipped into Los Angeles than it is today when whole milk is wanted. There are good local dairies and there is ample place for certain phases of dairying, now. Some prophesy a return of importance to dairying before long.

What is the answer to all this? The people realize they have good land, water, can diversify. Many leaders believe that the real reason why, in fifty years time, San Jacinto-Hemet Valley has not developed more rapidly than it has lies in the fact that it is the end of the road. People do not pass through on their way to or from some other place. They have felt that a road which would lead from the valley, through the beauty of the mountain country, tapping the State Highway at Indio, in the Coachella Valley would provide a short-cut from the desert to Riverside and divert a lot of travel through their district. There is, in consequence, much satisfaction over the fact that the Supervisors of Riverside county have authorized such a road and begun work upon it. It will be a road of easy grades and is expected to be complete in three years. Once it is opened to traffic, the residents of the valley are confident the population of their area will increase rapidly.

Crops Retarded

Poplar.—Fruit and cotton in the Poplar district have been retarded by cool weather, but no serious harm has been done. Replanting of melons was necessary in some places. Compared with some other sections, Poplar has a very good stand of cotton, the plants being sturdy and stocky. The apricot crop is spotted as the result of cold weather during the spring.

He Tried About Everything, but Liked Dairying Best

(Illustrating Story by Belle C. Ewing)

George W. Thomas, Sr., Riverside County pioneer, and president of the Southern California Fair. He ranched in the days when ranching was "hard sledding" and has grown about everything since, but today specializes in dairying, having one of the finest dairy establishments in Southern California.

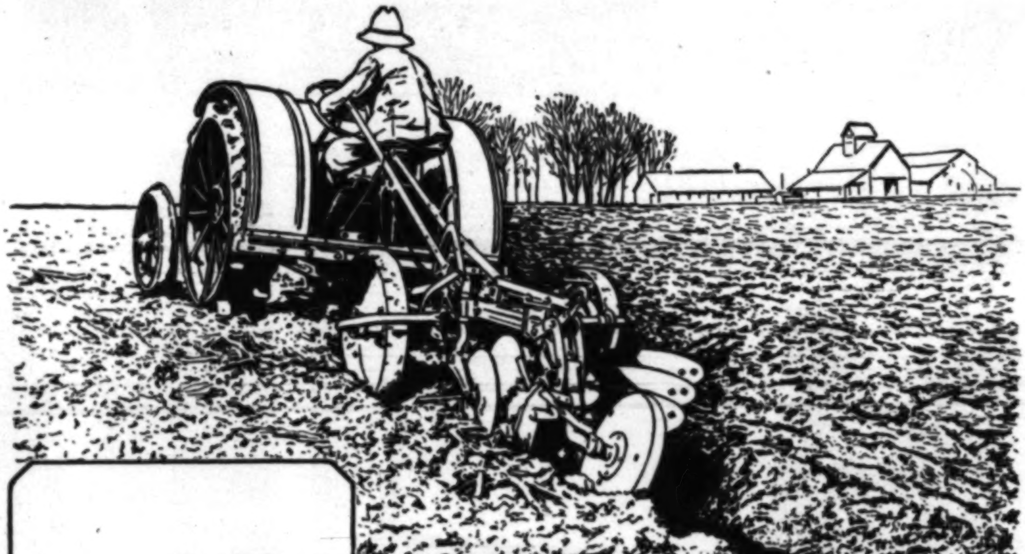
The cows of the Thomas ranch are Jerseys and for the most part are purebreds. The equipment of the dairy plant is strictly modern. "Dairying is a good business when conducted right," says Mr. Thomas, and he should know, for he has been at it for thirty-five years.

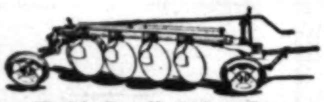
Part of the Thomas Jerseys in a large yard against the hills.

Unloading alfalfa at the barns for chopping.

The stock has the use of this pond on the Thomas place.

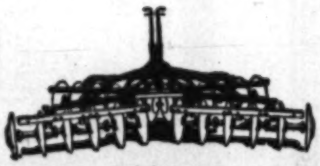
A landmark of the Thomas ranch—one of the oldest buildings in the Riverside district.





The John Deere No. 100 Series Tractor Disk Plows meet every disk plow requirement. They are stronger, longer-lived and lighter in draft, because of roller-bearing disk bearings, double angle-steel frame bars, positive, long-lived power lift and special heat-treated disks.

The John Deere No. 5-D 3-bottom plow is built especially for orchard use. It gets under the limbs, close up to the tree rows. It can be offset to right or left of tractor with special hitch.



John Deere CH Disk Harrows are famous for good work in orchard cover crops and all difficult soil conditions. Levers fold down. Offset hitch for close work.

You Want More Than Power in the Tractor You Buy

You want plenty of power for the jobs you have to do, but you want more than power. The old fashioned steam engine has surplus power, but for general farm work it is a failure.

You want balanced power—power at low costs for fuel, for oil, for maintenance; you want power combined with durability—with long life. You want a tractor that is simple, that is easy to understand; easy to operate; easy to keep in good running order.

It's a combination of all of these features that gives you balanced power—a tractor that you can put to the most profitable use more days during the year and for more years, at lowest costs.

Balanced power is responsible for the sensational success of the John Deere Tractor in California orchards and ranches—it gives its thousands of users everything they want in a tractor. It makes their investment extra profitable.

Get all the facts—ask your John Deere dealer for the names of John Deere tractor owners—make it a point to talk to them—let these men answer every question in your mind. You are sure to want this money-making power for your work.

HERE'S AN INTERESTING FREE BOOKLET

"What the Neighbors Say" was written by nearly 100 John Deere Tractor owners. They tell in their own words a most convincing, unbiased fact-story of the John Deere Tractor. Write today to John Deere Plow Co., San Francisco or Los Angeles, and ask for booklet EM-239

JOHN DEERE

THE TRADE MARK OF QUALITY MADE FAMOUS BY GOOD IMPLEMENTS

Where Even Work's Fun—A 4-H Club Camp in the Woods

Patriotism—one of the lessons learned by 4-H agricultural club boys of the southern San Joaquin Valley at Whitaker Forest Camp. Flag raising, with appropriate bugle music, is a daily ceremony.

"Grub"—you bet! Cafeteria style. The sixty-five boys downed twelve gallons of strawberry and peach jam in a week, and it was just a relish. Imagine the total tonnage!

Work—farm boys see no indignity in honest toil. And a week's supply of wood takes only an hour, anyway—when sixty-five boys "hop to it."

Knowledge—Prof. Woodbridge Metcalf talked on forestry and woodcraft at the Whitaker Forest Camp. Not much like the three "R's," to learn how you find your way out if lost in the forest.

Gymnastics—setting-up exercises to limber up youthful muscles for the day's hiking, playing, and skylarking.

HATCHERYMEN! WHY NOT GET BIGGER PROFITS FROM YOUR BABY CHICK SALES?

You don't need to ask a higher price.

You need only to reduce your selling expense.

Hatcherymen are doing this through Farm and Orchard because it carries their selling message to more prospective chick buyers than any publication covering Southern California and the great Pacific Southwest.

This means more orders at lower cost

Play—games help to make the happy week seem like a day. "Horseshoes" is a favorite competitive sport.

Stunts—many of 'em. The Kern County Union High School boys, for example, and they were just one of a number of groups to stay for a week at Whitaker, loosed homing pigeons on arrival at camp. The pigeons bore greetings and salutations 125 miles to Bakersfield. John Twadell, the boy in the picture, was "master of the birds."

Nature—big trees, little men. Club boys all over the state are enjoying these summer outings in the mountains, and the Farm Bureau and Extension Service officials believe their dream of "fun for farm folk," come true, is a mighty good thing.

These City Men Saw a Future for Desert Citrus

(Illustrating Article by Iva M. McFadden)

The grapefruit is the only kind of citrus that Imperial Valley has gone in for to any great extent, but tangerines have done wonderfully well there. Here's a seven-year-old Dancy tangerine on the place of Clarence Conant of El Centro. Mr. Conant has many kinds of citrus in experimental plantings, and this year set out ten acres of Valencia oranges.

This extensive planting of year-old Dancy tangerines affords sufficient evidence that Mr. Conant takes the tangerine seriously as an Imperial Valley citrus prospect.

An eleven-year-old grapefruit tree on the Conant place. C. C. Jenkins, postmaster at El Centro, happened to be present when the picture was taken and served in the capacity of yardstick.

Dr. W. W. Apple (right) and F. E. Graham have adjoining grapefruit groves near El Centro. Mr. Graham takes care of Dr. Apple's grove along with his own. The physician, an Imperial Valley pioneer, caught the grapefruit fever fifteen years ago and surprised a lot of his friends by making a go of the citrus crop in the desert. He's always grown peas between his tree rows.

California's Finest AVOCADO LAND

—and La Habra Heights is more than that—it's unexcelled for Citrus, too. And as a suburban or country place we know of no other district in a radius of fifty miles of Los Angeles that can compare with this.

One big advantage is its proximity to Los Angeles—less than one hour's drive over the best of paved highways; another is its wonderful climatic conditions—cool in summer, warm in winter; another is its dependable supply of high-quality water; and the views obtainable from La Habra Heights' numerous scenic homesites are the kind of which one never tires.

This remarkable property has been developing for several years to the most substantial homes and permanent avocado and citrus orchards—more than 2,000 of its 3,700 acres now sold and largely improved. If you are unable to investigate La Habra Heights at this time, send for the above booklet; if possible, however, drive through the subdivision and see at first hand California's most inviting suburban home and commercial orchard land property.

New unit, now selling, offers many advantages not possessed by former offerings. Drive east on Whittier Boulevard to big arrow at Hacienda Boulevard and see La Habra Heights. Your first impression will be favorable—and lasting!

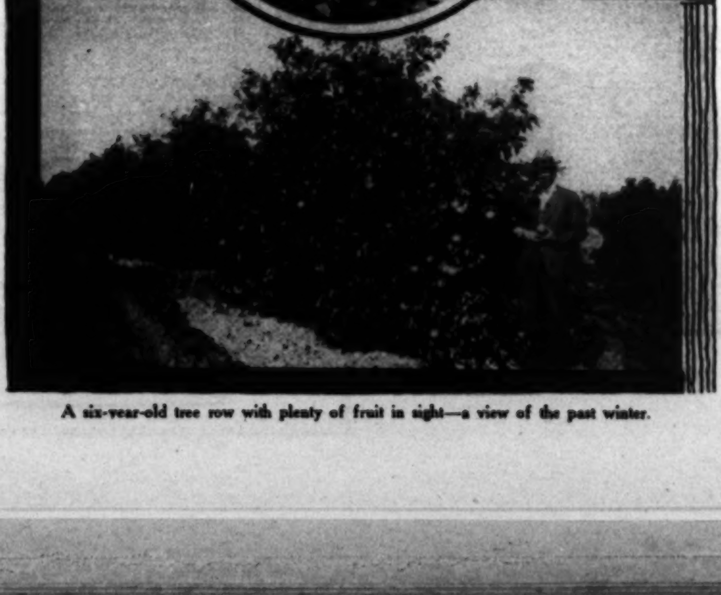
L. M. Stoiber, standing in Mr. Conant's grove, "raised" these beautiful old grapefruit trees from the time they went into the ground.

Dr. Apple doesn't believe in many irrigations so much as he believes in thorough irrigation. To facilitate deep penetration from a good watering, he sub-soils his furrows once a year.

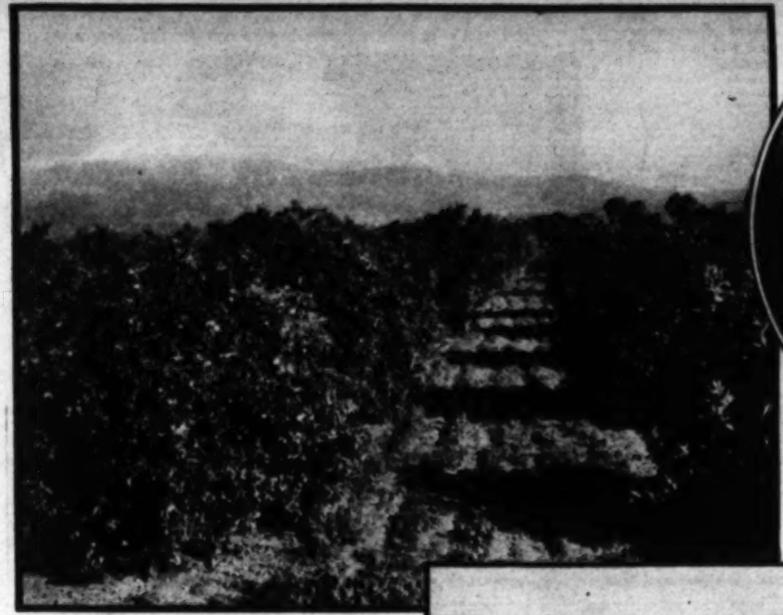
If you don't believe Dr. Apple's furrows are deep, take a look at this one.



A six-year-old tree row with plenty of fruit in sight—a view of the past winter.

No More "The End of the Road"—This Mountain Valley

(Illustrating Article by Helen W. King)



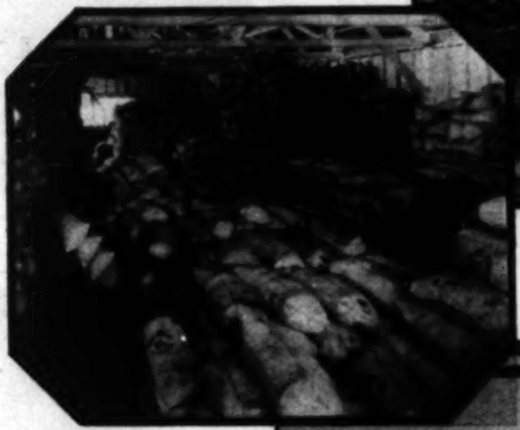
Construction work which will take the San Jacinto-Hemet Valley off the end of the road, and make it available to the passerby, is expected to make that charming mountain-girt land better known and correspondingly more popular. Here are oranges with a background of snow, a scene which puts a California "trade-mark" on the locality.

Demonstrating the size which Kanota oats have attained in the valley. The man is Warren Sutter, secretary of the Hemet Chamber of Commerce.

Onions prove a profitable crop for San Jacinto-Hemet Valley growers when the market gives them a fair break.

Mountains and a promising cornfield as a background—no wonder these San Jacinto cows seem contented.

Except where no frost protection was given the trees, apricots made a good crop this year in the San Jacinto-Hemet Valley.



Part of the 1,300,000 pounds of alfalfa seed produced last year in San Jacinto-Hemet Valley.

Grain and hay are also produced—in fact, thirty-nine different crops have been listed in the valley.

Plenty of water, in spots like this, makes the crops flourish and the farmers smile.

Poultry and berry vines, with shade trees, typical of the "little lander."

Largest Van & Storage Company in World Uses Union Gasoline

Bekins has "Success Tested" this Motor Fuel for MILEAGE

THE Bekins Van & Storage Co., founded in 1895, is now the largest concern of its kind in the world. Over 16,600,000 cubic feet of storage space is available in its nineteen Western warehouses, alone.

To service these facilities 190 mighty trucks are kept in daily operation. Over concrete highways, up steep grades, through mud, gravel, sand, these huge Vans demand a gasoline of MILEAGE, of Power, of unfailing dependability.

Significant to you, therefore, that BEKINS uses UNION. That Bekins has "success tested" Union Gasoline for you through countless millions of miles under hardest service conditions.

How to Profit

Whether you choose Union non-detonating gasoline—or Union-Ethyl, the Pioneer Antiknock motor fuel built up for high compression—you'll find the same dependability—the same sterling performance—the same mileage possibilities that BEKINS and other big Western haulers find in Union Gasoline.

Why wait? Fill up today and every day at the Blue and White Union pumps.

Marie Earle
A Treatment that is brief - but so effective

It is for women of fashion, exacting "elegantes", that the Marie Earle Preparations are made, always from the original formulae of a London skin specialist, and always with extravagant care.

With Preparations so superbly good, the Marie Earle Basic Treatment can be very simple. You have only to cleanse your face, first, with Essential Cream (the most luxurious cream in the world). Then apply the same Cream again, with a little Cucumber Emulsion (right on top of the Cream) to increase absorption, and smooth and pat these two into the tissues. Wipe away what is not absorbed, and finish with a dash of Soothing Freshener Lotion. After that, make-up and a fluff of the new Marie Earle Powder are almost like painting the lily.

All the Marie Earle Preparations are sold at our toilet goods counter.

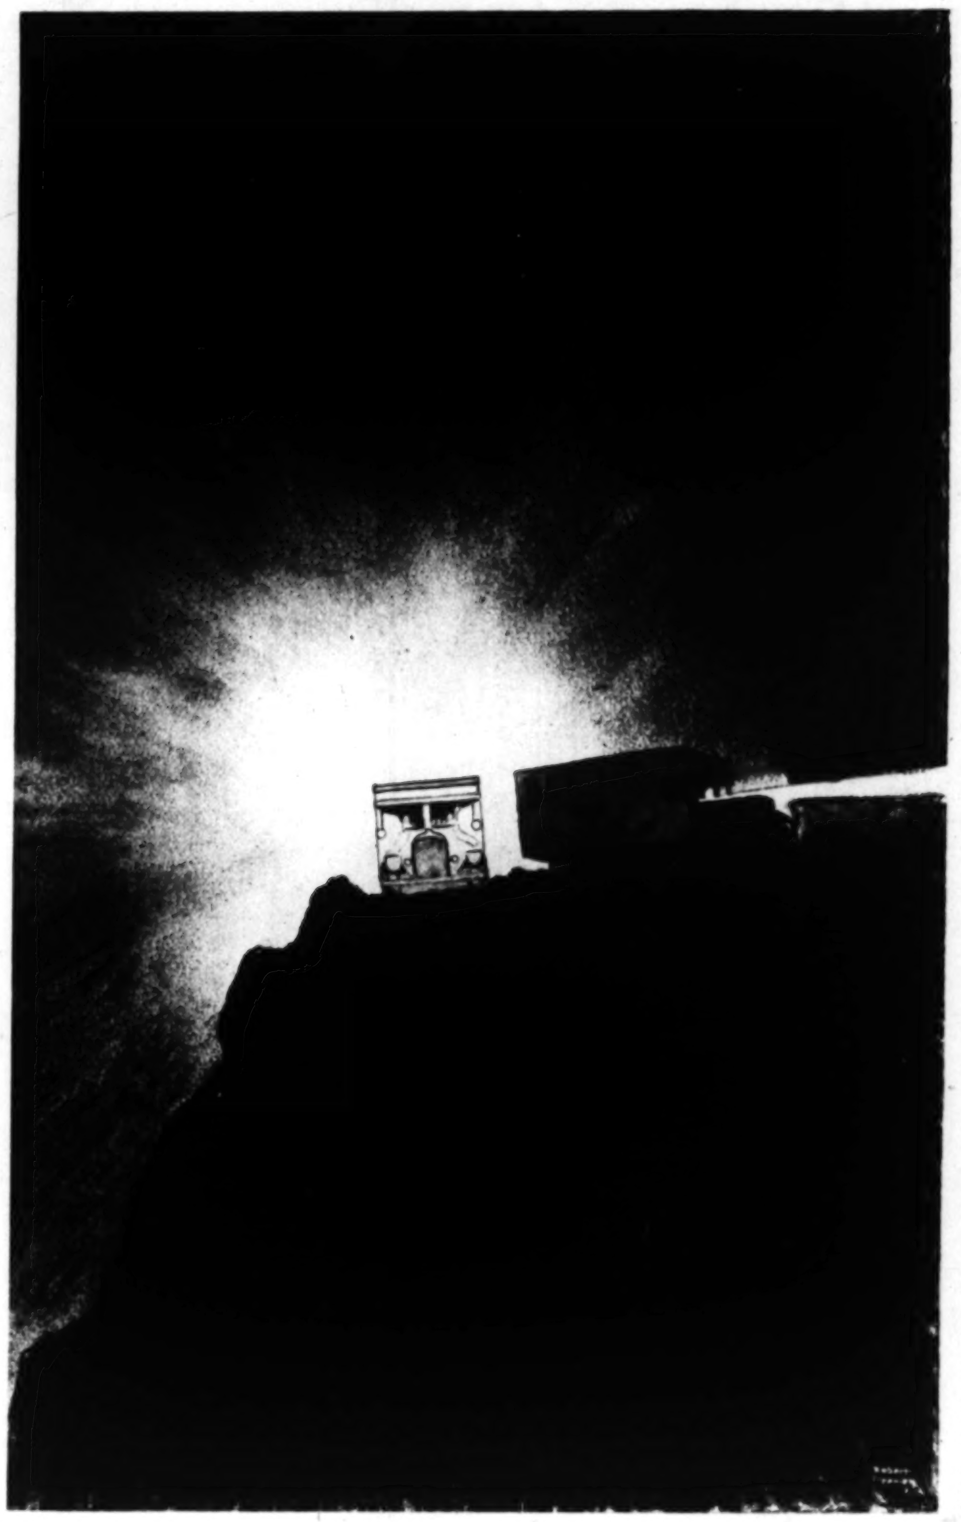
Largest Van & Storage Company in World Uses Union Gasoline

Bekins has "Success Tested" this Motor Fuel for MILEAGE



THE Bekins Van & Storage Co., founded in 1895, is now the largest concern of its kind in the world. Over 16,600,000 cubic feet of storage space is available in its nineteen Western warehouses, alone.

To service these facilities 190 mighty trucks are kept in daily operation. Over concrete highways, up steep grades, through mud, gravel, sand, these huge Vans demand a gasoline of MILEAGE, of Power, of unfailing dependability.

Significant to you, therefore, that BEKINS uses UNION. That Bekins has "success tested" Union Gasoline for you through countless millions of miles under hardest service conditions.

How to Profit

Whether you choose Union non-detonating gasoline — or Union-Ethyl, the Pioneer Anti-knock motor fuel built up for high compression — you'll find the same dependability — the same sterling performance — the same mileage possibilities that BEKINS and other big Western haulers find in Union Gasoline.

Why wait? Fill up today and every day at the Blue and White Union pumps.

Marie Earle

A Treatment that is brief - but so effective

It is for women of fashion, exacting "elegantes", that the Marie Earle Preparations are made, always from the original formulae of a London skin specialist, and always with extravagant care.

With Preparations so superbly good, the Marie Earle Basic Treatment can be very simple. You have only to cleanse your face, first, with Essential Cream (the most luxurious cream in the world). Then apply the same Cream again, with a little Cucumber Emulsion (right on top of the Cream) to increase absorption, and smooth and pat these two into the tissues. Wipe away what is not absorbed, and finish with a dash of Soothing Freshener Lotion. After that, make-up and a fluff of the new Marie Earle Powder are almost like painting the lily.

All the Marie Earle Preparations are sold at our toilet goods counter.

REMARKABLE, it is predicted, will be the electrical display and pageant, the night of July 11 in the Coliseum, in honor of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

The motion picture industry is directing all its energies that evening toward making the event a memorable one, in the Elks' Sixty-fifth Annual Convention, which is being held here the week of July 7th. In the pageant, which is described as an elaborated, improved and embellished version of the notable one presented for the Shriners a month ago, will be the prize-winning floats of that previous parade, augmented by many more—as well as an even finer electrical show. Monte Blue, as Grand Marshal, will head the parade.

Pictured here are a few of the more prominent motion picture people who are included on the rosters of the national organization. In addition, there are such names as Harold Lloyd, George Bancroft, Robert Woolsey, Jack L. Warner, Edwin Carewe, Al Jolson, Sid Grauman, Joseph Schenck, Irving Thalberg, Nick de Ruiz, Sol Lesser and others.

Joan Crawford dons caballero attire to make the visiting brothers feel at home. Their drill outfits will be somewhat similar, although far less elaborate, of course.—Photo by Louise.

HILARITY RUNS HIGH IN JOE COLLEGE

One of the big moments in the college play, when everything does not go according to schedule. Eddie Quillan and Stanley Smith.

The scenes between Sally O'Neil and Quillan are captivating.

Spec O'Donnell provides a few laughs at the football game.

By WHITNEY WILLIAMS

THE hero saves the game in the last two seconds of play—but does not win the contest according to what has been in the past a hard and set rule for ending football games. It is a surprise finish, and no doubt you'll enjoy the production all the more for its departure from type.

"Joe College" is as pleasant a little picture as has come out of Pathe in some time. It is rollicking comedy of the kind riotously acclaimed by audiences, and should meet with no little popularity. As may be surmised by the title, it is a college story, and Leo McCarey, the director, has imbued it with real campus spirit.

Eddie Quillan is featured with Sally O'Neil, and supporting them are Stanley Smith, Jeanette Loff, Russell Gleason, Sarah Padden, Brooks Benedict and Spec O'Donnell. Joseph Franklin Poland adapted the screen play from Corey Ford's story, and William Conselman is listed as the producer for Pathe.

By far the most amusing sequence is the one devoted to the play presented by the men's dramatic club. Quillan, dressed to represent some lady of tradition, or history—it really doesn't matter, anyway—is the leading lady, and is responsible for most of the laughs. The show is stopped ere it has progressed very far by the leading man and woman tearing into battle, the leading man's old-fashioned trunks falling to the floor, and a few other unhappy, but hysterical, occurrences. This sequence, which is a long one, is worth by itself the price of admission, so to speak.

The production contains all the tragic and humorous situations that can happen only in the life of the American college boy. There is the little waitress, deeply appealing, who pays his tuition, so that he may have the opportunity that goes hand in hand with college life—of course, the boy doesn't know this. And there is the fraternity routine and, finally, the football game that climaxes the film.

Only in the fraternity scenes does the picture fail to ring true, and then only in one particular. This, however, may be checked up to dramatic license. It is when Eddie is expelled from his fraternity without a hearing.

The character of Stanley Smith, who plays the president of the fraternity, president of the senior class, football captain, et cetera, ad infinitum, is not quite logical, to my mind. Such a chap would at least have a little sporting blood in his veins—as he is pictured on the screen, he doesn't know the meaning of sportsmanship, until the last scene. His treatment of a fraternity brother, too, when that brother is working in a candy store, is not convincing, either.

"Joe College" is well cast, Quillan and Miss O'Neil doing particularly good work. The entire cast, in fact, is entirely satisfactory, and Director Leo McCarey has treated the production with a sure and deft hand. The picture should enjoy a wide popularity.

NOT BUNK, EITHER!

Just a few stars who really do the work so many publicity pictures would have us believe they do.

Ken Maynard's early days on the Texas range stand him in good stead with his horse, Tarzan. Ken is Tarzan's exclusive "booter."

Any odd jobs? Page Richard Arlen, then! When not playing before the camera, Dick essays the role of handy man—even to the point of mixing concrete to repair a defective chimney.—Photo by Dyar.

Another chap who doesn't need a double when there's real work to be done. Pat O'Malley was recently caught repairing the retaining wall behind his home.

H. B. Warner has his troubles, too! After saving the gardener all the trouble of planting a tree, Warner's wife and small daughter inform him that he has planted it in the wrong spot.

The ADVENTURES of STELLA

BY GRACE KINGSLEY

"OH, GLENN flew over from Catalina in seventeen minutes, so as to be sure and be on time at his party!" exclaimed Stella.

"Greater devotion to his friends hath no man," remarked Mike Boylan.

"Not only devotion, but energy, courage and enterprise," remarked Laura LaPlante, "not to mention a lot of efficient cooperation."

Glenn admitted that he had put Merna Kennedy, his leading lady, out of the car at Western Avenue, and directed her to a taxi.

At any rate, there was Glenn, handsome and correct in evening clothes even to the high hat.

WE WERE gathered at the Victor Hugo as guests of Glenn and his pretty little wife, Lillian Tryon, at dinner, before the opening of Glenn's picture, "Broadway," at the Biltmore—and though Glenn had actually been making scenes for a picture over at the Island at 4:30, here he was, spick and span and fascinating, delightful and bubbling as usual, at 7:30.

We occupied a private room, and, as usual at the Victor Hugo, the dinner was perfect.

In the party besides those mentioned already were Mrs. Boylan, Nan Cochrane, the writer, Garrett Graham, William Wickersham and Pauline Lewis.

Wherever Glenn and Lillian are, everybody is "Aunt" and "Uncle," including themselves, but it was amusing when they addressed Laura LaPlante as "Aunt Laura."

"Goodness, don't you feel thrilled, walking into the theatre with the star of the picture?" demanded Stella, as she prepared to maneuvre so as to be next to Glenn when we went in, past the crowds. But I think her scheming was unnecessary, since Glenn gallantly offered her his arm, and apparently had planned it that way all the time.

EVERYBODY was there at the opening, of course. In front of us sat Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and his bride, Joan Crawford, who is beautifully tanned—that is, if you think tan is beautiful.

Charlie Chaplin sat a few rows ahead. He was with Georgia Hale.

Charles Brabin and his wife were across the way, and others we caught glimpses of were: Belle Baker, the Carl Laemmles, Junior and Senior, Joseph Schildkraut and Elise Bartlett, Irving Thalberg and Norma Shearer, Mervyn LeRoy and Edna Murphy, Arthur Caesar, Marion Nixon, and a score of other notables.

When the picture was over, with everybody applauding wildly, Glenn had to go up and take two bows, and he might easily have taken another bend if he had cared to.

"I wish all the masters of ceremonies were like Joseph Schildkraut," remarked Stella, "quick, witty and to the point."

We met Belle Baker in the lobby, and she is all delighted about taking a house here, and settling down far from the trying three-or-four-a-day. She says she is going to give her theatre trunks to the poor.

THE flurry of congratulations that descénded on Glenn after the show being over, we packed ourselves into Glenn's and Mike's cars, and Lillian announced we were going vanvechten. So we took a trip down to Central Avenue, to the Apex Cafe, where a group of colored entertainers made night merry; especially a miniature Bill Robinson, whose stepping simply stopped the show, and a cute colored girl with a lovely figure who sang every sort of ditty from deepest cerulean to purest white.

A stocky boy with the whitest teeth and the rollingest eyes in the world did a very funny burlesque of "Sonny Boy," which was more or less music to the ears of us who have been worn out with the sobs of the original.

Then we caught sight of Ted Lewis, who had come in with a party, and the orchestra leader did a smart and amusing imitation of him and his orchestra playing "The Twelfth Street Rag."

"I just can't make my feet behave when I hear that music," remarked Glenn, when the show was over and the orchestra started a waltz—and then asked Stella to dance with him, which, of course, delighted her, especially as the music was wonderful.

We didn't heed the passing hours at all, until Uncle Mike suggested he had to work tomorrow, and then Uncle Glenn and Aunt Lillian took us home just as the sun was peeping over the mountains, and we voted the evening's progressive party the nicest ever.

"DID you ever see anything so beautiful as the grounds about Harold Lloyd's house?" demanded Stella, as we made our way through the huge estate, which is mostly wooded and shrubberied hillsides, broken by tiny lakes, fountains, rills and a wonderful green miniature golf course, surrounding Harold's new home in Benedict Canyon. "I'd almost rather go exploring through these grounds than go to Mildred's party," she went on. And that meant a lot, coming from Stella.

We drove up into the big court, and parking the car, wandered down many steps—so wide and shallow that you hardly knew you were descending—to the beautiful Greek pavilion, open on one side, facing the swimming pool, where Mildred Lloyd, Harold's sweet wife, was giving a shower for May McAvoy.

"May has allowed her hair to go back to its natural black, so she's a real Irish beauty once more," remarked Stella, "and I like her much better that way."

MAY, who is the calmest of people usually, was all eager excitement over the party and shower—as delighted over it as any hostess could wish. Nobody could possibly look at May and know her without wishing her the deepest joy in her coming marriage to that nice Maurice Cleary.

We found Virginia Valli, looking cool, sweet and beautifully feminine as ever, and she told us how delighted she is that she is to play opposite Leo Carrillo in "Mr. Antonio."

Many of the girls went in swimming in the pool, and we watched Laura LaPlante, Gertrude Olmsted and Edna Murphy splashing about. Suddenly there was an awful splash; Barbara Kent had hit the water flat. It seemed a ment before she came face, but when she did right, and she was the in a bathing suit that I seen.

Helen Ferguson was Claire Windsor, Lois W Joseph Jackson, Sylvia Weingarten, Mary McA Roland, Ruth Clifford, Laemmle Bergerman, ard, Gloria Hope, Mrs. Avoy, May's mother, Lloyd's sweet mamma, Lloyd's mother, Jean Grace Gordon and a lot guests.

WHEN the girls got we had tea in the with its comfortable chairs, and then went other side of the pool, to be photographed in They were talking but we didn't know that

Edna Murphy and Helen guson were noting that Windsor evidently were derwear, judging from the they got at her shoulder and they were kidding her it, when they caught sight microphone and realized remarks were all being

Mary McAlister still lovely white and pink told us that she was the in Hollywood who isn't tanned. Mrs. McAvoy lated her, saying she thought Mary was very sensible.

"When you are forty," Mary, "you will be very deed if your skin is fine instead of being like leather will be if you persist in burned up."

"And Mrs. McAvoy's lovely proves it," whispered Stella.

MAY sat down to open gifts, and she was rounded by boxes that we hardly see her diminutive as she sank into a big of us sat on the floor to open the boxes, but there many of them that we finally by one, walked out on her ing all out of exclamation was a glass and perfume and I never have seen such tiful glass patterns. I forgot to say that a orchestra played all the while this was especially enjoyed little Gloria Lloyd. Gloria, way, is the picture of her cept for her nose, which is a turned-up affair, like her

Gertrude Olmsted was about her new beach home Helen Ferguson and Bergerman kidded her, saying they insisted on coming to at her house.

"We'll bring our own and near-beer, and we'll they assured Gertrude.

"Let's be firm," said

Finally the stars' mothers together and drank a little to the new bride-to-be.

"And there were tears mother's eyes, as she her daughter and drank," reported.
